AIRPLANE PROCUREMENT

Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I am a bit fearful, if newspaper reports be correct, that an effort will be made to influence the House into adopting a course with respect to supplying the Army with airplanes that in actual practice would not be economical, that would retard the procurement of airplanes, and that might result—and it seems to me would certainly result—in not acquiring the latest and most efficient types of these aerial-defense weapons.

I do not propose here to defend the acts of any individuals having to do with the negotiation of contracts for airplanes and aeronautical accessories or with the methods employed in such negotiations. I am willing to leave that to the appropriate officials of the War Department, whose business it is. If there have been improper practices, such corrective and punitive measures as the facts may warrant should be speedily taken. Negotiation, however, in my judgment, can be so regulated as to minimize to the greatest extent humanly possible the opportunity for proceeding contrary to the public interests. There is no need to abandon the principle. I have studied this question for a number of years. I have met with it every year in the consideration of the War Department appropriation bill. My reaction is that if military and naval aviation is to advance and keep apace with development abroad, and to have incorporated in its design the latest knowledge, the only method is to buy the best plane of each particular type that has been brought forward at the time purchase is to be made. Such a plane essentially would be in the proprietary category, and therefore would need to be acquired through negotiation.

The Public Works Administration allotted $7,500,000 to the Army and $7,500,000 to the Navy for airplane procurement. The primary purpose of these allotments was to promote industrial recovery. The Navy almost immediately negotiated contracts and its allotment is under expenditure. The Army was about to do the same thing, but the Assistant Secretary of War, despite the emergency, intervened and instituted a new procurement procedure, and the consequence is that the primary purpose of the allotment has been wholly defeated. Whether the Assistant Secretary of War changed specifications or specifications were changed, as they were, by some other person or persons at his direction is about as important as the difference between tweedle-dum and tweedle-dee. The fact remains that because of Mr. Woodring's untimely interference the military service stands before the public condemned for trying to do exactly what our other defense arm has done and is doing, and, without a word of criticism, and I wish to go on record as condemning his action in no uncertain terms.

There is nobody who believes in competition any more than I do, and I am sure the Comptroller General will bear me out in the assertion that he gets no better cooperation from any Member of either House of Congress than me; but I maintain and believe I can demonstrate that competition, in the ordinary sense, as applied to airplane procurement is unworkable, impracticable, and not in the public interest and will not be until the art becomes stabilized.

When the Army or Navy is in the market for planes, whatever the type, they wish and will buy under any circumstances only the most advanced types. No one can logically quarrel with that policy. If A actually has demonstrated that he is the sole producer of the most advanced type, why go beyond A? B and C may be producers. Assuming their plants are adequate, they have not the forms or requisite special equipment to proceed with the production of A's superior product. The full meaning and importance of this consideration immediately manifests itself during an inspection of an airplane plant in production. If B and C were invited to bid, necessarily they would have to include the cost of preparing themselves to go into production of A's plane. If time be a factor, B and C could not get into production until the patterns, forms, and special appliances could be gotten ready, which would entail a delay of not less than 6 or 8 months. The Government's interests are best protected by having personnel who, by training and experience, are qualified to conduct such negotiations.

Consider now if A, B, and C should be invited to bid. A knows he possesses the plane desired. Being cognizant of the added expense B and C must incur, it is obvious that competition in such circumstances, if fair bids be made, would not be in the public interest. Competition in such circumstances would in effect be a mere gesture.

On the other hand, if A is called in and a contract negotiated—and bear in mind that A wants and needs the business—he is not going to hold out for an excessive price, and that is determinable from previous procurement experience and the experience of the personnel negotiating the contract.

Another consideration: Airplanes have not yet been developed to the point to which rigid, standard specifications may be applied. Changes are constantly being brought forward looking to the production of a modern airplane. The introduction of such changes would not be practicable under a competitive contract for new models. Therefore, under such a contract, the design of the plane would be obsolete when the contract was executed. Let me illustrate: A and B, pursuant to invitation, submit sealed bids. From the day the invitation is issued new developments occur. Appraisement of the bids by technical experts is a matter of months. When award is made, it is for a plane lacking all the developments that have accrued from the time bids were invited.

I maintain—and always have—that negotiation should be confined to planes and engines and should exclude aeronautical accessories not strictly of a proprietary character.

I should not be opposed to having a representative of the General Accounting Office, designated by the Comptroller General, to sit in, to the extent practicable, on the negotiation of all contracts, and I should be in favor of having the General Accounting Office undertake the work of conducting audits of contractors' accounts.

I am not interested in whether this plant or that plant gets any business. My concern chiefly is in seeing that military and naval aviation is made as effective and efficient as possible. Efficiency and economy would be promoted by fewer makes of different types. First cost and the cost of spares would be appreciably lessened. Omitting purely amphibians, I can conceive of identical planes in both services, one force always as an auxiliary to the other. This would be true also as to flying personnel, technical personnel, and maintenance personnel, both civil and enlisted.

Competition, in practice, does not of itself assure the most advantageous prices. The human factor is still present. This town is always filled with persons engaged in representing houses selling to the Government who either have or claim to have influence in securing contracts. Why are they maintained here? Why do not those with whom they have to deal shut their doors to them? It is a pernicious practice and should be stopped. I do not believe it is generally realized, but a negotiated contract goes thrcugh more hands than a contract awarded as the result of competitive bidding. The chances for collusion in a negotiated contract are practically nil.

Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of all proper safeguards, but I am opposed to any course that may jeopardize supplying Army and Navy aviation with the most advanced types of military and naval airplanes.

PROCESSING TAX ON JUTE BAGS

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, we were discussing a few days ago the question of the processing tax on jute bags. I do not desire to discuss the subject again at this time, but I ask to have inserted in the RECORD a set of resolutions adopted by the New Sweden Grange, of Idaho Falls, Idaho, and also a telegram from Lamar, Colo., relating to the subject.

There being no objection, the resolutions and telegram were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

IDAHO FALLS, IDAHO, March 16, 1934.

At a meeting of New Sweden Grange, Friday, March 16, the following resolutions were adopted:

"Whereas without any notice or warning whatever these taxes were imposed upon jute products to the serious detriment of both the grower and shipper of Idaho potatoes; and

"Whereas the farmers of Idaho are today paying a heavy tariff upon all jute shipped into the United States, also a processing tax upon all cotton goods used by them; and

"Whereas the farmers of Idaho have never used cotton bags, except in a small way, in the marketing of their products, and cannot use cotton bags in any quantity except only for small consumer packages and on which jute bags cannot be used; and

"Whereas jute bags are in no way competitive to cotton as the ordinary containers for potatoes; and

"Whereas the farmers of Idaho are today paying the heaviest freight rates upon their commodities moving to market of any like farming community in the United States; and

"Whereas the farm commodities of the State of Idaho during the past few years have sold at prices averaging less than the cost of production, particularly all crops that are affected by the tax on jute products; and

"Whereas there is no direct nor indirect benefit received by the farmers of Idaho from the money that they have paid out as a result of this processing tax; and

"Whereas the potato industry has never received any crop advance or advances for abandoned acreages, nor do they anticipate any such assistance; and

"Whereas the tax upon jute products is only another unjust, unfair, and unreasonable burden added to those now being borne by the farmers of the State of Idaho, and further deprives them of any opportunity that they might have to recover from the depressed condition of their industry: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That we, as growers, in a meeting assembled at Idaho Falls, Idaho, this 20th day of March 1934, protest the processing tax now imposed upon jute bags used in marketing of our commodities, and respectfully urge the United States Government through the United States Department of Agriculture to give the producers of potatoes relief from these unfair, unjust, and unreasonable taxes by removing the processing tax upon all jute bags used in the marketing of these commodities."

It was voted that we send copies to Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace and Senator William E. Borah.

JOHN WACKERLI,
Grand Master.
LYLE E. ALLEN,
Secretary.

LAMAR, COLO., April 5, 1934.

Senator WILLIAM E. BORAH,
Washington, D.C.:

Heartily support your petition to Secretary Wallace asking removal of tax on burlap bags. This tax should also be removed on bags used for packing alfalfa meal, which amounts to approximately 50 cents per ton, the greater part of which the alfalfa grower must necessarily stand. This results in a tax on alfalfa of approximately $150,000 annually paid direct and indirect by alfalfa millers in Idaho, California, Colorado, Nevada, New Mexico, Kansas, Nebraska, and Oklahoma. This tax also most surely affects the basic price to the farmer on all alfalfa, whether marketed at alfalfa mills or elsewhere.

F. M. WILSON,
Denver Alfalfa Milling & Produce Co.,
Operating in California, Colorado, Kansas, Nebraska, and Michigan.

TAX ON IMPORTED OILS AND FATS

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I present and ask to have printed in the RECORD and lie on the table a telegram from A. M. Loomis, secretary of the National Dairy Union, memorializing Congress, in behalf of representatives of the dairy industry, for the imposition of a tax on imported oils and fats.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., April 5, 1934.

CHESTER GRAY,
Washington, D.C.:

Large meeting creamery owners and operators, sponsored by American Association Creamery Butter Manufacturers, unanimously adopted following:

"All branches of the dairy industry having gone on record as favoring a tax on imported oils and fats, this meeting, consisting of representatives of the large National and State organizations from 32 States, now desires to memorialize Congress as follows:

"First. To approve principle of taxing, first, domestic processing coconut oil, sesame oil, palm oil, palm-kernel oil, sunflower oil, imported whale oil, imported fish oil, as now found section 602 pending internal revenue bill, as amended, reported Senate Finance Committee.

"Second. To oppose and defeat any change which would exempt from taxation any kind or grade of oil now enumerated therein, regardless of its source.

"Third. To approve and adopt an amendment which would increase tax rate therein proposed from 3 cents pound to 5 cents pound."

A. M. LOOMIS,
Secretary National Dairy Union.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. ASHURST, Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, and Mr. FRAZIER conferees on the part of the Senate.

GOVERNMENTAL CONTROL OF BUSINESS

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an editorial appearing in the St. Louis Globe Democrat of March 15, 1934, entitled "Governmental Control of Business", in which the Fletcher-Rayburn stock-exchange control bill is very ably discussed.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the St. Louis Globe Democrat, Mar. 15, 1934]

GOVERNMENTAL CONTROL OF BUSINESS

In giving his approval to the revised Fletcher-Rayburn stock exchange bill President Roosevelt said the two principal objectives were margins so high that speculation would be drastically curtailed, and giving the Government such powers of supervision over exchanges that it will be able to correct abuses which may arise in the future. With the effort to prevent excessive speculation such as we had in 1928–29 there can be no serious quarrel, but this bill, even as modified, goes to extremes in regulation that will make it detrimental to the legitimate operations of the securities markets and consequently an impediment to economic recovery.

However, the chief objection to this bill is the bureaucratic control it would give over the organized business of the country. The President in his letter to Senator FLETCHER did not mention this feature of the bill, and we doubt that he has given serious consideration to it. He said in this letter, "the bill as shown to me by you this afternoon seems to meet the minimum requirements." The plain inference is that Senator FLETCHER took the bill to the White House and that he and the President discussed it for a brief time, with but little, if any, attention given to the business-control provisions, for the whole of the President's remarks refer to supervision over exchanges.

Yet this bill provides not merely for supervision over exchanges but for governmental supervision over virtually every incorporated business in the country, directly and specifically over every concern whose stock is listed on any exchange, and indirectly over every other concern whose stock is not listed, a control that may also become direct when the provisions of the law are carried out. Under this bill every corporation whose securities are listed must file an agreement with the Federal Trade Commission to comply with all the terms of the act "and any amendments thereto, and with the rules and regulations made or to be made thereunder" by the Commission, thus binding it not only to whatever is but to whatever may be in the future required by the law or the Commission. And it must supply at once to the exchange and the Commission not only information as to its financial structure but as to the remuneration and interests of directors, officers, and others, management and service contracts, balance sheets, and profit and loss statements for preceding years, etc. Unless this is done no securities can be listed. Then the Commission is given power to require annual, quarterly, or monthly reports, in such form as it may prescribe and in such detail as to give the Commission direction of the entire accounting system and financial transactions of every corporation, and it is a fair inference that the Commission may even control the choice of officers or directors. Heavy civil and criminal penalties are prescribed for violations of the act or any rule or regulation under it.

Moreover, exemption from the supervision cannot be insured by withdrawing a stock from exchange listing, or by maintaining one's stock unlisted. For stocks can be withdrawn from present lists only upon terms the Commission may impose. Members of exchanges are prohibited from giving credit on any securities not listed, which would destroy the value of unlisted securities as collateral in exchange operations. And no market can be created for any securities except under rules and regulations prescribed by the Commission, which, it is a fair inference from the language of the act, would impose much the same conditions upon corporations having no listed stocks as upon others, if any market at all is to be had for their securities.

It is proposed to establish this governmental control over practically all the incorporated business of the country, not specifically as a means of regulating business, which would be plainly recognized as a longer step in the direction of socialism than any yet taken, but merely as an incident of stock-exchange regulation. And because it is being proposed in this guise, or disguise, very little attention is being paid to this vastly more important and far-reaching encroachment upon private rights and private freedom of conduct. Business, in the general sense, has very little to do with stock exchanges. The exchanges afford a convenient and necessary market for their securities, but otherwise hardly enter at all into their operations. The stocks of the vast majority of corporations do not figure to any extent in speculative transactions of objectionable character. The evils of excessive speculation can be remedied by appropriate and reasonable regulation of the stock exchanges themselves. There is not the slightest justification for extending Federal control and regulation to practically the entire field of incorporated business.

This feature should be entirely eliminated from the stock-exchange bill. We do not believe the country wants legitimate business dominated by a Government bureau such as this measure prescribes. Business is the foundation, and the only foundation, of the material welfare of the country. If we are really planning to abandon our economic system and set up a new system which calls for complete governmental control of economic operations, let it be frankly stated and the people be given an opportunity to decide upon its merits. Let us not permit socialism to be forced upon us unawares by insidious methods of indirect action.

Senator ARTHUR R. ROBINSON,
United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: The Pottawatomie Chapter regrets the evident attempt on the part of certain officials in Washington to make light of the charges made by Dr. W. A. Wirt of the communistic tendencies of the present executive department of the Government of the United States. We therefore ask you to help in securing a fair, impartial, and public hearing at the congressional inquiry into these charges.

The members of this chapter wish to assure you that Dr. W. A. Wirt, superintendent of schools of Gary, is a capable thinker who would not make ridiculous and unsubstantiated charges.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, in that connection I ask to have read at the desk the editorial which I send forward.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the editorial will be read.

MAKING LIGHT OF THE TIMES

By Ernest L. Meyer

To Dr. WILLIAM A. WIRT,
President Wirt Witchsniffery, Inc., Gary, Ind.

MY DEAR DR. WIRT: Every loyal citizen is with you in your tremendous one-man drive to prevent the Roosevelt "brain trust" from delivering the United States, plainly wrapped in cellophane, to Soviet Russia.

Your discoveries of "brain trust" rascality are not only momentous, but miraculous. You have, magician that you are, pulled a Russian wolfhound out of the President's top hat.

But you have not gone far enough. The communistic scheming of the "brain trust" fades to insignificance before the gigantic plot being hatched by the super "brain trust".

I have full proof of this amazing conspiracy, Dr. Wirt, and when the proper time comes I will submit it to your witchsniffery factory for chemical analysis by your experts on bogeys and hobgoblins. I know that the story of this plot is true because it was told me in confidence by a side-show barker, who got it from the tattoed man, who learned it from a Harlem night-club piano player, who has flat feet and has never been known to play parchesi after 9 o'clock on Thursday. This circumstance alone, Dr. Wirt, throws a sinister light on the whole nefarious plot.

The super "brain trust", sir, is led by none other than Dr. Albert Einstein, the eminent mathematician. And it proposes at a given signal to have the radical supreme court declare unconstitutional the law of gravity and thus with satanic cunning have our world annexed by the interstellar soviet republic of the fourth dimension.

Dr. Wirt, no true American will ever surrender without a battle to domination by the fourth dimension, ruled by a radical douma of electromagnetics and fanatical atoms, all united under a dictatorship of a hiatus.

Yes, a hiatus, Dr. Wirt. In his own writings, Dr. Einstein has betrayed the hiatus plot, which is revolting to any democratic citizen.

"In my general theory of relativity", he wrote in 1930, "there remained a hiatus. It was still necessary to assume two original qualities of matter-gravitation, which forms the basis of the laws of movement and mechanics, and electromagnetism, upon which the doctrine of light, of electric phenomena, and of heat are built. Now I have found the proper form * * *."

That form, Dr. Wirt, was not democracy. It was the hiatus.

The only reason nobody can understand Dr. Einstein's books is because they are written in code. A code understood only by Einstein and his 12 cohorts united with him in the super "brain trust" plot to deliver America over to the Interstellar Soviet Republic of the Fourth Dimension and submit to the dictatorship of a hiatus somewhere in an undemocratic chaos.

Why did Einstein come to America? He himself engineered the rise of Hitler so that he (Einstein) might be exiled. And we welcomed this monster to our shores. Only a week or so ago some of his lieutenants began construction of a gigantic 200-inch telescope. This, Dr. Wirt, is part of the prodigious plot. Why a supertelescope? Simply because the super "brain trust" wants to bring the stars millions of light-years nearer to our earth. Why should we bring the stars nearer to America? Isn't America good enough for us?

O Dr. Wirt, we look to you for leadership in saving our Nation from the super "brain trust", which would reduce us rugged individuals to the status of pollywoggles in the milky way.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, when the Senate recessed last night I gave notice that it was my purpose to take 10 minutes of the time of the Senate this morning to reply to the speeches made yesterday and day before yesterday by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG]. Upon reflection, I have concluded that it is both unnecessary and unjustifiable, in this time of great national stress, with a measure of great importance before the Senate, to waste the time of the Senate in a discussion of personalities which a reply to the remarks of the Senator from Louisiana yesterday and the day before would necessarily involve.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the honored leader of the party on this side of the Chamber, and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], Chairman of the Committee on Finance, have both served in the Congress of the United States for nearly 30 years. They have written a record of honest, unswerving, patriotic service which needs no defense from me or anybody else and which is perfectly capable of speaking for itself. Therefore, I shall not pursue the matter further at this time.

Furthermore, I desire to say that on yesterday I felt a sense of outrage at what I considered an absolutely unjustifiable and indefensible attack upon the motives of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], who has been my close personal friend now for nearly a quarter of a century. Resenting the remarks of the Senator from Louisiana, in hot blood I made remarks which, upon reflection, I realize were an infraction of rule XIX of the Senate, the very same rule under which I had myself earlier in the afternoon twice called the Senator from Louisiana to order.

I believe that the colloquy in which the Senator from Louisiana and I indulged and, so far as that is concerned, the Senator from Mississippi, added very little to the dignity of the Senate proceedings. I therefore ask unanimous consent, having those facts in mind, that my interjections into the remarks of the Senator from Louisiana which reflected upon him personally in what I now believe to be a violation of rule XIX be stricken from the permanent RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri? The Chair hears none.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I was not prepared for the statement my friend from Missouri has just made. It comes rather suddenly. I desire to assure the Senator from Missouri that I go a great deal more than half-way to meet him, and that I fully reciprocate his attitude.

I desire to say further that while I have not looked over the RECORD very carefully, if anything I said is in violation of section 2 of rule XIX, I should like to have unanimous consent to eliminate it from the RECORD. I ask that consent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Louisiana? The Chair hears none.

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 7835) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, there is pending an amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY].

I desire to say that there is much merit in the amendment. The ideas expressed in the amendment were very forcefully presented to the Committee on Finance, and the committee gave every consideration to the subject. The Treasury experts, however, as well as the experts of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, all thought that the amendment was so complicated that it would be impossible of administration in its present form.

Both the Committee on Ways and Means of the House and the Committee on Finance of the Senate have tried to simplify the capital gains and loss provision. I desire to offer a brief explanation of it before we vote on it; and I hope that the recommendation of the Finance Committee, which has been very carefully drawn after very prolonged study and suggestions and work upon the part of our experts, will be adopted by the Senate.

The Finance Committee concurred in the new system of treating capital gains and losses contained in the House bill, with certain modifications which either make the system more equitable or prevent tax avoidance.

Existing law provides for special treatment of the gains and losses resulting from the sale of assets held over 2 years. The tax on gains arising from such sale—that is, of assets held over 2 years—is limited under the present law to 12½ percent, with a corresponding limitation on losses. In the case of assets held less than 2 years, under the present law the gains are taxed in full and the losses are allowed in full, except that in the case of stocks and bonds losses are allowed only to the extent of the gains.

The new plan recommended by your committee, as adopted by the House, with some changes and modifications made by the Senate committee, may be briefly described as follows:

To measure the gain or loss from the sale of property by an individual according to the length of time he has held the property, only certain percentages of the recognized gain or loss are taken into account for tax purposes.

In other words, where there was a 12½-percent tax placed on these gains under the present law where they have been held for more than 2 years, we say in our provision that the tax shall be levied on 100 percent of the gain if the asset has been held 1 year or less; on 80 percent of the gain if the asset has been held more than 1 year but not more than 2 years; on 60 percent of the gain if the asset has been held more than 2 years and not more than 5 years; on 40 percent of the gain if the asset has been held more than 5 years but not more than 10 years; and on 30 percent of the gain if the asset has been held more than 10 years.

In cases where losses taken into account as already stated exceed gains so taken into account, the excess losses are entirely disallowed under the Senate committee's recommendation.

In the case of corporations, the graduated percentage reduction on gains and losses does not apply. However, capital losses sustained by corporations are allowed only to the extent of capital gains. Under the present law corporations are allowed to offset capital losses against ordinary income.

The plan outlined, and as recommended by your committee, is not made applicable, for obvious reasons, to stock in trade or property which is included in the taxpayer's inventory.

I hope the Senate committee's recommendations will be accepted and that the amendment of the Senator from Iowa will be voted down.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I desire to ask a question for information. What does the 100 percent that the Senator mentioned refer to?

Mr. HARRISON. That is the gain or the loss. For instance, under the law today, if a man owns a piece of property which he has held more than 2 years, and he sells it and realizes a gain, he has to pay on that gain at the rate of 12½ percent only. We say in this provision that if he holds it for less than 1 year he has to pay the tax imposed in the bill on the full 100 percent of the gain. If he has held the property between 1 and 2 years, he pays on 80 percent of the gain, and so on down, as suggested, at a graduated rate.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if I may attempt also to answer the question of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], the committee was anxious to adopt the same system of taxation on capital gains as on other kinds of taxable income. It desired to have only one item of income which would be subjected to normal and surtax rates.

Obviously, in the case of an asset held for a great number of years and then sold at a profit, it is reasonable to assume that part of the gain has accrued during each of the intervening years. Consequently, we worked out a measure of justice by including in the taxpayers' gross income the full amount of the capital gain if the security has been held for only 1 year. That is to say, we include for taxation, subject to normal and surtax, 100 percent of the gain if the asset has been held less than 1 year. Of course, what the rate of tax on such gain would be would depend on the amount of the total taxable income.

If, then, the asset has been held over a year and less than 2 years, it is taxed 80 percent. I do not mean that the tax rate is 80 percent; but 80 percent of the gain is included in the individual's taxable income, and so on down, according to the length of time the asset has been held. We include a diminishing amount in the taxable income and subject it to both normal and surtaxes.

As the provision works out under the rates prescribed by the bill, the net result is to increase the tax on the taxpayers having the largest incomes. Senators will see that in the case of an asset held over 10 years, 30 percent of the gain must be included. That 30 percent will be taxed at the rate of 63 percent, normal and surtax. Sixty-three percent of 30 amounts to about 20 percent of the original gain, whereas under the present law the tax is only 12½ percent on the same wealthy individual.

The Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation has been working on this scheme for upward of 5 years. It has been studied most thoroughly by the experts of the joint committee. It is believed that it works out a better measure of justice by far than the present law. Understand, of course, that this system treats not merely of capital gains but also of capital losses. If the asset has been held more than 10 years, and it is sold at a loss, the taxpayer can get the benefit of only 30 percent of the loss as a deduction, and not then except when he has capital gains against which he can offset it.

One trouble with the present 12½-percent tax on assets held over 2 years has been that it gave no advantage to a taxpayer having less than about $16,000 of income, and it gave an increasing advantage to the taxpayers in the upper brackets according as their incomes were subject to the higher surtaxes. That is to say, if we kept the present system in force, with the rates which are in this bill, instead of paying 63 percent on one's gains, a taxpayer in the highest bracket would pay only 12½ percent if he had held the asset for 2 years or more, while the small taxpayers, with incomes of $16,000 or less, would get no benefit at all out of the 12½-percent provision.

We wanted to adopt a system which would give a proportionate benefit to every taxpayer, beginning with the individual who has just enough to come over the individual exemptions, up to the man whose income falls in the topmost brackets. We wanted to extend the benefit of the capital-gains allowance to everybody instead of only to those in the highest brackets, and that is accomplished by this provision which is reported by the Senate Finance Committee.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. REED. I am glad to yield.

Mr. BLACK. I am just a little confused by reason of the reference to the 12½ percent, whether the law now provides that the 12½ percent is inflexible, or whether, if one who has income of such nature that his normal tax rate would not equal 12½ percent, he can elect to pay the normal tax rate on his gain, instead of having the gain assessed at a rate of 12½ percent.

Mr. REED. The Senator's question is a natural one. Under the present law the taxpayer has the option either to pay a tax on his gain at 12½ percent or to report it as ordinary income and pay the normal tax and the surtax appropriate to himself. He has that option. In the case of losses, he is limited by the 12½ percent, and cannot deduct more than the 12½ percent if the asset has been held over 2 years.

Mr. BLACK. Then, as I understand, it is the Senator's idea, and the committee's idea, that they will no longer leave this option, or fix a limit of 12½ percent upon the rate of taxation. That is wiped out?

Mr. REED. We wipe out completely all reference to the 12½ percent.

Mr. BLACK. Then I should like to ask one further question. The reference to the 100 percent is not in connection with the rate of taxation?

Mr. REED. That is correct.

Mr. BLACK. The committee would throw the entire 100-percent gain back into the regular report?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. To be taxed at the rates fixed by law?

Mr. REED. That is exactly correct.

Mr. BLACK. Then what is the reason advanced as to why the entire gain should not be taxed if the asset has been held more than 2 years?

Mr. REED. Because presumably the entire profit has not been realized in the last year; presumably the asset increased or decreased in value at a fairly uniform rate while it was being held. That is the theory.

Mr. BLACK. I should like to ask the Senator one further question, because I am very anxious to find out just what the situation is.

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. BLACK. Suppose a man bought stocks in 1925 and sells those stocks in 1934. Let us assume, which probably would not be the case, that he made a profit of $10,000 on the transaction. He would not have paid to the Government any tax on any gain through the years.

Mr. REED. That is correct.

Mr. BLACK. If he had a good stock, he might have received a dividend upon it, and likely he would have paid a tax, or the company would have paid a tax. What is the reason why he should not be required to pay upon the entire gain?

Mr. REED. For the reason I gave to the Senator, that probably the gain has accrued in fairly equal increments throughout the intervening 9 years, and the practical reason, adopted in the act of 1924, that if the rate is made prohibitive it simply prevents the transaction entirely, and the Government does not get the revenue.

Mr. BLACK. I can understand that argument, but I cannot see the strength of the first argument, for this reason: Does the bill provide in any way for a tax on the gain in the intervening years? If not, would the individual not be escaping his tax on such gain merely because he had held the asset over a period of years, and the gain had come to him by reason of its having been held over a period of years?

Mr. REED. There is a further reason; that is, we can not help distinguishing between income currently received, which is what the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution had in mind, and profits from long-term investments in assets which are not held for the purpose of speculation or immediate appreciation in price. The committee has taken all of those considerations in mind, just as they were taken in mind 10 years ago in the adoption of the 12½-percent provision.

It is very difficult, in looking over the figures, to tell what change in the law caused an increase in income, but it is a notable fact that the change which was made 10 years ago in the method of treating capital gains did result in a pronounced increase in the Government's revenue, as well as in the amount of gains which were reported. Carrying out that philosophy, and trying to make the law equitable, so that the small taxpayer would get the advantage of it, as well as the big one, the committee concluded that this change was wise.

I may illustrate by applying it to the case the Senator instanced. The Senator spoke of one who bought stock in 1925 and sold it in 1934 at a profit of $10,000. Under the law as it has been heretofore, an individual in the highest surtax class would pay a tax on that profit of only $1,250. Under the change we recommend, the same individual would pay a tax on that profit of about $1,950. So we have increased the tax in that particular case and on that particular taxpayer by over 50 percent.

Mr. BLACK. I can thoroughly understand that the amendment offered by the Senate committee would result in the collection of more taxes and, in my judgment, would be more equitable. What I am trying to get at in my own mind is the issue that is presented.

We might use the same illustration. Suppose the same man who had bought stock in 1925 and made $10,000 bought stock in 1932 and made $10,000 on the same amount of stock, purchased at the same price. The man who had held the stock only 2 years would have to pay a higher rate of taxation, under this amendment, than the man who had held the stock since 1925. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. REED. That is correct.

Mr. BLACK. There may be ample logic and reason why that distinction should be made, and the argument which the Senator has presented tends in that direction. The issue, however, as I understand, is that if we accept this amendment, we must do so with the assurance and knowledge that there is a different rate of taxation for the man who has made a profit extending over a long term of years, and the man who has made a profit over a short term of years.

Mr. REED. That is true, and it has been true for 10 years.

Mr. BLACK. I understand that, but we are advancing from that position at this time so as to be assured that the man who has made large profits by capital gains will have to pay more than 12½ percent.

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. I can thoroughly appreciate the fact that there is cogency in the argument, that a distinction should be made between the case of a man who has speculated in stock, we will say, and held it only 2 or 3 months, and that of a man who has made a long-term investment, and there might be reasons why Congress would desire to encourage long-term holdings.

Mr. REED. I do not think it is a question so much of encouraging or discouraging the transaction in the case of the short-term profit, but the philosophy is that a speculative profit from a purchase last week and a sale this week is not in any sense an investment transaction. A man engaged in that kind of dealing is trading in property in order to obtain a speculative income out of it, just as dealers on the New York Stock Exchange will buy and sell thousands of shares in a day and wind up all even, so far as shares go, but with a money profit. That is income in every sense of the word, whereas in the case of a man who bought a dwelling house to live in 20 years ago, who sells it now for some reason—perhaps because he has to—if he makes a gain, he is not making a speculative gain in any sense. The transaction was not entered into for profit at all. To clap on that man a very high surtax rate, as if that were a constant investment income coming to him, would be the height of injustice.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, may I ask, however, if this is not a correct statement? If this amendment should be agreed to in its present form—and I thoroughly approve of an increase above the 12½ percent—it would result in taxing the man who had owned stocks 10 years on a basis of 40 percent of his profit, and the man who had owned stocks 2 years on 100 percent of his profit.

Mr. REED. No; not quite that. If the Senator will refer to the schedule, he will see that it is different from that.

Mr. BLACK. Whatever the schedule is, if I am incorrect in the figure as I heard it read a moment ago for the first time, if the amendment shall pass in its present form the result will be that the man who has held his stock for 10 years will pay a smaller amount of tax on his actual gain than will the man who has held it for only 2 years.

Mr. REED. That is exactly correct. The more speculative the transaction, the larger the tax the individual pays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY].

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] has unwittingly referred in his remarks to the amendment, whereas he meant his reference to be to the pending bill. The pending amendment was offered by me.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. MURPHY. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I was referring to the Senate committee amendment. I understood that the Senate committee had amended the bill as sent over by the House. If the Senate committee had not amended the feature under discussion, then my reference applies to the original House provision.

Mr. MURPHY. Yes. Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania has stated that the presumption is indulged that the capital gains accrue through the years. The provision in the committee bill makes no effort to determine whether or not the gain in the asset has accumulated through the years.

Acting on the assumption that the gain has so accumulated, it proceeds to give relief in a measure designed to be an emergency tax measure to produce revenues for the immediate needs of Government. It says to the taxpayer, "If you sell your asset this year, you will have to pay on 100 percent of the profit. If you do not sell your asset until after you have held it a year, and not longer than 2 years, you will be forgiven from tax 20 percent of that profit; if from 2 to 5 years, 40 percent of that profit; if from 5 to 10 years, 60 percent of that profit; and if more than 10 years, 70 percent of the profit." We are forgiving profit on the assumption that such profit accrued in each of the years in which the asset was held, although there is absent any proof that it did accrue in each of the years it was held.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCKELLAR in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. MURPHY. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. Suppose we assume that the profit had accrued in past years; what difference does it make, insofar as the tax is concerned, if there had been no tax paid on the gain for the previous years? That is the point at which I am trying to arrive.

Mr. MURPHY. There is no tax paid for the previous years, except on 30 percent of the gain at sale, if the asset is held over 10 years.

In an emergency tax measure to raise revenue we are in the position of saying to the taxpayer, "Do not sell your asset this year. If you do you will have to pay on 100 percent of the profit. Do not sell it next year; if you do, you will have to pay on 80 percent of the profit. Do not sell it 3 years from now; if you do you will have to pay on 60 percent of the profit. Do not sell it short of 5 years; if you do, you will have to pay on 40 percent of the profit. Hold it for 10 years, and then you will have to pay on only 30 percent of the profit."

Mr. President, as I said yesterday, it is obviously absurd to expect this measure to produce revenue when we offer an inducement to the taxpayer to hold on to the asset and not sell it, that inducement being a guaranteed reduction in his tax.

We are also indulging the presumption that there ought to be relief. To whom has that relief gone in the years during which we have had the capital-gains tax? We never had the capital-gains tax until Mr. Mellon became Secretary of the Treasury. Beginning with 1922, when the 12½-percent rate took effect, from 70 to 80 percent of all such gains have been on incomes of $100,000 or more.

The total of capital gains reported by all taxpayers in the 5 years from 1925 to 1929 was $7,137,000,000, and of that $6,048,000,000 was in returns showing incomes of more than $100,000.

The tax revenue lost to the Government by reason of that 12½-percent provision in its departure from what had been the law up to 1921 was $750,000,000.

Now, we continue to treat these capital gains preferentially. They are the gains of the rich, the very rich. They are habitual with them. There has been interpolated here something about a man who has held a homestead and sold it, as though he were the factor in the equation. This relief goes in far greater part to the very rich taxpayers, to the taxpayers having incomes of over $100,000.

I conceded yesterday in my discussion that the provision in the pending bill is a large improvement over the 12½-percent provision, but my amendment does not indulge the presumption this bill does. It ascertains how long the taxpayer has held the asset, and that is a factor. It determines also whether or not the gain is extraordinary; meaning by extraordinary that we determine whether or not he had other capital gains in those years, and if he did we extend relief to that amount from capital gains that represents an excess over what has ordinarily been received by him in the 5 years from other capital gains.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. MURPHY. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If I understand the Senator's amendment correctly, it would take care of the situation of the man who had invested in a home and at the end of a period of time realized an exceptional income on the value of the property.

Mr. MURPHY. It takes care of him. My amendment carries out mathematically the principle stated in the House committee report. The committee bill abandons it. The committee bill just reaches out of the air and bestows forgiveness of these stated percentums without any mathematical basis.

My amendment gives mathematically accurate effect to the House committee principle.

The objection made to my amendment by the Chairman of the Finance Committee is that it is difficult of administration. I grant that to be so; but we have seen that this tax applies on incomes above $100,000 in very much the largest part, and I think it safe to assume that every man with an income of $25,000 employs a tax expert to make out his return.

There is provision in my amendment permitting the Secretary of the Treasury to prescribe regulations. I submit we can afford to have something that is a little difficult of administration when the clarified method of administration cost the Government in the 5 years, 1925 to 1929, inclusive, $750,000,000 in taxes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY].

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I want to say only a word. The Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation worked over 5 years before it was ready to adopt the system adopted by the House bill and the system recommended by the Finance Committee. It may be that the amendment of the Senator from Iowa is an improvement over the recommendation of the joint committee, but certainly it should be studied before being adopted. It ought to be studied by the experts and analyzed in the way the other proposals have, and I hope it will not be adopted without such study.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I wish to say only a few words in support of the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa. I do not think any Senator could listen to the statement of facts which the Senator from Iowa made on yesterday afternoon in support of his amendment without being convinced that the amendment seeks to close one of the largest loopholes in the present tax system, and, in my opinion, seeks to close it by a substitute method which is entirely equitable.

I recognize that the amendment appears upon its face to be complicated and that it is held by some to be difficult of administration; but are we not justified in attempting to employ a new method, even though it may be more difficult of administration than that contained in the proposal of the Finance Committee, in order to close this loophole in our tax system and in order to withdraw the special privilege which has been extended to the large income-tax payers in past years?

The Senator from Iowa, in the course of his career, has been connected with the Internal Revenue Department; he is familiar with the procedure of that Department and with the administration of the law. He has devoted a great deal of time and attention to the consideration of this important question. I appeal to the Senate to adopt this amendment and to permit it to go to conference, where it may have further study of the experts representing the Joint Committee on Taxation and the Treasury Department.

The Senator from Pennsylvania has referred to the experts of the Joint Committee on Taxation and their recommendation. I hold Mr. Parker and his staff in the highest estimation. Nevertheless, the subcommittee of the Committee on Ways and Means, in conjunction with its experts, gave a great deal of study to this problem and reported, in principle, in support of the amendment which has been offered by the Senator from Iowa.

I hope, Mr. President, that we may have a record vote upon this amendment, and I sincerely trust that it may be adopted.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I am not familiar with this amendment and I merely want to explain the vote I shall cast. Unfortunately, I did not have the privilege of being here yesterday afternoon. I did not know that this matter had been discussed; so my entire information has come since I reached the Senate floor.

As I view this amendment, however, in its intendment and purpose it raises a question of policy. I cannot see why there should be any of the tax forgiven one man that is not forgiven another. I cannot understand that there have been sufficient arguments advanced to justify the belief that it is necessary to encourage long-time investments. I cannot distinguish between a profit or a gain made by a man over a period of 1 year and over a period of 10 years if the man gets the gain. I do not see why it is fair for one citizen to pay a tax upon one basic rate upon the profit or the gain or income he receives and for another citizen to pay a basic rate of a different amount upon the profit or gain or income he receives. So, assuming that the amendment of the Senator from Iowa more nearly approaches the idea of an equal basic rate for all profits and income and gains made, I shall very cheerfully vote for his amendment.

Mr. President, I merely wanted to make that statement, because I am not fully familiar with the amendment as written, but I have heard enough this morning to be familiar with the object and purpose of the amendment. I regret not to vote with the committee on its amendment, but I myself cannot believe that it is right to have one basic rate for the profits and gains made by a citizen simply because he has held an investment for 1 year and another basic rate for the profits and gains made by a citizen who has held it for 10 years. As a matter of fact, I think the rate should be the same for the income which comes from a salary, if that be included in the normal income, from all other gains and from all other profits, and I can see no reason in the world why a preferential rate should be given to those who happen to have gotten their income from trading on the market or at any other place. So far as I am concerned, I would prefer the Senator's amendment to provide no exceptions and no exemptions of any kind, but that the rate should be the same for the profits or the gains for those who have made such profits or gains over a period of 1 year or over a period of 10 years. I join with the Senator from Wisconsin in hoping that we may have a record vote upon the amendment.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I rise to obtain some information. It was not possible for me to be present and to hear all the debate on this amendment. As I understand now, the other House reported a provision establishing the principle involved in the amendment of the Senator from Iowa. Is that correct? Did the House bill contain a provision similar to this in character? What is the distinction between this amendment and the provision of the House bill?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, it is my understanding that the House Ways and Means Committee did not follow the recommendation of the subcommittee which studied the question of the tax system. The House Ways and Means Committee reported and the House adopted the principle contained in the amendment reported by the Senate Committee on Finance. All that the Senate Committee on Finance did to the House text was at the suggestion of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] to provide an additional bracket covering gains from assets held over a longer period. In principle, however, the provision in the House bill is the same as the amendment reported by the Senate Committee on Finance.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The Senator speaks of the subcommittee that considered the problems of taxation. Did they consider the proposition that was offered by the Joint Committee on Taxation of the House and the Senate?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I cannot answer that question. All I know is that the subcommittee of the Ways and Means Committee reported, in principle, the amendment along the lines the Senator from Iowa has offered, but the Ways and Means Committee did not follow that recommendation, and adopted the provision which is before the Senate, with the exception of the additional bracket which was proposed in the committee by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I can answer the question of the Senator, if he wishes me to do so.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I will be glad to hear the Senator.

Mr. REED. The subcommittee of the Ways and Means Committee followed the recommendation of the Joint Committee on Taxation, and recommended the provision which the Senator finds in the House bill, plus an additional bracket carrying 20 percent of the gain or loss if the asset had been held over 10 years. The Ways and Means Committee dropped out that final bracket. We restored it at 30 percent, instead of 20 percent, as recommended by the subcommittee of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Then this is an entirely new proposition?

Mr. MURPHY. Yes.

Mr. REED. The amendment of the Senator from Iowa is an entirely new proposition?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. What has been the objection offered to this amendment? The only objection I have heard is the statement that it may be difficult of administration.

Mr. MURPHY. That is the only objection I have heard, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The reference which I had in mind a moment ago is as follows—and I quote from the speech of the Senator from Iowa on page 6101 of the RECORD of yesterday:

> The House subcommittee on tax revision, in presenting the plan embodied in this bill, stated admirably the principle on which relief might properly be based. It said:
> "The tax on a capital gain should approximate the tax which would have been paid if the gain had been realized in equal annual amounts over the period for which the asset was held."

I contend that that is, in principle and in essence, the proposition contained in the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa, and that the House Ways and Means Committee did not follow the recommendation, in principle, made by the subcommittee. It modified the existing principle by providing these various brackets, which provision I concede, as did the Senator from Iowa yesterday, is an improvement over the existing law; but it does not carry out the recommendation contained in the statement of the subcommittee of the House Committee on Ways and Means as quoted by the Senator from Iowa yesterday.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield to me?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield the floor.

Mr. REED. The recommendation of the subcommittee of the Committee on Ways and Means appears on page 6 of their printed report. They recommend that:

> To measure the gain or loss from the sale of property by an individual according to the length of time he has held the property, the following percentages of gain or loss are recognized for tax purposes:
> One hundred percent if the capital asset has been held for not more than 1 year;
> Eighty percent if the capital asset has been held for more than 1 year but not more than 2 years;
> Sixty percent if the capital asset has been held for more than 2 years but not more than 3 years;
> Forty percent if the capital asset has been held for more than 3 years but not more than 5 years;
> Twenty percent if the capital asset has been held more than 5 years.

The Ways and Means Committee adopted that recommendation, but left out the last bracket of 20 percent if the capital asset has been held more than 5 years. When the bill came to the Finance Committee, I moved to add an additional bracket, namely, 30 percent if the asset had been held over 10 years.

The Senator will see the three successive recommendations, all adopting the same principle, and that the Finance Committee has taken a position midway between the subcommittee of the Committee on Ways and Means and the full committee. I might add parenthetically that the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation made a recommendation which was the same as the schedule of the subcommittee which I have just read. The Finance Committee did not go so far as the joint committee and did not go so far as the subcommittee.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the only inaccuracy in the statement I made a while ago was to the effect that the full Ways and Means Committee did not follow the recommendation of the subcommittee. The fact is that the subcommittee itself did not carry out the principle which it recommended in its report. No Senator can study the matter and successfully contend that either the House text or the Senate committee text carries out this statement of principle, namely, that the tax on a capital gain should approximate the tax which would have been paid if the gain had been realized in equal amounts over the period for which the assets were held. This is precisely what the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa does. If it shall be put into the bill and becomes law, in my opinion, it will go a long way to increase revenue and to cure one of the most glaring special privileges that has been extant under our income-tax system.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the difficulty involved in the amendment grows out of the capital gains provision in our income tax law. It arises out of this fact. If one is to be taxed on his gains, there is much equity and justice in saying that he should be allowed to deduct his losses. That is all right; but we have found from experience that when taxpayer A, who is engaged in the buying and selling of securities for himself, primarily investing his own money, by reason of the fact that he can so easily create a loss or at least take advantage of a loss within the taxable year, and wipe out his tax liability to the Government, that the Congress has come around finally to the view that losses except to a limited extent are not to be allowed the taxpayer. That is the simple proposition.

In the bill now before us, losses are not to be allowed the taxpayer; that is, he cannot deduct his losses from his gross income for the purpose of ascertaining net taxable income unless the loss is incurred in the same business or operation; nor can he carry over the loss, however incurred, to the next succeeding year.

In other words, under the theory of the bill all capital transactions are put into one hopper, and in the revolutions through which they pass during the year, if the gains are offset by losses in a particular business in which the taxpayer is engaged, he may have the advantage of his losses against his gains; but if that particular taxpayer has a salary of $20,000 and he has losses on his business operations of $40,000, he cannot deduct those losses so as to defeat his tax or reduce his tax on the salary except to a very limited extent as provided by the committee, because he can only get the advantage of the losses on the business in which he had the gain; nor can he carry over those losses beyond the year.

Now we have this proposition, and this is the philosophy and the reasoning under this provision. If we are not going to allow the taxpayers the benefit of capital losses, how may we in equity tax his capital gain? The bill undertakes to soften the tax on the capital gain. Bear in mind, we have taken away from him his losses, we have disallowed his losses except for the one year upon the same business in which he had the gain, and yet we hold him to his capital gain for the first year, 100 percent of the gain, and then we graduate it downward depending upon the length of time he has held the particular asset.

Whether the philosophy of the provision be right, whether the equity be one that can be defended wholly, it grows out of that particular situation; that is, having denied the taxpayer the right to take capital losses we are going to tax him on capital gains, but we are going to soften the blow to him by permitting him to pay on a less and less income from the capital gain measured by the length of time he has held the capital asset.

Personally I believe we would have a much simpler income-tax system if we could get rid of the capital-gain-and-loss theory altogether. But we have not gotten rid of it, and we are not going to get rid of it. I realize that there is difficulty in getting rid of the capital-gain tax, particularly at a time when we have low values, because we are always trying to get the taxpayer to pay more money into the Treasury. But the question is academic, as I see it. We have the capital gain. We are going to continue the tax on capital gain, but we have now practically wiped out capital losses. We have restricted them greatly to 1 year. The Ways and Means Committee of the House and the House itself undertook to soften the blow on the taxpayer who was required to pay the tax on his gain, but not permitted to take losses.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. MURPHY. I desire to say to the Senator that my amendment does not disturb the capital-loss features of the bill. They are retained. My amendment applies only to subtitles A and B of the bill.

Mr. GEORGE. I so understand; and I want to make this statement about the Senator's amendment. The amendment impresses me as having considerable merit, but it is rather technical; that is, the application of it would probably be difficult. It might not be as difficult as it seems to me to be. But under the Senator's amendment, if it were now adopted, the chances are we would get no more revenue immediately, and perhaps not so much as we would under the bill as it stands, for this reason, if the Senator will permit me: The bill as it stands taxes the capital gain 100 percent if realized during the first year that the capital assets out of which they arise are sold. Capital assets which have been carried during the depression are not likely to be sold within the next year.

The Senator has made a contribution which I think the committees of the two Houses ought very carefully to consider; and if it is not too complicated, not too technical, it might well become a part of our law. I am not making an argument against the merits of the Senator's amendment. I believe we shall have an opportunity to insert the amendment, if it can be demonstrated that it is not too technical, in another tax act before very many of the transactions which would fall under it actually take place, resulting in profit to the taxpayer.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. MURPHY. I thank the Senator for his references to the amendment I have offered. I should like to make one observation, however, in reply to his remarks.

I think the bill as drawn is very likely to defeat revenue in its encouragement to the taxpayer to hold off sale. The tax of 100 percent on the profits realized in the current or taxable year is a tax that will fall very largely on the speculative profits in the stock market. The capital-gains tax, in its relief provisions, will affect the investment for the long pull.

We have had since last June an average advance in stocks of 100 percent. Of course, we are assured an advance of another 100 percent under this administration within the next year. Stock bought last year, which has already advanced 100 percent, if sold last year with 100 percent advance, would be taxed on the basis of 100 percent of that gain. If not sold until this year, it will be taxed on 80 percent of the gain. If sold within 2 and 5 years, it will be taxed on 60 percent of the gain. If not sold for more than 10 years, it will be taxed on only 30 percent of the gain.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that we are holding out encouragement to the taxpayer not to sell. We are holding out to him the promise of a reduced tax, depending upon how long he holds the asset. Certainly, unless necessity compels, I am not going to sell an asset on which I have a profit within 10 years if I have any assurance of a profit then, because by holding it over 10 years I will have to pay a tax on only 30 percent of the profit; and I think that will operate to defeat the collection of revenue.

It is a very significant fact that in 1922 there were about $3,200,000,000 of stock dividends issued; and 2 years later, or on the very earliest date when those stock dividends could be sold and get the benefit of the 12½-percent tax, there was a tremendous increase in the realization of gains on capital assets. In this bill we continue the encouragement to corporations to build up their surpluses. We say to them, in effect, "Do not pay out the earnings in dividends to stockholders. Build up surpluses, and issue stock dividends"; and we say to the stockholder, "If you hold that stock dividend for more than 2 years you will have to pay a tax on only 40 percent of it. If you hold it over 10 years, you will have to pay a tax on only 30 percent of it."

I submit, Mr. President, that there is not anything democratic in that proposal. I submit that that is privilege legislation, drawn to benefit the long-pull stockholder.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I submit that the Senator is entirely wrong. The provision in the bill is based upon the simple proposition that if we are going to tax a man on his capital gains, it is hard to answer why, in justice and equity, he is not entitled to take off his capital losses. All that this provision does is to recognize the harshness of that rule and to soften the blow on the taxpayer who must continue to pay on his capital gains while he is denied the right to deduct his capital losses. That is the reason for it.

I have no hesitancy in saying that I think the capital gains and loss provision should be written out of our revenue laws, just as Great Britain has written it out of her system. I know the argument against it; but, at the same time, if we are going to impose a tax on the gains, it is difficult for me, at least, to submit any sincere argument against allowing a deduction for the losses. We have minimized the losses of the taxpayers; we have virtually stripped him of the right to take losses, and we have said, "We will tax you 100 percent on your gains if realized within 1 year," graduating the tax down if realized over a longer period of time.

What the Senator says may be true, that an incentive will be given the taxpayer to withhold the sale of his security or property during the first year over to the second, third, fourth, fifth, or even eighth year in order to escape a greater part of the burden of the tax. That may be true. That argument may be made against any capital-gains tax; and that is the argument which has prevailed generally with those countries that have discarded the capital-gains tax. They have looked to the long run; and they have believed, at least, that the best taxing system was the one that left intact the industrial and the commercial and the financial structure of the country, so that it might continue to earn an income upon which a tax could be imposed.

There is no quarrel with the essential purpose the Senator has in mind in his amendment. The difficulty we had in considering his amendment was whether or not it was simple enough, whether or not it could be applied, because it seemed to be highly technical; and our advice was that it could be applied, if at all, with a great deal of difficulty. Probably during the life of this tax bill, because this will not be a long-lived tax bill—there is going to be another one—probably during the life of this tax bill the capital gains will be taxed 100 percent anyhow. So there is not any practical reason for taking the amendment suggested by the able Senator, even though it should turn out to be simple in administration, contrary to what we now think, because we shall have an opportunity to take it again, in my judgment, after mature study, before another year passes.

Mr. President, I merely wished to make this statement, not in justification of this particular provision in the bill, because frankly it is a crude way of meeting a bad situation which grows out of the decision upon the part of the Congress to tax capital gains but to deny capital losses, because we have learned from experience that through capital losses the big taxpayers are able to escape liability for taxes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. O'MAHONEY in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY].

BONDS OF HOME OWNERS' LOAN CORPORATION

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. O'MAHONEY in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2999) to guarantee the bonds of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, to amend the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, and for other purposes.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate disagree to the House amendment, ask for a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. BULKLEY, Mr. BARKLEY, and Mr. TOWNSEND conferees on the part of the Senate.

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 7835) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment at this point.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I understand that the committee amendments on page 93 have not been agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. They have not. I should like to have those committee amendments agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I know the Senator from Mississippi would like to have them agreed to, but I hope they will not be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the Senate has just voted down an amendment which, in my judgment, would have closed a tremendous loophole in our tax system, and would have withdrawn the special privilege which, under existing law, has been extended to large income-tax payers.

The proponents of the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY] were frank in stating that the recommendation of the committee, insofar as it attempts to close this loophole and to withdraw a part of this special privilege to large income-tax payers, is an improvement over the existing law; but every time a bracket is added, every time an extension of time is made, and a reduction provided in the tax which must be paid by the individual who realizes a capital gain, just to that extent is the loophole enlarged and the special privilege extended.

When the pending bill passed the House and came over to the Finance Committee, Senators will note, if they turn to page 93, that there were four brackets, beginning on line 9:

> One hundred percent if the capital asset has been held for not more than 1 year.
> Eighty percent if the capital asset has been held for more than 1 year but not for more than 2 years.
> Sixty percent if the capital asset has been held for more than 2 years but not for more than 5 years.
> Forty percent if the capital asset has been held for more than 5 years.

That was the provision in the bill as it came from the Ways and Means Committee, and as it passed the House and came to the Senate Committee on Finance. Now the committee proposes to add an amendment so that it will read:

> Forty percent if the capital asset has been held for more than 5 years but not for more than 10 years.
> Thirty percent if the capital asset has been held for more than 10 years.

This amendment was proposed in the committee by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED]. I do not recollect whether or not we had a record vote on it in the committee; but it is not in any sense a unanimous recommendation of the committee, for there were members of the committee who were opposed to these amendments which go in the direction of restoring to a greater extent special privileges and tax immunities on capital gains.

I am disappointed that the Senate did not determine to close this loophole altogether, as I think it would have been closed had the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa prevailed. I am certainly hopeful that the committee amendments will be rejected. If they shall not be rejected, Mr. President, we will not have gone as far as the House Ways and Means Committee and the House of Representatives itself were ready and willing to go in closing this loophole and in withdrawing in part this special privilege.

I hope the Senate will give careful consideration to these two amendments, and I sincerely hope they will be rejected.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the amendments referred to, as I understand, were agreed to the other day; so I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which they were agreed to may be reconsidered at this time so that they may now be voted on. I am speaking of the Senate amendments on page 93, which were agreed to the other day.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not understand that they have been agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. They have been agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I do not understand that there is any objection to the reconsideration of the votes by which these amendments were agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Really the only amendment is the Senate committee amendment limiting the 40-percent provision to capital assets held more than 5 years but not more than 10 years, and the 30-percent provision with regard to capital assets held more than 10 years.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. There are two amendments; one in lines 16 and 17 and one in lines 18 and 19, on page 93.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment was agreed to? The amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 93, line 16, it is proposed to strike out "years" and insert "years but not for more than 10 years."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, that and the two lines which follow are all one amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. And after line 17 it is proposed to insert "30 percent if the capital asset has been held for more than 10 years."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to a reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment was agreed to? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HARRISON and Mr. REED asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and the nays were ordered, and the roll was called.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS], who is necessarily detained. In his absence, not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. HATFIELD (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the Senator from Florida has not voted.

Mr. HATFIELD. I have a general pair with that Senator. I find, however, I can transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT], which I do, and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. LEWIS. I regret to announce that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] is detained from the Senate on account of illness.

I also desire to announce that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE], the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL], the Senator from Montana [Mr. ERICKSON], the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS], the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], and the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

I also wish to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON];

The Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR];

So the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. I offer an amendment, which I ask the clerk to read, to come in on page 81, line 6.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 81, line 6, after the word "property", it is proposed to strike out the comma and insert a period and then strike out the words "except as provided in paragraphs (2), (3), and (4), of this subsection"; and also to strike out paragraphs (2), (3), and (4) on pages 81, 82, 83, and 84, down to the end of line 15.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if adopted, this amendment will change quite materially the basis of estimating allowances for depletion. Under the present law and under the bill as proposed, which makes no change in reference to allowances for depletion, we find that a very peculiar situation has grown up. When provision for depletion allowances was first made, administration of the provision was put in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury, who, under regulations, provided, for instance, what would be the life of an oil well—I use that as an illustration—or a gas well or other similar property. A term was fixed as the life of the well, and it was provided that so much should be deducted each year as capital or as the value of the well. For instance, suppose a company owned a property which had been bought in 1913 for $10,000, and the life of the well was 5 years, then the taxpayer would be allowed $2,000 a year for depletion. But it was not long before an additional amount was wanted. The oil producers came back to Congress and got an additional allowance known as the "discovery allowance", which was the value of the property after oil was discovered on it.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator will wait just a few moments.

Mr. LONG. I am for the Senator's amendment, and I want to know something about it. I understand the amendment is designed to prevent those who have already had 100 percent coming back and getting another 100 percent.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will content himself to listen for a few minutes, I feel quite sure he will learn what the amendment proposes to do and what I hope to attain by it.

The discovery allowance was made. For instance, suppose a well had cost $10,000, and oil was discovered on it and it became worth $100,000. The law provided that then, in addition to the cost value of the property, there should be a deduction according to the discovery value. If the life of the well was fixed at 5 years, then the taxpayer would be allowed $20,000, or one fifth of the amount each year, as depletion. As the life of the well as fixed by the law expired—and the date of expiration came about in the year 1926, if I recall correctly—all the discovery value had been taken up and the well was still producing. Then the oil producers, some of them having obtained the actual value as depletion and then the discovery value as depletion, came back and themselves offered to be taxed in a third way, and the third way is set forth in the following section, which I am proposing to strike out:

(3) Percentage depletion for oil and gas wells: In the case of oil and gas wells the allowance for depletion under section 23 (m) shall be 27½ percent of the gross income from the property during the taxable year, excluding from such gross income an amount equal to any rents or royalties paid or incurred by the taxpayer in respect of the property. Such allowance shall not exceed 50 percent of the net income of the taxpayer (computing without allowance for depletion) from the property, except that in no case shall the depletion allowance under section 23 (m) be less than it would be if computed without reference to this paragraph.

That is the present law, as well as being a provision of the pending bill.

In other words, having first used up as depletion the cost value of the property and then having used up the discovery value of the property after the oil was discovered, they are now allowed 50 percent of what they derive from the well each and every year. In the case of a well that was bought in 1915 by 1921, whether oil had been discovered or not, under the law up to that time the cost value would have been entirely covered by the depletion allowance, and no more depletion on that ground would be allowed.

Then, from 1921 to 1926, the cost value having been fixed at $100,000, that cost value would have been allowed. In 1926 this provision became effective, so in 1926 and 1927 there would have been $100,000 more allowed as deduction for depletion allowance. In 1928 and 1929 another $100,000 was allowed the taxpayer as depletion allowance. In 1930 and 1931 a third allowance of the full value of the well was allowed as depletion. In 1932 and 1933 again a similar allowance was made. In other words, the owners of the well were allowed all the cost value of the property as depletion, all the discovery value of the property as depletion, and then five times its estimated taxable value.

Under the depletion-allowance provision these oil companies seem to be the favorites of the Government. No other taxpayers are allowed such a great amount of exemption from taxation. Why should we allow the oil producers to be so exempted? Someone perhaps will say that the oil companies have had a hard time, but they are not taxed unless they make a profit, so there can be no injustice on that score. Why should we allow this cumulative allowance for depletion?

Sometime ago the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] headed a committee which investigated depletion allowances and went into the question very thoroughly. A report was submitted, but the Congress paid no attention to it. We are merely allowing these interests exemption from taxation. I do not think they ought to be exempted. I think we have already exempted them probably five times over by means of the depletion allowances, and it is now time for the Government to collect something.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. My attention was distracted when the clerk was reading the Senator's amendment. I should like to have the Senator tell me just what he proposes to accomplish by his amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. The amendment proposes to do this: Section 114 of the bill provides a basis for depreciation and depletion in the case of all corporations. It reads:

SEC. 114. Basis for depreciation and depletion.—(a) Basis for depreciation: The basis upon which exhaustion, wear and tear, and obsolescence are to be allowed in respect of any property shall be the adjusted basis provided in section 113 (b) for the purpose of determining the gain upon the sale or other disposition of such property.

Then, on page 81, the bill specifically refers to these classes of corporations:

(b) Basis for depletion.—(1) General rule: The basis upon which depletion is to be allowed in respect of any property shall be the adjusted basis provided in section 113 (b) for the purpose of determining the gain upon the sale or other disposition of such property—

Down to there, the provision puts all corporations on the same basis. There is no objection to it. It ought to remain that way. Whatever allowances are made to other corporations ought to be made to oil-producing corporations. That is manifest.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, will the Senator read that again?

Mr. McKELLAR. I will read it again:

The basis upon which depletion is to be allowed in respect of any property shall be the adjusted basis provided in section 113 (b) for the purpose of determining the gain upon the sale or other disposition of such property—

I propose to make no change in that provision; it is perfectly right, and should be in the bill; there cannot be any objection to it upon the part of anybody; but when we go further, as I shall point out in a moment, we put the oil and gas companies in a favored class by themselves, giving them such allowances that I suspect, if we were permitted to see the tax returns—of course, Congress has no right to the tax returns; we cannot see them—if they could be seen it would be found that the corporations in this favored class are paying precious little, if any, taxes at all.

Therefore, I have moved to strike out everything after the word "property", with which I ended the excerpt a moment ago. First, I move to strike out these words:

Except as provided in paragraphs (2), (3), and (4) of this subsection.

My amendment strikes out that language, and then strikes out the discovery-value method of estimating the allowance and the percentage depletion for oil and gas wells in subsection (3). Let me read those so that the Senate may have the picture just as it is.

This is one of the sections which I undertake to strike out——

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. Let me finish this and then I will yield:

(2) Discovery value in case of mines: In the case of mines (other than metal, coal, or sulphur mines)—

Referring particularly to oil and gas—discovered by the taxpayer after February 28, 1913, the basis for depletion shall be the fair market value of the property at the date of discovery—

"At the date of discovery." The wells are discovered now.

The basis for depletion shall be the fair market value of the property at the date of discovery or within 30 days thereafter, if such mines were not acquired as the result of purchase of a proven tract or lease, and if the fair market value of the property is materially disproportionate to the cost. The depletion allowance under section 23 (m) based on discovery value provided in this paragraph shall not exceed 50 percent of the net income of the taxpayer (computed without allowance for depletion) from the property upon which the discovery was made, except that in no case shall the depletion allowance under section 23 (m) be less than it would be if computed without reference to discovery value. Discoveries shall include minerals in commercial quantities contained within a vein or deposit discovered in an existing mine or mining tract by the taxpayer after February 28, 1913, if the vein or deposit thus discovered was not merely the uninterrupted extension of a continuing commercial vein or deposit already known to exist, and if the discovered minerals are of sufficient value and quantity that they could be separately mined and marketed at a profit.

Now, recall that this was the second step. The section I have just read was the second law favoring these companies over all other companies.

Mr. GORE. What was the date of that one?

Mr. McKELLAR. Nineteen hundred and twenty-one, if I remember the time correctly. That expired, however, under the regulations, in 5 years; and that depletion allowance has all been taken up on the continuing well. Therefore, when these companies thought their depletion allowances were going to be stopped, their representatives came here to Washington, where the companies have one of the greatest lobbies known in our city—and, as the Senate knows, there are some great ones here—and offered this section, which I ask to strike out:

(3) Percentage depletion for oil and gas wells: In the case of oil and gas wells the allowance for depletion under section 23 (m) shall be 27½ percent of the gross income from the property during the taxable year, excluding from such gross income an amount equal to any rents or royalties paid or incurred by the taxpayer in respect of the property. Such allowance shall not exceed 50 percent of the net income of the taxpayer (computed without allowance for depletion) from the property, except that in no case shall the depletion allowance under section 23 (m) be less than it would be if computed without reference to this paragraph.

Mr. President, I desire now to call attention to the allowances generally to which these corporations would be entitled.

For instance, there is the allowance for compensation of officers. As an illustration of what that was in any one year I will take the year 1930, and the Senate will see what allowances are made on that score. By the way, I have an amendment following this which will undertake to take care of that situation to some extent.

The allowance to officers by the corporations of America in 1930 was $3,138,845,973. Over $3,000,000,000 was paid out in that one year in the form of salaries to officers of the corporations of this country. The officers of oil companies got their part of that.

The oil companies are entitled also to their part of depreciation; and the depreciation of companies during that year was $3,900,000,000. I will not give the odd figures.

Prior year net loss, $157,000,000.

Tax-exempt dividends and interest, $3,000,000,000.

Miscellaneous deductions—and the oil companies are entitled to miscellaneous deductions—$39,000,000,000.

Is it any wonder that the income-tax laws are not producing taxes? We have constantly increased the allowances all the way along the line since this tax law was passed. Now I want to call the Senate's attention to what the total deductions under our laws have been for a number of years.

In 1930 the total deductions were $50,000,000,000.

In 1929 they were $53,000,000,000.

All of that property escaped taxes absolutely, $53,000,000,000 in one year; and, by the way, the oil companies received the advantage of all those deductions, and in addition to that a depletion allowance of one half. It is not fair and it is not right; and I have offered this amendment to do away with these two allowances. These companies ought to have the same depreciation or depletion allowances that every other concern has. They ought not to be treated as a separate class. It is class legislation of the grossest kind.

Do not be misled by the idea that the oil companies are now in a bad fix, just as all other corporations, perhaps, are; or that they may be in a worse fix if my amendment should be adopted, for we do not tax them unless they make money, unless they make an income. Those that make an income, I submit to the Senate, in all fairness and justice, ought to pay just like every other corporation.

So I hope the committee will accept the amendment. The House having passed the bill without putting this in, it seems to me the committee ought to take the amendment to conference and work it out. By the way, I digress here long enough to say that the Secretary of the Treasury went before the House committee and recommended that this depletion matter be taken into consideration by that committee and by the Congress. The House disregarded the Secretary's recommendation, and the Senate committee has disregarded it. I hope the Senate will not disregard it, and that this amendment will be adopted.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator a moment ago made the statement that the House had passed this bill without these provisions in it. I wish to say to the Senator that the language sought to be stricken out by the Senator's amendment is the language of the House bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. I said that the House disregarded the suggested amendment of the Secretary of the Treasury, which was not to strike it all out, but to reduce this perfectly enormous allowance of 50 percent of the net profits.

Why should any company come to the Congress and say to it, as these companies do, "It is true that we have all the allowances that every other corporation in the country has, but we want an additional allowance. We want one half of all our net income exempted as depletion allowance", after they have heretofore taken up all of their depletion allowance?

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator's amendment should be agreed to, it would practically eliminate the allowances for depletion in the case of oil and gas wells.

Mr. McKELLAR. Not practically, but——

Mr. BARKLEY. Entirely so.

Mr. McKELLAR. It would give the oil and gas companies exactly the same allowances or credits that every other corporation in this country has.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does not the Senator think there is any difference between an oil company that brings in a well, or a few wells, which soon are entirely exhausted, and an ordinary company that is engaged in some other business?

Mr. McKELLAR. There are some differences; but the Senator forgets that these capital or discovery allowances have all been made. The entire amount of the capital or discovery value of the concern has already been taken up.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course that may be true as to certain wells; but it is not true with reference to wells that are constantly being brought in, or mines that are constantly being developed. It may be that in some cases—it probably is—the discovery value has already been allowed to the business.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator must realize that in the first place most of the wells have been discovered. Oil properties are well known. Occasionally that is not true, but for the most part it is.

Mr. BARKLEY. Notwithstanding that once every few months the statement is made in the newspapers by some scientist or geologist that all the oil fields have been discovered, we go on constantly discovering new oil fields, and bringing in new surpluses of oil.

Mr. McKELLAR. Not in this country.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; in this country.

Mr. McKELLAR. It has been quite a while since that has been true. What we are dealing with are the corporations now in existence; and they having had these great advantages, these great subsidies—for they are really subsidies—from the Government, the time has arrived when the Government should treat them just as all other corporations are treated.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] is always entertaining, even when he is not convincing. His sincerity and his earnestness challenge respect even when his arguments do not carry conviction.

The Senator from Tennessee has sought to create a set of facts which do not exist, and he has made an unanswerable assault upon that imaginary situation. I shall undertake to demonstrate that the Senator from Tennessee is mistaken as to the facts; that he is mistaken as to the law; that he is mistaken as to the application of the law to the facts; that he is mistaken as to the effect of this depletion legislation upon individual taxpayers, and is mistaken as to its effect upon the public revenues and the Public Treasury.

Mr. President, I need hardly say that every part and every phase of our income-tax legislation is extremely intricate and difficult to understand. That is particularly true of the section relating to depletion of capital—depletion allowances. I may add that it is doubly true in respect to the application of these laws to oil and gas wells, to oil and gas properties.

Intricate as this subject is, however, it is of much importance. I may say that it is no less important than intricate, and I therefore challenge attention to what I shall have to say upon this subject.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERTON in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator ought to have included, in referring to the evil effects which would result to the oil industry by reason of this amendment if it were agreed to, the effect also on mines, because if this amendment were adopted, it would be very injurious to the mining industry in all parts of the United States.

Mr. GORE. I was just about to say, Mr. President, that this subject is of direct and vital concern to every State and to every Senator from every State in which is situated an oil or gas well, a coal mine, a copper mine, an iron mine, a salt or sulphur mine, a zinc or lead mine, a silver or gold mine. It is of direct concern to every State and to every Senator from every State where timber is grown and where lumber is produced and marketed in commercial quantities. I therefore challenge the attention of Senators from those States.

Not only that, Mr. President, but this subject is of direct and vital concern to every State and to every Senator from every State, because mining, including the oil industry, is the third largest industry in the United States. Billions of capital, more than twenty billions, are invested in the mining industry and in the oil industry.

Coal and oil produce the power which drives the wheels of industry, and other mines produce the raw materials which enter into our industries, the raw materials of business which gives employment alike to capital and to labor.

The mines supply the raw materials of our heavy industries, and they are the industries, according to all economists, which are still languishing most, and which are still lingering in the return toward prosperity.

The heavy industries are today the weakest point in our economic structure, and, with a strange sort of precision, the Senator from Tennessee has trained his batteries on the weakest point of our entire economic structure in our effort to pull out, if I may use the expression, of this economic bog.

Mr. President, what is depreciation, and what is depletion? I shall not discuss depreciation. That relates to wear and tear and obsolescence of physical properties, plants, buildings, equipment, tools, machinery, and the like, and the allowance for depreciation, as Senators know, is designed to permit the taxpayer to replace his capital out of his gross income in order to perpetuate his business. That allowance is made tax free in order to preserve the very life of industry itself.

What is depletion? Depletion is the return of capital invested in natural resources; through the gradual exhaustion of the quantity or units in the ground; or, in the words of the Treasury Department, "Depletion is the loss sustained through the progressive removal of natural resources, as of mineral deposits."

Depletion is, of course, the exhaustion of a natural resource or of a mineral deposit. The allowance for depletion is the return of capital to the taxpayer out of gross earnings, tax free, in order for replacement and for the continuance of his business, which has a social value, as well as an individual value.

Mr. President, let me illustrate for a moment. If a wholesale grocer or flour merchant buys 100,000 barrels of flour at $3 a barrel, aggregating $300,000, and sells it for $4 a barrel, aggregating $400,000, of course, there is a gross profit of $100,000, out of which expenses would be deducted in order to arrive at net income. But nobody anywhere would suggest that the $300,000 represented in the gross income should be subjected to taxation. That is the merchant's capital; that is what he put in the business; that is what he has a right to take out; and to take it out untaxed. Unless we allow him to do that, we are not only taxing capital but we are destroying business itself.

Take an oil well, or a coal mine, or a copper mine. Every ton of copper taken out of a mine is subtracted from the reserve left in the ground. Every barrel of oil taken out of a well is subtracted from the reserve of oil left in the oil sand. It is a diminution of capital, and, generally speaking, every barrel of oil, we will say, taken out of the ground, in part represents capital, in part represents income. Indeed, it may not represent income at all. The oil may be lifted at a loss, and it may represent capital alone and not income at all. But in almost every instance, I might say, for practical purposes, in every instance, a barrel of oil does represent capital, at least to some extent, as does every ton of coal and every ton of copper taken from the ground. That much is subtracted from the total reserve or deposit in the ground, and, to a certain extent, it represents the capital of the owner of the property, whether an individual or a corporation.

Mr. President, I think it will not be contended that a depletion allowance of some sort should not be granted in the law. I believe that is not denied by anyone, not even by the Senator from Tennessee. Indeed, the report of the Secretary of the Treasury referred to by the Senator not only admitted but insisted that a depletion allowance should be provided for, and went so far as to suggest that the denial of a depletion allowance would, in itself, be unconstitutional as a tax upon capital, in disregard of the rule of apportionment.

His concession did not depend upon the constitutional doubt alone. He added these words:

> The inherent unfairness of disallowing depletion is another controlling argument against it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator has referred to what the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury said. I would be glad at this point to read a paragraph from the report of the Subcommittee of the Committee on Ways and Means, which was referred to in the hearings by Mr. Magill, of the Treasury Department:

> (2) The discovery depletion provisions enable a taxpayer who had paid $10,000 for a piece of property, and has later discovered a mine (other than a metal, coal, or sulphur mine) upon it worth $1,000,000, to deduct depletion on the mine as if he had paid $1,000,000 therefor. The taxpayer is thereby permitted to receive tax free $990,000 of income on which, by any equitable standards, he should pay the tax. To exempt the income of mine owners or of any other class, necessitates simply that the amount be made up by other taxpayers. The Treasury knows of no reason why a limited class of mine owners should be granted a subsidy as compared to other taxpayers. It is therefore recommended that the provisions for discovery depletion be eliminated.
> Our experience shows that the percentage depletion rates set up in the law do not represent reasonable depletion rates in the case of the designated properties, but are much higher than the true depletion to which the taxpayer is fairly entitled. Moreover, these provisions enable a taxpayer to obtain annual depletion deductions, notwithstanding the fact that he has already recovered the full cost of the property. The deduction is, therefore, a pure subsidy to a special class of taxpayers. For this reason the Treasury recommends that these provisions be eliminated, in order to put all taxpayers upon the same footing.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, as one of the witnesses stated in the same hearing, the Assistant Secretary had stated a fantastic case which would not arise in fact and which would not occur in reality. And neither the Assistant Secretary nor did the Senator from Tennessee state that discovery valuation or discovery depletion is not the law today with reference to the oil and gas industry, and has not been the law since January 1926. Discovery depletion is not the law today with reference to coal mines, it is not the law today with reference to metal mines, it is not the law today with reference to sulphur mines. It is the law with reference to rock quarries and sand pits and a few resources of that description. So this terrific argument has no reference to the issue joined in this place at this time.

Mr. President, the Assistant Secretary admits that depletion is essential; that its denial might violate the Constitution and would certainly violate principles of justice and equity. I shall certainly show before I close, I hope, that it would violate principles of sound policy.

I think all will concede, therefore, that depletion of some kind, in some form, is not only desirable but is indispensable for the continuance of these wasting industries.

Senators, this is also true. Any depletion allowance of whatever kind, as applied to these wasting resources and deposits, must in the nature of things be more or less arbitrary. It cannot be based upon scientific principles. It cannot be made to apply with absolute precision without doing injustice in some cases to the taxpayer, and, I admit, without doing in some cases injustice to the Public Treasury. That is a quality inherent in the nature of the thing. It cannot be avoided.

Take a coal mine or a copper mine. Of course, the Senator from Tennessee is insisting upon depletion based upon cost. That is what it comes to. Offhand, one might say, "Well, depletion based upon cost would, of course, be fair and just." Mr. President, what must be done in order to deplete on the basis of cost? First, there must be ascertained or estimated the number of tons of coal or the number of tons of copper in the mine. There must be ascertained or estimated the value of the coal or the copper in the mine. Then the total value must be divided by the total number of tons in order to arrive at the depletion unit per ton.

Not only that; the value of the metal in the ore must be estimated, and the cost of production. There must be ascertained in advance the life of the mine. Not only that, but there must be ascertained the amount of output each year, year by year.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GORE. I will yield for a question; not for a speech.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will not make a speech, but I desire to call the attention of the Senator to a mistake he has made, and I know he does not want to make it. The Senator said that my purpose, by the amendments, is to prevent all depletion allowances. Quite the contrary.

Mr. GORE. I said depletion on the basis of cost, I take it.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; the depletion rule is laid down, which remains as a part of section 114; that is exactly the same rule which is applied to all other corporations, as found on pages 78 and 79 of the bill in section 113 (B), which is, if the Senator will permit me to read it to him:

(B) in respect of any period since February 28, 1913, for exhaustion, wear and tear, obsolescence, amortization, and depletion, to the extent allowed (but not less than the amount allowable) under this act or prior income tax laws. Where for any taxable year prior to the taxable year 1932 the depletion allowance was based on discovery value or a percentage of income, then the adjustment for depletion for such year shall be based on the depletion which would have been allowable for such year if computed without reference to discovery value or a percentage of income.

In other words, the full allowances for depletion will remain, but the subsidy will be taken away. That is the difference.

Mr. GORE. I am coming to that, if the Senator will be patient.

Mr. President, I was observing that any depletion allowance with respect to a wasting mineral deposit must be more or less arbitrary. The Senator from Tennessee insists that the same rule of depletion ought to be applied to the oil industry as to the mining industry; that the same rule should be applied to each and every one without regard to their different characteristics.

Mr. President, I think that scientific taxation ought to take some account of facts, ought to take some account of reality. I think it is as unscientific, indeed it is as unjust, to treat things which are essentially unlike as if they were alike as it is to treat things which are essentially alike as if they were unlike. That is what the Senator from Tennessee has done. That is what the Senator from Tennessee urges the Senate to do.

I need hardly say that the oil industry is unique. It is by nature differentiated from every other kind of business or industry; indeed it is distinguished from every other form of mining or industry. Oil is fugitive in nature, as the courts say, and as the trade says. It flows under the ground from place to place in the oil sand when invited by a well flowing either by gas pressure or by the pump.

Let me give the Senate two or three illustrations which, I think, show that the oil business is different from a conservative business like selling flour. I know of three men in Oklahoma. One of them was at one time a member of this body. They put together $25 in an oil lease. They put $8.33⅓ apiece in that venture and they took down approximately $100,000 apiece.

Of course, under the old law, and as the Senator from Tennessee says, they would deplete on the basis of $25. That would be entirely fair if they could reasonably calculate that the next time they put in $25 they could sell out for $100,000 apiece.

The oil industry is different from other industries. There is more or less uncertainty in every kind of business. The kinds and the degrees of uncertainty vary. But the oil business is based upon the law of probabilities. It hardly has so sure and firm a foundation as that. The oil business is based on the logic of chance. The business itself is nothing more or less than a calculus of chances or of risks. The business is built upon risk. Practically every oil well ever drilled involves a risk, even if it be an offset well. That risk cannot be eliminated from the business; it is an integral part of the business, and those who engage in it must discount that risk. They must be prepared to take the losses which come with dry holes, losses which are inseparable from the business, and those losses must enter into their calculation; otherwise the business could not be operated at all.

Take another case of which I know, some of the individuals involved being personal friends of mine. Twelve men chipped in $175 apiece and bought an oil lease, which they sold for $82,500 apiece. It is the golden stories like that which have lured so many wanton flies into the spider's web of unwonted speculation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BARKLEY. To what extent has the discovery of oil in this country been made by the small pioneer who goes out and prospects, who "wildcats" as we say; and what proportion of the original discovery and development of oil fields has been made by the big companies against whom the Senator from Tennessee has in his amendment sought to inveigh?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, the record shows that approximately one third of all the oil wells which are drilled come in as dry holes, or as practically dry holes. The record shows that approximately one third of all the oil wells which are drilled come in at 25 barrels a day or less, which either never pay the cost of drilling or never return a profit on the investment. The record shows that only one third of all the oil wells which are drilled produce and pay—must bear the cost and the loss of the other two thirds.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. GORE. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is not sought by this amendment to tax those who fail. This amendment would only tax those who have been successful in business. It does not propose to tax failures at all and makes no attempt to do so.

Mr. GORE. That brings me to the point of one other observation in connection with what I was just saying.

There are today 330,000 producing oil wells in the United States; 275,000 of those wells yield an average of 1 barrel of oil a day. Let Senators take notice of the fact that 275,000 oil wells today are producing on the average 1 barrel a day. It seems a trifle, and yet that is more than a quarter of a million barrels of oil every day, and those little wells constitute the shock troops of the industry itself. They are known in the trade as "stripper wells." They have always been a special object of my solicitude and concern.

I said the other day—and I will allude to it again—that Representative MARLAND, who organized the Marland Oil Co., entered into 20 different leases with the State of Oklahoma involving school lands owned by the State. He stipulated to drill 20 test wells on 20 different tracts of school land. By the caprice of fortune the first 19 wells were dry; they did not produce a barrel of oil. The twentieth well produced and was a large producer. The 19 dry holes cost him $500,000; they cost him a half million dollars. Some may say he was trying to serve himself; yes, but he was also trying to serve the State of Oklahoma, trying to serve the school children of Oklahoma, trying to serve the public, the consumers of oil, gas, and gasoline in this country. The lease upon which he produced oil probably cost him $160. Under the strict pharisaical proposition of the Senator from Tennessee, he would allow him to deplete, so far as his loss was concerned, to the munificent amount of $160 and expect the business, which is nothing but a calculus of risk, to proceed upon that basis. Mr. MARLAND brought in the producer while depletion was still limited and before discovery depletion was allowed.

I knew another man, Grant Stebbins, who drilled 27 dry holes before he brought in a producing oil well. He then organized the Gladys Belle Oil Co., which at one time was one of the largest and most prosperous independent oil companies in the midcontinent field; but it fell upon evil days. The risks ran against him. The company failed, and he died, if not of a broken heart, at least broken hearted.

The oil business has been carried on in the past by those who are known as "wildcatters" in the language of the trade. They are the pioneers; they are men who take the risks, who bet everything on a throw of the dice. The industry has pivoted upon the pioneer or upon the wildcatter. They took their own money, their own capital, what little they had; they collected from friends and from neighbors and often took up a pony purse in order to raise the money to drill. In many instances the big concerns would not take the risk of these wildcat wells. They waited until the wildcatter brought in a well, knowing that, as a rule, he was necessitous and hard driven, and then the big concern would buy out the wildcatter, freeze him out, perhaps, reduce the price of oil to make him sell, and then drill wells offsetting the purchased well, in proven territory, thus reducing the risk to an irreducible minimum, and let the wildcatter and his friends bear the brunt of the burden. To deny this liberal depletion to the wildcatter and the pioneer simply destroys that historic figure in our economic development and enthrones the Rockefellers and the Mellons. I am surprised to see the senior Senator from Tennessee officiating at the coronation as master of ceremonies.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GORE. I yield for a question, but I do not want the Senator to inject extraneous matter or even pertinent matter into the remarks I am making. He can do that when I shall have concluded, but for a question I am pleased to yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator is speaking for home consumption, I will not interfere.

Mr. GORE. I thought I could sense a regard for the home market in the Senator's own remarks. He has had a good deal to say about Mellon on this occasion, a great deal more than I have; and I am going to refer to that in a moment.

Mr. McKELLAR. I still stand by it.

Mr. GORE. Very well. This matter of depletion has gone through a course of evolution in this country. It is the outgrowth of experience, and is not the sinister upshot or the offspring of the lobbyist; it does not have the bar sinister on its escutcheon.

Mr. President, the sixteenth amendment, authorizing an income tax to be imposed by Congress, was ratified in February 1913. March 1, 1913, has been taken as a sort of datum line or base line for the ascertainment of the fair market value and other questions concerned with the administration of our income-tax system. The first income tax law was passed by Congress in October 1913. Now I come to one of the Senator's illustrations. He said that under that law the life of an oil well was calculated or estimated or guessed to be 5 years.

Mr. McKELLAR. I assumed that as an illustration.

Mr. GORE. I understood the Senator to say as I have indicated, and I think if he will check his remarks he will find that to be so.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Department fixes the length of time.

Mr. GORE. It does estimate the life of an oil property, but I do not think the Senator said that. If so, I stand corrected and it is all right. I have a speech here made by the Senator on a previous occasion.

The Senator said that the life of an oil property was divided into an arbitrary allotment of 5 years and that they were allowed to deplete—whether capital or not, or cost or not, I do not know what he meant—spread over 5 years at 20 percent per annum.

Mr. President, there was nothing of that sort in the law, and no regulation of that sort could have been adopted under the law. The law did fix a rule for depletion. I have the act here in my hand. It provided that a depletion allowance not exceeding 5 percent of the gross sales of the mineral product at the well or at the mine should be made as a depletion charge—not 20 percent, as indicated by the Senator, not even 5 percent. The language is "not exceeding 5 percent", utterly unscientific. Even that allowance of 5 percent as a maximum in oil, as well as in other mineral resources, has no relationship whatever to the cost of the property. It was not calculated to return in full either cost or capital. It had no relationship whatever to the fair market value of the property on March 1, 1913. It adopted no scientific standard, it was a mere arbitrary rule. At that time we had no lamp of experience to guide us.

Let us take a mine or oil well and assume that its life is 20 years. Assume that exactly one twentieth of the deposits were brought forth every year. Assume that the price is uniform during the years. Assume that all these impossible things will occur at one and the same time during the same period of years, then the owner at the end of 20 years would have depleted on the basis of cost or capital—a set of circumstances which by no stretch of fancy or imagination could ever happen in actual practice.

We enacted another income tax law in 1916, as we did also in 1917. Everyone had realized by that time that the rule of depletion was unscientic and unfair. A new rule was incorporated in those two laws providing that a reasonable allowance for depletion should be made, based upon reduction of flow and production. That sounds rather rhythmical, and it was applied for 2 years or such a matter. It did not work out satisfactorily.

Now we come to the "rawhead and bloody bones" of the Senator from Tennessee—the income tax law called the "act of 1918", but which was approved in February 1919. That measure for the first time incorporated the principle of discovery valuation in case of oil and other mineral resources. That measure was conceived in the midst of the war, although it was not passed until after the armistice. Oil was regarded as a key industry. Oil was regarded as essential to the success of the war. Oil was selling at $3.50 a barrel. Consumption was exceeding production by 60,000 barrels a day.

Realizing the wasting and the hazardous character of the oil industry—and those are two characteristics which are inseparable from the business—Congress, looking at the situation scientifically, saw that the oil industry was different from conservative industries, and it based the depletion policy upon that difference in the nature of things. Congress provided that in case of discovery of an oil and gas well, depletion should be based not on the cost of the lease but upon the value of the lease at the date of discovery or upon a valuation made within 30 days after discovery.

Mr. President, the object of that legislation was to enable a man, particularly the wildcatter and the pioneer, when he was fortunate enough to discover an oil well, fortunate enough to discover an oil field, fortunate enough to serve society and himself, to have some concession based upon the nature of his industry and the character of his risk; so it did provide that depletion might be based upon discovery value.

In the case of Mr. MARLAND, when he brought in his twentieth well, he could have had that lease valued not at $160, as it probably cost, but at a much larger figure, whatever its value would have been. Then he would have been allowed to deplete against discovery value, in order to compensate him to some extent for the capital he had sunk, for the money that he had lost in the 19 unfortunate ventures. That is why it was done.

I had a good deal to do with that legislation. I know the reasons which inspired it. I know that business cannot succeed unless some allowance of that sort is made. If we destroy these venturesome spirits, then we turn industry over to the larger concerns which can take the risk when that risk becomes indispensable to their survival; but as long as they can they will remit that risk and shift it to the wildcatter and the pioneer.

I think the Senator from Tennessee has misunderstood the whole history of subsequent legislation in regard to depletion allowances as applied to the oil and mining industry. The Senator the other day had occasion to animadvert upon Mellon, I believe, and the Republicans and the lobbyists. Heaven knows I am as unwilling as the Senator from Tennessee to vouchsafe any unearned or unmerited praise to the Republicans. I differ from him only in one particular. It is so seldom that our Republican friends are entitled to credit that I really cannot grudge them the accident when it happens to them. [Laughter.] I think it is bad enough to be a Republican and I just let it go at that. [Laughter.]

But the Senator from Tennessee commented upon this discovery legislation enacted by a Democratic House, enacted by a Democratic Senate, approved by a Democratic President. If it be as vicious as the Senator represents, then we must bow our heads and take that blame.

Mr. President, as I said, I had a good deal to do with the enactment of that law. I doubt not that it saved the lives of more than half the independent oil concerns in the country which had discovery wells. It enabled them to survive and to compete in a way with the Standard Oil companies. The Senator from Tennessee seems to think it was a matter of universal application. It was limited to discovery wells, to discovery properties where a man by using his capital had made a discovery and served economic society as well as himself. But it did have certain consequences which were not foreseen. It had certain consequences which I did not foresee. It had certain consequences which the Democratic administration and the Democratic Treasury did not foresee. In some cases it was possible for a man to have a large depletion allowance where he had a low cost and a large output, particularly toward the end of the taxing year, where his depletion allowance may have been excessive and where he could carry that over as against the remaining part of his net income, and cancel that from taxation.

That was undesirable. It was discovered in the course of human and oil events. It was an evil that was unforeseen, but it was an evil which demanded correction; and the Republicans, when they passed a revenue act after coming into power, took the first step toward correcting that unanticipated evil.

In the Revenue Act of 1921 they limited depletion allowance to 100 percent of the net income. That at least met the contingency of these exceptional cases where the depletion allowance could be carried over and used to cancel net income from other sources, and excuse the taxpayer from taxation. That was a corrective measure. That was a remedial measure intended to remedy a mischief which no one is to blame for not having foreseen.

Time passed, and a Republican House, Senate, and President put into effect the Revenue Act of 1924. That reduced the discovery value allowance from 100 percent of the net income down to 50 percent of the net income from the property. The taxpayer could not claim a depletion allowance in excess of 50 percent of his net income, and that still further corrected the mischief to which I have referred.

Then came 1926, and the Revenue Act of 1926 was passed. It still contained the limitation to 50 percent of the net income from the property. It contained an additional limitation—a limitation of which the Senator from Tennessee complains, but a limitation which could operate only in behalf of the Public Treasury.

The act of 1926 provided that the depletion allowance should no longer be based upon discovery value. The Congress abandoned that principle back in 1926, and since that date there has been no discovery depletion so far as oil is concerned. It is continued with reference to certain mines under the act of 1932.

The act of 1926 substituted a percentage depletion for discovery depletion. It provided that the oil producer was entitled to depletion on a percentage basis, and that his depletion should be 27½ percent of his gross income, but in no case to exceed 50 percent of his net income.

Mr. President, I am advised that it is the desire on the part of some Senators to take a recess until Monday.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President——

Mr. GORE. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, for the convenience of Senators who have submitted requests in relation to the order of procedure, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill. There are a number of items in that bill which are more or less of an emergency character. Let me say further that I have consulted the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], and others, and if this agreement shall be entered into, when the legislative appropriation bill shall have been disposed of it is my purpose to move a recess until Monday.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, it was hoped that we would make such progress today on the revenue bill that we might be able to dispose of it before adjournment tonight; but it is apparent that it will be impossible to do so. A good many Senators have requested, because of the arduous nature of the work of this week, that there be no session of the Senate tomorrow. Then, too, the Finance Committee are laboring harder than usual, because we have before us the Moore nomination; and if the Finance Committee tomorrow can give both morning and afternoon to that hearing, we may be able to conclude it. So, if it meets with the approval of the Senator from Arkansas, the Senator from Oregon, and other Senators, it will be perfectly agreeable to me, when we finish the consideration of the legislative bill today for the Senate to recess until Monday, and have no session tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MURPHY in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MARKETING AND PRICES OF SUGAR

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, can the Senator from Mississippi tell me whether there is any definite plan as yet for consideration of the sugar control bill?

Mr. HARRISON. I will say to the Senator that just as soon as we finish up the hearings in the Finance Committee, which has been meeting daily from 10 o'clock until 12 o'clock on the Moore nomination, we expect to call the committee together so that we may consider the sugar bill which was passed by the House the other day. In other words, I had hoped that we might be in such a situation that following the revenue bill we might consider the sugar bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, in view of the statement of the Senator from Mississippi, it is evident that the Finance Committee probably will take up the sugar control bill for final determination within the next 2 or 3 days. Therefore, I am very anxious to submit now certain amendments to that bill which I deem essential from the viewpoint of the beet-sugar industry, if this great agricultural interest shall have even a limited degree of assurance under this unwelcome formula for the restriction of an important cash crop which is not on a domestic-surplus basis.

I desire to say in this connection that I have been cooperating with the Senator from Mississippi, so far as I could, in an effort to facilitate an agreement upon the sugar control bill. It might better be called the "sugar commissar bill." I have done that in spite of the fact that the entire measure is utterly repugnant to my idea of logical legislation with respect to progressive farm relief. But it is at least desirable to mold it into the least objectionable form.

As the bill passed the House one amendment only was made. That amendment is a very essential and satisfactory one and strikes out, on page 16 of the bill, the authority which would have permitted an omnipotent Secretary of Agriculture to bring the sugar-beet farmers of the Nation into complete subservience to all of his orders and all of his whims with respect to all of their crops and all of their activities. I assume, of course, that the Senate will assent to this House amendment. Thus we protect some small element of remaining liberty for the American sugar-beet farmer. He will appreciate this crumb of freedom.

Mr. President, in addition to that amendment, if there is to be any hope of voluntary agreement upon this amazing legislation, there are a few other amendments which I prayerfully recommend to the consideration of the Finance Committee when it meets.

The most important one is an amendment to section 8 (a) of the bill, protecting the presumed right of the continental beet-sugar industry to participate in 30 percent of the increased sugar consumption in the country. The bill as drawn, and to my amazement, as passed by the House of Representatives, adroitly pretends to give the domestic industry the benefit of this 30 percent of the actual increased consumption. But, as a matter of cold fact, it is so drawn that it practically precludes the sharing of one additional ounce of increased consumption by the domestic industry. It is a virtual nullification of this important concession which was supposed to be part of the gentleman's agreement when the sugar-beet interests finally gave their tentative consent to a compromise formula. It is a violation of that agreement.

Therefore we shall most insistently urge, and I say it with great respect, that the 30-percent increased consumption privilege, which continental beets were supposed to get and which these people are astounded to discover has been taken from them, shall be tied not to some vague and perhaps hostile secretarial estimate in the Department of Agriculture but to the specific consumption figure of last year, namely, 6,452,000 short tons raw value. Thus, and thus only, may these farmers be guaranteed this small measure of compensatory comfort which they may anticipate from a modest share of the increased sugar consumption in their own country. I do not enlarge upon the subject now, but I shall do so with some emphasis when the bill faces us on final passage.

Another amendment essential from the viewpoint of the eastern beet-sugar area is the amendment which sets a criterion for the Secretary of Agriculture, in subdividing—east and west—the continental quota of 1,550,000 tons after it shall have been established, and the 30 percent of increased consumption after it shall have been recaptioned by the first amendment to which I have adverted. We seek only to maintain the existing relationship between the eastern and western fields, and in order to do that, and yet to do it without unduly tying the hands of the Secretary, we are asking for the addition of a directory sentence in section 8 (a) which will call upon the Secretary "to maintain, so far as practicable, the present relative status of each of the several continental beet-sugar producing areas or States." Fair play requires this amendment in view of the seeming disclosure that the sugar bureaucrats are even more contemptuous of sugar production in the East than in the West.

The other amendments which I am submitting on behalf of a conference of sugar-beet farming interests and beet-sugar processing interests apply to the penalty clauses of the bill. I refer to the bill as it passed the House in a gagged hurry and as messaged to the Senate yesterday. We strenuously object to any penalty clause attaching to the violation of a mere secretarial regulation, and we equally object to any penal clause involving a jail sentence for a farmer if he shall happen to violate some of the intricate provisions of the law itself. I am sure the new farm dictators can be sufficiently repressive without using the jails as a factor in this farm relief.

Mr. President, I ask permission to submit these amendments, to have them printed, also to have them printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Finance. I reserve my discussion of the bill itself and its inconsistencies and its affronts to agriculture until the measure is before the Senate for conclusive action. The pity is that we may have to take it, if corrected in some of these more glaring particulars, whether we like it or not because of the alternative threat of tariff reductions which menaces this commodity and this industry.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from Michigan without conceding the soundness of his criticisms that the first amendment to which the Senator referred has been, already and in advance of his suggestion, carefully considered by certain majority members of the committee with a view to clarifying the bill as it has come to this body from the House of Representatives. It has been the hope of those who have the bill particularly in charge here to make certain the purposes of the legislation to which the Senator from Michigan refers in his first amendment. Indeed, there now appear to be marked signs of agreement on perfecting language for the purposes the Senator from Michigan apparently has in mind in submitting his first amendment.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I thank the able Senator for his statement. He is always conscientious and accommodating. I feel very sure that if we can all approach this problem in a sense of comity and candor, we can work out a formula which, however repugnant the main theory of the bill may still be, yet will make it as palatable as possible under the circumstances.

I neglected to emphasize one other amendment, which I am sending to the desk. It denies a privilege which is granted to the Secretary of Agriculture in the bill to fix minimum wages in respect to farm labor. I know of no situation yet in which we have undertaken to apply minimum-wage laws to farm labor; and in this particular instance we particularly resent the opportunity which the use of this power would give to the Secretary and his fellow commissars to penalize the sugar-beet industry, if, as, and when there ever should develop any of these suspected purposes to put it out of business. Despite belated assurances to the contrary, we cannot be expected to forget the proofs of hostility which have been entirely too realistic to be comfortable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MURPHY in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Michigan?

There being no objection, the amendments submitted by the Senator from Michigan were ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on Finance, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate bill 3212 shall be amended as follows:

"Section 8a (2), page 8, line 6, strike out all of said paragraph after the word 'section' and insert: 'Provided, however, That for each calendar year there shall be allotted to continental United States not less than 30 percent of any amount of consumption requirements above 6,452,000 short tons raw value.'"

Senate bill 3212 shall be amended as follows:

"In section 8a (1), page 7, line, 5, after the word 'others', insert the following: 'maintaining so far as practicable the present relative status of each of the several continental beet-sugar producing areas or States.'"

Senate bill 3212 shall be amended as follows:

"Section 8a (3), on page 9, line 19, strike out the word 'eliminate' and insert 'limit or regulate'; and, in line 19, strike out all after the word 'labor', all of lines 20, 21, to and including the word 'agreements' in line 22."

Senate bill 3212 shall be amended as follows:

"In section 20 (a), page 17, line 18, strike out all of said paragraph after '$1,000.'

"In section 20 (b), page 18, line 9, strike out all of said paragraph after '$1,000.'

"In section 20 (c), page 18, line 25, strike out all of said paragraph after '$1,000.'"

Senate bill 3212 shall be amended by striking out entirely section (4), page 10, line 6.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. TYDINGS. In conformity with the unanimous-consent agreement, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the legislative appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 8617) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations, with amendments.

Mr. TYDINGS. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Senate—Office of the Secretary", on page 2, line 19, after the word "and", to strike out "$1,000" and insert "$2,000", so as to read:

Financial clerk, $5,000 and $2,000 additional so long as the position is held by the present incumbent.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 24, after the word "clerk", to insert "$4,000 and $1,000 additional so long as the position is held by the present incumbent", so as to read:

Legislative clerk, $4,000 and $1,000 additional so long as the position is held by the present incumbent.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to that amendment. After the words "legislative clerk", in line 24, page 2, I move to insert "and enrolling clerk", and after the semicolon in line 25 I move to strike out the words "enrolling clerk, and."

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, as I heard the Senator state his amendment, it does not modify the committee amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. The purpose of the amendment is to add the enrolling clerk at the same salary as the legislative clerk.

Mr. TYDINGS. Will not the Senator let that go over until we get through with the committee amendments? That is not the amendment we are now voting on. The provision for the enrolling clerk follows the committee amendment in line 25, and is a part of the original bill.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; but my motion is to strike out the provision in the original bill and include it in the provision for the legislative clerk, because there is no good reason why both clerks should not have the same salary. Both are experienced men, and both ought to have the same salary.

Mr. TYDINGS. Very well.

Mr. GEORGE. I move to include, after the words "legislative clerk", in line 24, page 2, the words "and enrolling clerk", so that it will read:

Legislative clerk and enrolling clerk, $4,000, and $1,000 additional as long as the position is held by the present incumbent.

And the word "each" should go in at the proper place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia to the amendment by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, at the end of line 12, to change the total appropriation for salaries in the office of the Secretary of the Senate from $104,130 to $106,344.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in view of the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], I suggest that on line 12, page 3, the total be corrected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, line 12, it is proposed to correct the total.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Committee employees", on page 4, line 3, after the words "additional clerk", to strike out "$1,500" and insert "$1,800", so as to read:

To Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate: Clerk, $3,900; assistant clerk, $2,880; assistant clerk, $2,400; assistant clerk, $2,220; additional clerk, $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 13, before the words "assistant clerk", to insert "assistant clerk, $3,600", so as to read:

Interstate Commerce: Clerk, $3,900; assistant clerk, $3,600; assistant clerk, $2,880; two assistant clerks at $2,580 each; assistant clerk, $2,220.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 16, after the figures "$2,220" and the semicolon, to strike out "additional clerk, $1,800" and insert "two additional clerks at $1,800 each", so as to read:

Irrigation and Reclamation—clerk, $3,900; assistant clerk, $2,580; assistant clerk, $2,220; two additional clerks at $1,800 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senator from Maryland, I should refer to the matter of placing the enrolling clerk and the printing clerk in the category of $4,000 clerks, with $1,000 additional. We agreed to that amendment, but did we eliminate the enrolling clerk and the printing clerk in the $3,540 class?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I have an amendment to be offered later to change the totals and to take out of the bill any duplications.

Mr. FESS. Very well.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 1, before the word "additional" to insert "assistant clerk, $2,000", so as to read:

Territories and Insular Affairs—clerk, $3,900; assistant clerk, $2,580; assistant clerk, $2,220; assistant clerk, $2,000; additional clerk, $1,800.

Deputy Sergeant at Arms and storekeeper, $4,440; clerks—one, $2,640; one at $1,800 from April 1, 1934, to June 30, 1935, both dates inclusive, $2,250; three at $1,800 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Contingent expenses of the Senate", on page 9, line 10, after the word "For", to insert "purchase, exchange,"; and in line

11, after the name "Vice President", to strike out "$4,000" and insert "$9,000, of which $5,000 shall be immediately available", so as to read:

For expenses of inquiries and investigations ordered by the Senate, including compensation to stenographers of committees, at such rate as may be fixed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, but not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, $268,955, of which $150,000 shall be for the fiscal year 1934.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, to be numbered section 5 of the bill, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC 5. For the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of the act entitled "An act to authorize annual appropriations to meet losses sustained by officers and employees of the United States in foreign countries due to appreciation of foreign currencies in their relation to the American dollar, and for other purposes", approved March 26, 1934, and for each and every object and purpose specified therein, to be immediately available, $7,438,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TYDINGS. I send to the desk another amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 6, line 25, it is proposed to strike out the word "Possessions" and insert in lieu thereof "Affairs."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TYDINGS. I also ask that the duplicated language which results from the amendments of the Senator from Georgia on pages 2 and 3 be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, on page 7, line 10, I move to strike out the word "seventy" and in lieu thereof to insert "one hundred and forty", and on page 7, line 11, at the beginning of the line, I move to strike out the word "one" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "two."

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is it the purpose of the Senator's amendment to make the extra clerks for whom we provide permanent or temporary?

Mr. LONG. It is my purpose to make them permanent. The Senate adopted a resolution that these clerks should be hired only during the remainder of the session of Congress.

The facts are, Mr. President, that our mail and our work do not lighten up a bit during the recess of Congress. On the contrary, our mail and the work connected with answering it become more involved and heavier.

I am only a very ordinary Senator, having been here less than 3 years, but I now have around 9,000 letters in my office that my force, with two extra stenographers, working night and day, has been unable to answer. I shall be glad to have any Member of the Senate who wishes to do so look at the unanswered letters I have stacked up in my office.

I have 9,000 letters which have accumulated in my office, which I have not been able to answer, and I cannot answer them now. I am paying out of my salary for two extra stenographers over and above the regular number provided for me, and they are working an average of 12 hours a day in the office.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. The committee went very carefully into that matter. There is rarely a Senator who does not have in his office a larger force than is authorized under existing law, that additional force being paid for, for the most part, by the Senator himself. In order to meet that situation the committee put in an appropriation of $25,000 for extra clerks for the remainder of this session, believing that when the session is over a great deal of mail having to do with legislative matters will cease to come in, and that it will not then be necessary to have the extra clerk.

We gave this subject every consideration, and we felt that we had provided extra help for the remainder of the session in order to supply the Senators with needed assistance, but that we should not go further and put additional clerks in the offices when the Congress will not actually be in session.

Mr. LONG. Of course, the Senator from Maryland has a committee clerk who takes care of certain committee business. On the other hand, those of us who do not have committee clerks have scarcely less mail. I venture the assertion that those of us who do not have committee clerks have just as much work to do as those who do have committee clerks.

As an example, the Senator from Maryland has a committee clerk. The Senator from North Carolina has no such committee clerk. The Senator from Louisiana has no such committee clerk; yet he has as much work as has the Senator from Maryland, or perhaps more than he has. If we have already paid out of our pockets, as all of us have here for many, many months, two and three thousand dollars of our salary for extra clerk hire, and still are unable to catch up with our correspondence, it does not stand to reason that another clerk will enable us to catch up entirely. Furthermore, my mail did not fall off any, and my work did not lessen during the time Congress was not in session.

This is a very small item. It is chinche and penurious and poor economy to deny sufficient help for carrying on senatorial work. Without additional help, there must be delay in answering letters and delay in giving information which people are writing in and asking for—a delay which now amounts to as much as 3 and 4 months.

I have in my office now thousands of letters which are 4 months old. That may sound like an extravagant expression, but I wish Senators would come over to my office so that I could let them see my unanswered mail. I have several thousand letters that I have not been able to answer since this session of Congress met, because I did not have sufficient help, nor did I have sufficient time. They are letters which I felt I could afford to delay answering, as the answers were not as pressing in the case of those letters as in the case of other letters, and I am now working my full force and two extra stenographers all day in my office in order to try to catch up.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. As a matter of fact, the resolution we adopted the other day should have been adopted at the beginning of this session.

Mr. LONG. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. We hope we are nearly through with this session; and the resolution we have adopted giving each of us another clerk for the remainder of the session may not be effective for more than 6 weeks or 2 months. It may be of very little value. I do not know that I shall support the Senator's amendment to make the extra clerks' positions permanent, but I do regret that we did not have the foresight to provide for the extra help at the beginning of the present session. I think all of us have letters in our offices from people of importance, who write us on official matters, which letters should at least be acknowledged. I know I have hundreds, if not thousands, in my office which I have not even been able to acknowledge, and I have been paying an extra clerk out of my own pocket in addition to the regular help which is allowed.

Mr. LONG. We are not only doing that, but in my office we have had to mimeograph forms for replies to most of the letters. We have 10 to 15 mimeograph forms to cover the various letters which come into the office. Even with the use of mimeographed forms, we are obliged to have in my office today three extra employees. The young man who is employed there as my secretary is not drawing the $3,900 a year provided by the Senate, but we are obliged to pay him additional compensation in order to get a man who can handle the work.

We shall be back here, Mr. President, soon after January 1; and I am willing to have the amendment provide that the employment of the extra clerks shall not continue longer than the convening of the next Congress, in order that we may take a look ahead.

I wonder if the Senator from Maryland will accept the amendment if I stipulate that the positions shall continue only until the convening of the next regular Congress.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, there is no doubt at all that there is a great deal of merit in the contention of the Senator from Louisiana. However, the committee viewed the question from every angle; and, speaking for the committee, we felt that if we should provide the extra help for the remainder of this session Senators thereafter would not need the additional help.

I may say that a great deal of the extra work which is now accumulating in senatorial offices is not only due to a lack of help, but it is also due to the fact that Senators do not have sufficient time to go to their offices to dictate letters, even if they did have additional help. We felt, therefore, that having provided the extra clerk for the remainder of the session, with the Treasury in its present condition, we should be the last to ask for additional help during the recess.

Mr. LONG. But, Mr. President, this is not a favor to the Senators. This is a favor to the people who are asking for service from the Senators. It is going to be worse when Congress adjourns, because then the Senators will have to divide their forces. Some of the clerks will be taken home with the Senators and some of them will have to be left in Washington, D.C. Providing an additional clerk will not cure the trouble. On the contrary, if we have four or five employees, we have to leave at least two of them here and take two or three of them with us; so it divides our forces. That, however, has to be done.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Will the Senator yield to me for the purpose of presenting an amendment to his amendment to the effect that Senators shall be provided with an extra clerk to cover the period from now to the first of September? That would give us an opportunity to catch up with the mail in the summer season. I should like to know if that would be satisfactory to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator again state his amendment?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I suggested to the Senator from Louisiana, because of the emergency which he has described to the Members of this body, that instead of providing for an extra clerk from now until January 1 we make provision for one from now until the 1st of September, which would help make it possible for the Members of this body to answer the unanswered mail during the summer season.

Mr. TYDINGS. I shall be glad to take that to conference.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I shall be glad if the Senator will be good enough to take it to conference.

Mr. TYDINGS. There are some other amendments, and I suggest that the Senator from Louisiana perfect his amendment.

Mr. LONG. Very well; I shall do so.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, line 8, after "$2,400" it is proposed to add:

And $1,000 additional so long as the position is held by the present incumbent.

Mr. REYNOLDS. That, Mr. President, relates to the clerk to the Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, to what does that refer?

Mr. NORRIS. Before that amendment is agreed to, I should like to be heard.

Mr. REYNOLDS. That refers to the clerk to the Secretary of the Senate, Colonel Halsey.

Mr. BARKLEY. It seems to me that that is the section which has reference to senatorial clerk hire.

Mr. REYNOLDS. My amendment has reference to the clerk to the Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think the Senator's amendment is offered for insertion at the wrong place. The $2,400 on line 8, page 3, has reference to one of the clerks in the office of the Secretary.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes; that is true.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is that the place the Senator has in mind?

Mr. REYNOLDS. No; I have inserted it in the wrong place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator ask to withdraw his amendment?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I withdraw my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I move the following amendment:

On page 2, line 22, to strike out "$4,500", and to insert in lieu thereof, "$5,000."

Mr. TYDINGS. That amendment is agreeable to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have been unable to be here all the time. I do not understand what that amendment is.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. This amendment proposes to increase to $5,000 the allowance to the journal clerk and parliamentarian. There is no official of the Senate who does as much work, I think, as he does, and I think it is a just amendment, in view of the other amendments which have been agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I inquire what disposition was made of the amendment offered by me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment on page 6, line 2, to strike out the words "one additional clerk at $1,800", and insert "two additional clerks at $1,800 each."

The amendment, if adopted, will provide an additional clerk for the Committee on Mines and Mining. It is not intended to have anything to do with the temporary clerks that have been allowed.

The Committee on Mines and Mining deals with matters in almost every State in the Union, and, while its work may not be as heavy as that of some other committees, although I think it is as heavy as the work of a number of other committees that have additional clerks, the Committee on Mines and Mining has no additional clerk now and never has had.

Any bill that is introduced which is referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining attracts the attention of Senators and of the Members of the House, they begin to call up about it, and from all over the country inquiries come in about it. Moreover, there are a lot of data that come into the office. A clerk ought to be looking after the affairs of the Committee on Mines and Mining all the time. It takes one of my clerks to do that; I have never been allowed an extra one, and I do not think any other chairman of the committee has. In the event that we are allowed a permanent clerk—I do not know whether we are going to be or not—I suppose this amendment could be dealt with in conference. I ask the Senator from Maryland if he will not agree that the Committee on Mines and Mining may have one additional clerk at $1,800?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator from Kentucky that we considered this matter when we were acting on the bill. I cannot agree to the amendment, but in view of the statement he has made, I shall not oppose it; and I shall be glad, if the Senate agrees to it to take it to conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 6, line 2, it is proposed to strike out "additional clerk $1,800" and insert "two additional clerks $1,800 each."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 8, line 15, it is proposed to strike out "$1,740" and insert "$1,920."

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, this amendment applies to the messengers for the press correspondents and we are merely asking for the same salary as is paid the incumbent of a similar position in the House of Representatives. I think in this instance the present rate is due to a mistake and that it was never intended to reduce the salary paid to the employee in the press gallery of the Senate. I trust that the amendment may be allowed at least to go to conference.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I shall not object to the amendment of the Senator from Nevada, and, in fact, I can object only personally, as chairman of the subcommittee, to other amendments; but may I respectfully and with all due deference call attention to the fact that if we make any more increases to this bill we might as well rewrite it? The committee went over the bill and tried to be fair and to keep the amount appropriated down to the lowest possible figure. It is not pleasant for me to refuse the requests of Senators who perhaps need extra clerks, but I hope there will be no more amendments offered for additional clerk hire, in view of the fact that there has been given to each Senator a temporary clerk for the remainder of this session; and this bill ought to be kept down to a reasonable limitation. I hope, therefore, that Senators will not rise and ask the chairman of the subcommittee to acquiesce in more amendments of the character we have just been acting on.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Maryland whether or not my amendment in the nature of the substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] was accepted; that is, the amendment in regard to clerk hire until the 1st of September, which was a compromise with the proposed date of January 1?

Mr. TYDINGS. It was not accepted, according to my recollection; but the Senator from Louisiana was perfecting the amendment. Inasmuch as we expect to adjourn sometime before the 1st of June, I hope the Senator from Louisiana will only ask that the extra clerk be extended for an additional month. That will give all Senators a chance to catch up with their work.

Mr. REYNOLDS. The Senator means a month after the adjournment of Congress?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; a month after the adjournment of Congress.

Mr. REYNOLDS. That is perfectly agreeable to me, and I hope it will be agreeable to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. No; we will just pay it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN].

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, may we have the amendment again stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be again stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 8, line 15, it is proposed to strike out "$1,740" and insert "$1,920."

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, on account of the confusion here, I do not know where that amendment applies nor to whom it applies, but, as nearly as I can gather, what we are doing is to increase the number of clerks to Senators and increase the salaries of those whom they have. I want to protest against that.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to say that it seems to me in these times the Senate ought to give to the country an example of the economy we are exacting of everybody else. I doubt very much whether Senators will, from extra clerks, get the results they are now anticipating. I think I have as much routine work as almost any Member of this body, but if I had a hundred clerks, I do not see how it would save me anything. In that event, the only thing I would be able to do would be to give jobs to more people. A Senator cannot dictate to more than one stenographer at a time, and I think we are going to find that instead of getting relief we are going to get additional trouble, if anything.

Furthermore, Mr. President, we have cut down the salaries of almost everybody, and, while we have an extra amount of work, without any doubt—the condition of the times is bringing it upon us—I do not believe we can get relief in the way now proposed, and I do not believe we ought to give to the country the example of trying to do it in that way. If we do anything, it ought to be in the other direction. I do not know what this particular amendment means; I do not know where it applies; I do not know to what clerk it applies; but it proposes an increase in the salary of someone, and a man in these times ought to feel pretty good if he has a job, even without getting an increase, when so many people are suffering because they have not anything.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I will be forced to announce that from now on the chairman of the subcommittee will feel called upon to make a point of order against these amendments. There are no authorizations in the law for these increases, and I do not believe we ought to raise salaries above the authorization of the existing statute.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not, either; I fully agree with the chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not make that announcement. I have been waiting here to offer an amendment, which the Senator knows I presented sometime ago. I could not appear before the committee because I was engaged elsewhere, but I hope that he will not make so quickly an announcement of his intention.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. I want to say to my friend from Maryland and to my friend from Nebraska, who do not agree so often on matters of economy or on economy bills, but who seem to agree better today, that it looks like we ought to put in this bill at least an appropriation for uniforms for Senators. I believe Senators ought at least to have uniforms out of their salaries. Here is what I get out of mine: I want to speak about myself and my own case, which I take as an example that is typical, I believe. My salary as a United States Senator is about $9,000 a year. I have to pay Mr. Earle J. Christenberry, in order to get someone who can answer my mail, $1,000 out of that $9,000, and that is in addition to the salary allowed him by the Senate. I have to pay some of his expenses. Maybe I could have gotten someone for less. I tried to get someone who could handle the job. I had to get some one who could do it. So out of my salary there goes about $1,600 or $1,700 a year.

In addition to that I have at this time 3 extra stenographers working in the office, seldom less than 3, at a cost of at least $1,200 or $1,400. That makes $3,000 more.

I pay $150 to $200 a month for a little apartment in the city of Washington, D.C., which is another $2,500 a year. That is less than some of the splendid men in the wide open spaces pay for the space they use as a kennel for their dogs. I have one little room where they can roll in a platter of grub, and I have one little room where I can sleep. That brings the amount up to $5,500. If I eat two times a day, and that is not too much, that brings it up to about $6,250 for myself.

Then if I go home a couple of times during the session of Congress, at $150 for the trip, that brings it up to about $6,600. That is $6,600 gone out of my salary and I have not bought a necktie and I have not bought a pair of socks—in fact, I have not bought anything at all—and I have left the magnificent sum of $2,400 a year for clothes and washing, for the support of my family, for the payment of insurance and taxes and everything else.

What the Congress ought to do is to standardize this thing.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. Certainly.

Mr. NEELY. The Senator is wholly overlooking the fact that he receives at least $1,000,000 worth of honor and at least $2,500,000 worth of advertising a year because of his Membership in the Senate. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONG. Sure; and I got a whole lot of that yesterday. [Laughter.]

Mr. NEELY. No; yesterday's advertising was a dead loss, because the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] and the Senator from Louisiana purged the RECORD of all that they said.

Mr. LONG. That leaves $2,400 a year to me. That does not provide for any refreshments; it does not include anything on the side, no picture shows or anything of that kind. That also contemplates that I can put the family in some asylum or some place to live until I can get back down to Louisiana to live on the bank of the creek with them.

At least, Mr. President, we ought to standardize the thing. When we came to consider the situation in the Louisiana State University and I saw that the students of that college could not live in the ordinary environment of life, I prescribed a uniform for every student so that no one could look any better than the others. I prescribed a daily menu for them. I prescribed exactly the size of bed each student should have. I let him change sheets twice a week, and no more.

Now the time has come when we ought to do one of two things: We ought either to recognize the fact that Senators are not expected to have anything here, to recognize that we have to have an income to come here to a millionaire's club on the one side, or else go back to some penurious squalor on the other side, or else give Senators enough to enable them to live decently.

The other alternative is to standardize things. Let us have a uniform for Senators. [Laughter.] Let us prescribe a standard uniform. We could have a uniform for $8.17 like I bought for the inmates of the State penitentiary. When I let a man out of the pen down in Louisiana I bought him a suit of clothes for $8.17. I gave the inmates two suits a year.

So I suggest that we standardize the thing here. Let us do that so we will not have to have our Senators spending the last copper cent they have, and some of them spending what they have not got, to pay stenographers and clerks to answer letters. Maybe some Senators can get by without answering letters. I cannot. I cannot get by without answering letters. I have pretty well kept up with them. I have to have a mimeograph, and by having my letters mimeographed I have to fill in only one little paragraph. I have it pretty well systematized, and yet we are 'way behind.

Talk about spending money! We are spending money by the billions and billions of dollars to bring back prosperity. The N.R.A. and every other governmental agency is spending money, and yet a United States Senator has to work his help 12 and 14 hours a day, and sometimes maybe even longer than that, sometimes Saturday and sometimes Sunday, and yet we talk about this little old two-bit chinchy economy when we are spending billions and billions of dollars.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I desire to offer an amendment to the effect that each Senator who shall make certificate to the effect that he is desirous of employing and needs the services of an extra clerk shall be provided with one at a maximum salary of $150 per month from now until the 1st day of next January.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that there is an amendment pending now offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN]. Let the amendment be stated again.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 8, line 15, to strike out "$1,740" and insert "$1,920."

Mr. REYNOLDS. What is the meaning of the amendment? To whom does it apply?

Mr. MCCARRAN. Mr. President, it relates to a messenger in the press gallery. We are trying to get for him the same salary that is paid for the same service in the House press gallery.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Insofar as I am concerned, I am agreeable. I thought it related to the question I had in mind.

Mr. LONG. No; we will vote on that later.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I make inquiry of the Senator in charge of the bill [Mr. TYDINGS] whether the increases which are proposed have been estimated for pursuant to the rule of the Senate and the law, and whether or not they are subject to a point of order.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, the increases which the committee made were made pursuant to law. The increases which have been made and proposed on the floor are in addition to those made by the committee and are not authorized by law.

Mr. KING. Then it seems to me the Senator in charge of the bill—and I say this with utmost respect——

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator in charge of the bill has been too generous, but I had no idea the amendments would reach the number they have.

Mr. KING. I make the point of order against the amendment that it has not been estimated for pursuant to law.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I desire to invite attention to a situation which I think Senators here will appreciate. I have no desire at all to increase the expenses involved in clerical assistance to Members of the Senate or to anyone else.

When I became Chairman of the Committee on the Library I was amazed to discover that the committee had no clerk. I had to transfer my regular office clerical force, under some ruling of the financial clerk or under some provision in an appropriation bill, to the Library Committee. The bill now before us provides a clerk for the committee, at $3,900 a year; an assistant clerk, $2,400; another at $2,220; and one at $1,800; but those are the same clerks I had before I became Chairman of the Library Committee.

The Committee on the Library now is engaged in supervision of the construction of an addition to the Congressional Library to cost more than $6,000,000. As Chairman of the Committee on the Library, I am also Chairman of the Joint Committee on the Library of the two Houses, and Chairman of the Joint Commission on the Library in charge of the construction of the addition to the Congressional Library costing more than $6,000,000. Yet as chairman of those three committees I have no clerical assistance whatever except the regular clerks I have had in my own office.

It does seem to me, under such circumstances, that the Committee on the Library, engaged in this important work, ought to have a clerk whose sole duty it would be to look after the affairs of the Committee on the Library.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. FESS. I sincerely hope the Senator in charge of the bill will regard this suggestion with sympathy. I was Chairman of the Committee on the Library for many years. I have recognized all along the necessity for a permanent clerk for that committee. We had a room in the Capitol which is designated as the room of the Joint Committee on the Library. There is no permanent clerk of the committee to keep its records. As the Senator from Kentucky has said, he is not only Chairman of the Senate Committee on the Library but he is Chairman of the Joint Committee on the Library of the two Houses, and Chairman of the Joint Commission on the Library having charge of the construction of the addition to the Congressional Library.

Not only that, but during the recesses of Congress the chairman of the joint committee is not only the head of the committee but he is the whole committee, because the rules provide that the Senate members of the joint committee are to officiate during the recesses of Congress. That is the law. We have not any permanent place for the records, and it is one of the most important committees we have so far as records go. It does seem to me that we ought to have a permanent clerk for that committee.

Mr. BARKLEY. In addition to what I said awhile ago and what the Senator from Ohio has said, I will say that the chairman of this committee has to inspect every contract. He has to inspect every advertisement for bids. Together with the Architect of the Capitol, he has to inspect all the contracts, all the bids, and the work that is being done in the construction of the addition to the Congressional Library. Under these circumstances, there ought to be somebody in the committee room to keep a record of these transactions.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator has made a very good showing that this committee ought to be provided with a clerk. Where we have a case like that, we ought to provide for it. However, that has not anything to do with the motion which is pending, or with the other matters that have been brought up.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I realize that.

Mr. NORRIS. From what the Senator has said, it seems to me the Committee on the Library ought to have a clerk. I supposed they had one.

Mr. BARKLEY. No, sir.

Mr. NORRIS. That is news to me.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall withdraw the point of order, not knowing to just what it would apply, and let the point of order be raised with respect to specific cases.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I do not wish to surrender the committee's position, but I do feel that facts have been adduced by the Senator from Kentucky with which the committee was not familiar. While I shall not make the point of order, if the Senate feels, under the circumstances, as I feel individually, that the Senator from Kentucky is entitled to another clerk while these extraordinary duties are devolving on him, I shall not object.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, on page 5——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McKELLAR in the chair). The Chair will state to the Senator from Kentucky that there is an amendment pending which should first be disposed of.

Mr. BARKLEY. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Now, the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky will be in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. On page 5, line 20, I move to strike out "assistant clerk" and to insert in lieu thereof "two assistant clerks", so that there will be two at $2,400 each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 5, line 20, it is proposed to strike out "assistant clerk, $2,400", and insert "two assistant clerks at $2,400 each."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I hope Members of the Senate will not offer additional amendments at this time unless they have a very strong case, such as the Senator from Kentucky had, because I shall feel called upon to make the point of order against any further amendments.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, since we have granted one additional clerk to the Senator from Kentucky, which I was willing to do and voted for, and since we have granted one to another Senator, I move that we add in the bill the following line:

And a clerk for the senior Senator from Louisiana.

The only difference between this amendment and the others is that we just let it be known that I am getting my clerk. There is no other difference.

I understood that the Senator from Maryland would consent to my offering my amendment. I see no reason why I cannot move to strike out in line 7, page 7, the word "seventy" and insert the words "one hundred and forty."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana offers an amendment, which will be stated.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator make the point of order against the amendment?

Mr. TYDINGS. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I think I have the floor. As I understood, the Senator from Louisiana offered an amendment, and therefore his amendment is out of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A point of order was made to it. The amendment is not authorized by law or reported by a standing committee, and therefore it is not in order. A point of order has been made, and the Chair has sustained it.

Mr. NEELY obtained the floor.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I make a point of order. I had already offered this amendment, and it was pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. NEELY. I do.

Mr. LONG. I had already offered this amendment when the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] rose and asked if, as a compromise, we could not agree on letting these clerks stay until September 1; and the Senator from Maryland said he would be glad to take that to conference, as I understood. I think the RECORD will bear me out. I do not think the Senator from Maryland ought to interpose the point of order now. If he will take it to conference, if there is any trouble in the conference, I shall not object.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I will take the amendment to conference, but I will not agree to keep it in the bill in conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the amendment?

Mr. LONG. The amendment is as follows:

On line 13, page 7, after the word "chairman", insert the following:

Seventy additional clerks at $1,800 each, one for each Senator having no more than 1 clerk and 2 assistant clerks for himself or for the committee of which he is chairman, not, however, beyond the 1st day of September 1934.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I ask that the question be put to ascertain the temper of the Senate. If the Senate feels that we ought to have extra clerks here during the recess, of course, it can so determine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland withdraws his point of order. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let it be stated, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 7, line 10, it is proposed to strike out "70" and insert "140."

Mr. LONG. No, Mr. President. Add the following lines. Just start at the word "seventy", in line 10, and read through to "chairman", in line 13; repeat that language, and then add "not, however, beyond the 1st day of September 1934", so that the additional 70 will not take the same status as the other 70, but will go off the roll on the 1st day of September, while the regular ones go on.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I merely desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that yesterday the Senate agreed to a resolution authorizing any Senator who stated that he needed an additional clerk to appoint such a clerk for the remainder of the session.

The statements made to me as Chairman of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate by a number of Senators were to the effect that during the session they were unable to keep up with their correspondence with the clerical assistance now in their offices; but I think every Senator who talked to me on the subject admitted that when Congress adjourned there would be no justification for having the additional clerks. I think the resolution heretofore agreed to has provided all the assistance that Senators can reasonably expect to receive at this time, and that we should not now provide additional clerks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. I understand that the Senator from South Carolina has a committee, however, so that he has one of these clerks.

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. LONG. So the Senator from South Carolina is not affected by it.

Mr. BYRNES. Yes. I say to the Senate that the resolution as it passed provided that any Senator could secure a clerk in the way I have stated. As originally introduced and reported the resolution provided that as to those Senators who had only four clerks that might be done. At the request of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] the resolution was amended so that any Senator who made a statement in writing that he needed an additional clerk could have one. So far as the Senator from South Carolina is concerned, he does not intend to make such a statement, so that the resolution does not affect him.

Mr. LONG. I know; but the Senator from South Carolina has a committee clerk.

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. LONG. And I have not. That is the difference. The Senator from South Carolina has got his food and I have not got mine.

Mr. BYRNES. No; but when the Senator files a statement that he needs an additional clerk he will then have five clerks, just as I have.

Mr. LONG. Until Congress adjourns.

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. LONG. But the Senator's committee clerk continues on when a session of Congress ends.

Mr. BYRNES. That is true. He stays here and looks after the work of the committee.

Mr. LONG. Yes; that is the difference.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir.

Mr. REYNOLDS. As I understand, I have before the Senate at the present time a motion to the effect that each Senator who makes a statement to the effect that he is desirous and needful of assistance shall have an additional clerk whose employment shall continue until September 1, and not be discontinued with the adjournment of the present session of Congress.

Mr. LONG. That is my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As the Chair understands, that is the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. REYNOLDS. No; I offered that amendment.

Mr. LONG. No; I offered it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be regarded as offered jointly by the Senator from North Carolina and the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. REYNOLDS. The Senator from Louisiana offered the amendment after I offered it.

Mr. LONG. Let it be regarded as the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 7, line 13, after the word "chairman", it is proposed to insert:

Seventy additional clerks at $1,800 each, 1 for each Senator having no more than 1 clerk and 2 assistant clerks for himself or for the committee of which he is chairman, not beyond the 1st day of September 1934.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I just want to say that I do not think Senators who have a committee clerk and who have not any more work to do than we have to do ought to take the position that they are going to vote down our having a clerk who will not be paid anything like the amount their committee clerk is paid, and will be employed for only half the time. Their committee clerks draw salaries——

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I have an amendment before the Senate.

Mr. LONG. I am speaking on it. I am making a speech.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is not sustained. The Senator from Louisiana has the floor.

Mr. LONG. For instance, the clerk of the Committee on Mines and Mining gets $3,900 a year. Look at the Appropriations Committee clerk. He gets something like that, I guess. I have not the exact amount here. The Banking and Currency Committee clerk gets $3,900. They close up the Committee on Banking and Currency when Congress is not in session.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think the Senator unknowingly is making an inaccurate statement. Three thousand nine hundred dollars is the salary of a Senator's secretary, whether he be a committee chairman or a Senator without a committee. The committee clerks receive, I think, $75 more than the second clerk in every Senator's office.

Mr. LONG. What does that make the salary?

Mr. TYDINGS. Most of the committees have no clerks, so that a Senator who is a committee chairman has all his own work to do and all the committee work to do in addition, with no extra force whatsoever.

Mr. LONG. That applies to some few committees, Mr. President; but at least these that I am now reading have clerks. Here they are.

Mr. TYDINGS. They are for every Senator, whether he is a committee chairman or not.

Mr. LONG. To be sure; there they are. They have them. There is the Committee on Immigration. There is a list of them as long as from Dan to Beersheba.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Committee on Immigration, I think, only has four clerks, and they are the regular Senator's clerks. That committee has no clerk whatever; so that if the Chairman of the Committee on Immigration were to resign from his chairmanship tomorrow he would have exactly the same force in his office that he now has as chairman of the committee.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I am not disputing that.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator said awhile ago that committee clerks got $3,900. That statement is absolutely incorrect.

Mr. LONG. What do they get, as shown here on page 3, line 19?

Agriculture and Forestry—clerk, $3,900; assistant clerk, $2,880.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is what I am trying to tell the Senator, but he will not listen. I say to the Senator that each Senator has four clerks. The top clerk gets $3,900; the lowest, $1,800. Then, if he happens to be a committee chairman in addition, he gets no extra clerk, but has to make the regular force do the committee work as well as his regular work, except in the cases of two or three or four of the important committees.

Mr. LONG. And in these two or three or four cases they get how much? I believe it is $3,975. We are not asking for that much. We are asking for only $1,800. We are asking for less than the others are getting.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I make a point of order against this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order must be sustained.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, line 8, after "$2,400", it is proposed to add the following, "and $1,000 additional so long as the position is held by the present incumbent."

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I make a point of order against that amendment. It is not authorized by law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, on page 32, line 2, I move to strike out the word "and." I desire to be heard on this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana is recognized.

Mr. LONG. I again appeal to the good judgment of the Senator from Maryland. Unless my ears do not hear things aright, and my mind does not remember them aright, the RECORD will show that twice the Senator from Maryland and myself were together on this matter and agreed that we were going to let this amendment be adopted and go to conference. I have believed that if I could have the opportunity of taking the Senator from Maryland to my office he would not hesitate to stand for my having an extra clerk.

Mr. President, as I view the matter, no harm would be done. If there is an objection by the House, I will not insist on it, and I will not complain.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. The Senator from Maryland is not the only Senator who has a right to raise a point of order, and if these amendments are to be continually made to increase the patronage for the Democrats or for the Republicans I am going to exercise my right to my point of order, and I shall do so as to the amendment to which the Senator from Maryland objected, whether he withdraws his point of order or not.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the clerk be authorized to correct the totals in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The question now is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, his report and recommendation concerning the claim of the Moffat Coal Co. against the United States, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from Hon. L. L. MCCANDLESS, Delegate from Hawaii, transmitting copy of a wireless message from Samuel K. Dias, deputy county clerk of Kauai County, Hawaii, embodying a resolution adopted by the Kauai County Board of Supervisors, protesting against provisions of the so-called "Jones-Costigan sugar bill", which are regarded as discriminatory against the sugar industry in the Territory of Hawaii, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by Local Lodge No. 249, International Association of Machinists, of Ironton, Ohio, favoring the prompt passage of the so-called "Fletcher-Rayburn stock exchange bill", which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by a Woman's Home Missionary Society (no address given), favoring the passage of the so-called "Patman motion picture bill", being House bill 6097, providing higher moral standards for films entering interstate or foreign commerce, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from C. William Kinsman, chairman of the City Fusion Sixth A.D. Taxes Committee of the Bronx, New York City, N.Y., relative to the pending revenue bill, taxes, and so forth, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. KEYES presented a resolution adopted by the Concord (N.H.) Rifle Club, protesting against the passage of legislation proposing to restrict the possession of firearms in the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CAPPER presented petitions, numerously signed, of sundry citizens of Atchison, Cummings, and Kansas City, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the passage of the so-called "Patman bill", providing for the payment of adjusted-service certificates of ex-service men in new currency, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HEBERT presented the following resolutions of the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island, which were referred to the Committee on Finance:

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND, ETC.,
IN GENERAL ASSEMBLY,
January Session, A.D. 1934.

Resolution requesting Congress to investigate through a specially designated committee thereof certain activities of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs

(Approved Mar. 14, 1934)

Whereas the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs has from time to time submitted estimates to the Congress of the United States, and to certain committees thereof, of the probable costs to the Government of measures advocated in behalf of disabled veterans and their dependents; and

Whereas the American Legion, Department of Rhode Island, believes that such estimates have been consistently misleading to the Congress and to the public and have been grossly unfair to veterans and their dependents in that the people of the United States have received an erroneous impression concerning the probable cost to the taxpayer, and have been apathetic toward these measures as a result thereof: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be requested to investigate, through a specially designated committee thereof, the activities of said Administrator of Veterans' Affairs in connection with the above matters, with a view to ascertaining true estimates of the so-called "four-point program of rehabilitation" advocated by the American Legion; and, further, to inquire into the source of information upon which the estimates submitted by the Administrator were based, and the influence, if any, which prompted the issuance of such misleading statements; and be it further

Resolved, That the general assembly respectfully requests the Senators and Representatives of Rhode Island in the Congress of the United States to give their sincere efforts to secure the passage of such legislation as will enable the Senate or the House of Representatives of the United States to conduct such investigation; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted by the secretary of state to the Senators and Representatives of Rhode Island in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. HEBERT also presented the following resolutions of the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND, ETC.,
IN GENERAL ASSEMBLY,
January Session, A.D. 1934.

Resolution recommending to Congress passage of a resolution expressing the earnest hope that the German Reich will speedily alter its policy toward its minority groups

(Approved Mar. 15, 1934)

Whereas there are now pending in the files of the Committees on Foreign Relations in the Senate and in the House of Representatives of the United States resolutions regarding the discrimination of the German Reich toward its minority groups; and

Whereas the treatment of these minority groups has shocked the conscience of mankind and violated the principles of humanity; and

Whereas on many historic occasions from 1840 to 1919, intercessions have been made by the United States on behalf of citizens of states other than the United States, oppressed or persecuted by their governments or peoples, indicating that for nearly 100 years the traditional policy of the United States has been to take cognizance of such invasion of human rights; and

Whereas the German Reich stands pledged to the United States to accord to its "nationals who belong to racial, religious, or linguistic minorities * * * the same treatment and security in law and in fact as other nationals"; Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island expresses its profound feelings of surprise and pain upon learning of the discriminations and oppression imposed by the Reich upon its minority groups; and be it further

Resolved, That the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island expresses its earnest hope that the German Reich will speedily alter its policy and restore to its minority groups the civil and political rights of which they have recently been deprived; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state transmit a copy of this resolution to each Senator and Representative of the State of Rhode Island in the Congress of the United States and that they be urged to use their influence toward the passage of a similar resolution by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. HEBERT also presented the following resolutions of the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island, which were referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs:

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND, ETC.,
IN GENERAL ASSEMBLY,
January Session, A.D. 1934.

Resolution urging the President of the United States, as Commander in Chief of the armed forces, to order the training of naval recruits at the United States naval station at Newport

(Passed Jan. 26, 1934)

Whereas the State of Rhode Island ceded and conveyed to the United States of America Coasters Harbor Island, in the waters of Narragansett Bay, for the purpose of establishing a training station thereon; and

Whereas the first naval-training station in America was established thereon June 4, 1883; and

Whereas the United States Government has erected on Coasters Harbor Island buildings and improvements valued at over $10,000,000; and

Whereas since 1883 up until July 1, 1933, the United States Navy efficiently and at low cost has trained thousands of recruits at said station; and

Whereas the New England recruiting area for the Navy is one of the most fertile in the United States; and

Whereas statistics show that the cost of recruiting and transporting men to be trained on the Atlantic coast is less if trained at Newport than elsewhere; and

Whereas reports of the United States Navy show that conditions for the training of recruits at Newport, R.I., are healthy; that the environment is clean; that the plant is adequate; and that costs are low; and

Whereas the United States Navy has now commenced a program of recruiting and training additional men for the naval service; and

Whereas not only are the citizens of the city of Newport and all the State of Rhode Island interested in having recruits for the United States Navy trained at Newport, but it is more economical and advantageous for the United States Navy to do so and for the benefit of all the taxpayers of the United States: Now, therefore, be it, and it is hereby,

Resolved, That the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations in January session assembled urge the President of the United States of America, as Commander in Chief of the armed forces of the United States, because of the advantages to the United States, to order the training of naval recruits at the United States Naval Station at Newport, R.I.; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state be, and he hereby is, directed to forward copies of this resolution, certified under the seal of this State, to the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Navy, and to the Members of the United States Congress from the State of Rhode Island.

Mr. HEBERT also presented the following resolutions of the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island, which were ordered to lie on the table:

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND, ETC.,
IN GENERAL ASSEMBLY,
January Session, A.D. 1934.

Resolution expressing to Congress the approval of the State of Rhode Island of the measure included in the revenue bill now pending before Congress providing for a tax of 5 percent per pound upon coconut and sesame oils; also endorsing the amendment to include all other foreign competing fats and oils

(Approved Apr. 3, 1934)

Whereas there is now pending before Congress a revenue bill in which is included a tax of 5 percent per pound upon coconut and sesame oils; and

Whereas the members of this general assembly feel that, since the importation of these oils is very heavy, the import of coconut oil in 1933 amounting to something like 250,000,000 pounds, and comes into direct competition with fish oils, in order to protect the citizens of this country, it is imperative that this tax should be supported: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the members of the general assembly of the State of Rhode Island respectfully and earnestly pray the Senators and Representatives from Rhode Island in Congress to support vigorously this measure intending to tax coconut and sesame oils and the amendment to include all other foreign competing fats and oils; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state is authorized and directed to transmit duly certified copies of this resolution to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from Rhode Island.

CARRIAGE OF MAIL BY AIR—AMENDMENT

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to submit, have printed, printed in the RECORD, and to lie upon the table an amendment in the nature of a substitute for Senate bill 3170, to revise air mail laws, proposed to be offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR], and myself, together with an accompanying statement explanatory of the amendment.

There being no objection, the amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. AUSTIN, Mr. DAVIS, and Mr. BARBOUR was ordered to lie on the table, to be printed, and, with the accompanying statement, to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Amendment in the nature of a substitute intended to be proposed by Mr. AUSTIN, Mr. DAVIS, and Mr. BARBOUR to the bill (S. 3170) to revise air-mail laws, viz: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That section 3 of the Air Mail Act, approved February 2, 1925, as amended (U.S.C., supp. VII, title 39, sec. 463), is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 3. The rate of postage on air-mail letters shall be 5 cents for each ounce or fraction thereof. The rate of postage on air-mail postal cards, which the Post Office Department is hereby authorized to furnish in distinctive design, shall be 2 cents each.'

"SEC. 2. Section 4 of the Air Mail Act, as amended (U.S.C., supp. VII, title 39, sec. 464), is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 4. The Postmaster General is authorized to provide for the transportation of air mail over an air-mail route by any carrier operating aircraft over such route, under authority of the Department of Commerce, on a fixed daily schedule. The Postmaster General shall pay compensation for such transportation at the fixed rate of 2 mills per pound-mile, except that the average compensation paid to any carrier for transportation over any route shall not exceed 50 cents per airplane-mile in any calendar year.'

"SEC. 3. Section 6 of the Air Mail Act, as amended (U.S.C., supp. VII, title 39, sec. 465c), is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 6. (a) The Postmaster General shall, upon the application of any carrier who held a route certificate on February 9, 1934, issue to the holder in substitution therefor a route warrant, unless the applicant has been adjudged, as hereinafter provided, to be disqualified under section 3950 of the Revised Statutes (U.S.C., title 39, sec. 432). Such route warrant shall be for a period of not exceeding 10 years from said date, and shall provide that the holder thereof shall have the right—so long as he complies with all rules, regulations, and orders that may be issued by the Postmaster General for meeting the needs of the Postal Service and adjusting mail operations to the advances in the art of flying, passenger and express transportation, and advances in national defense—to carry air mail over the route set out in such warrant, or any modification thereof, at the rates fixed under the terms of this act as amended. Nothing in this section shall be construed to invalidate any route certificate.

"'No person shall be denied such a route warrant for the reason that he, or his predecessor, is asserting or has a claim against the United States because of a prior annulment of any contract or route certificate by the Postmaster General.

"'Every person whose contract has been annulled by the Postmaster General shall be entitled to sue the United States to recover such sum as will justly remedy the damages caused to him by such annulment, in the manner provided by paragraph 20 of section 24 or by section 145 of the Judicial Code, as amended, notwithstanding the amount in controversy. Any appropriation out of which payments upon the said contracts were authorized to be made is hereby made available for payment of such damages.

"'No person shall be presumed by the Postmaster General to be disqualified to contract for carrying the mail, or to exercise such route warrant, by virtue of the provisions of section 3950 of the Revised Statutes (U.S.C., title 39, sec. 432); but every such person who may be accused thereof shall be tried and adjudged disqualified in a district court of the United States in the judicial district wherein is the residence of such person sought to be disqualified under said section 3950 of the Revised Statutes (U.S.C., title 39, sec. 432), before the Postmaster General shall deny such route warrant to him for such cause.

"'Whenever the status of ineligibility is intended by the Postmaster General to be asserted against one who held a contract or certificate February 9, 1934, the Postmaster General shall invoke the jurisdiction of said court by a complaint setting forth the essential facts constituting the alleged offense presented to a district judge of said district. Said judge shall immediately call to his assistance, to hear and determine the complaint, two other district judges. Said complaint shall not be heard or determined until at least 10 days after notice of hearing and copy of complaint have been served upon the accused.

"'No person shall be disqualified because of combinations to prevent competitive bidding, or agreements respecting air-mail routes established under the act of April 29, 1930 (U.S.C., supp. VII, title 39, secs. 464, 465c, 465d, 465e, and 465f), unless a majority of judges shall determine after hearing, by three judges, according to the usual procedure in district courts of the United States, that said combinations or agreements were made fraudulently and collusively and illegally by such person.

"'Any such warrant may be canceled by the Postmaster General at any time for willful neglect on the part of the holder to carry out any rule, regulation, or order, or for any violation of this act as amended. Notice of such intended cancelation shall be given in writing by the Postmaster General, and 45 days from the date of service of the notice shall be allowed the holder in which to show cause why the warrant should not be canceled.

"'(b) It shall be unlawful for any person holding a route warrant under this act to have any financial interest in or to participate in the management of any other air-mail line or part thereof which is competitive in transcontinental service, or to control, be controlled by, or be under the common control with another person holding a route warrant issued under this act or a route certificate, for another competitive transcontinental line or part thereof. The term "person", when used in this subsection, includes individual, partnership, association, and corporation. For the purposes of this subsection a person having the power (whether or not legally enforceable, and whether exercisable directly or indirectly) to manage the affairs or direct the policies of another person shall be deemed to have control of such other person.'

"SEC. 4. Section 7 of the Air Mail Act, as amended (U.S.C., supp. VII, title 39, sec. 465d), is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 7. (a) The Postmaster General, when in his judgment the public interest will be promoted thereby, may extend or consolidate routes which existed on February 9, 1934, or which may be established after such date under this act, as amended, and may modify accordingly the warrants for the routes thus extended or consolidated, and may establish a new air-mail route and issue a route warrant therefor, in any case where such route or extension of a route does not duplicate any route set out in a route warrant issued and in force under this act, as amended, the holder of which has a letter of authority from the Department of Commerce for the carrying of passengers over the route set out in such warrant. No route warrant shall be issued for any contemplated route or be modified for any extension of a route under this section to or for any carrier which has not owned and operated an air transportation service over such route or extension, as the case may be, for a period of 6 months or more prior to the issuance of such warrant. Route warrants issued under this section shall have the same force and effect and be subject to the same conditions and limitations as in the case of route warrants issued under section 6 of this act, as amended.

"'(b) Any extension in effect on the date of enactment of this amendatory section or any route or extension established after such date under this section over which an air-mail service has been operated for a period of 12 consecutive months, shall be canceled by the Postmaster General whenever the average plane load of mail carried between stations over the entire distance of the route or extension does not exceed 25 pounds per day for any consecutive 3 months of operation after the expiration of such 12-month period, except that any extension forming the whole or part of the main-line route of the holder of a route warrant may, in the discretion of the Postmaster General, be exempted from cancelation under this subsection."

"SEC. 5. The Air Mail Act, as amended, is further amended by adding, after section 9, the following additional sections:

"'SEC. 10. The Postmaster General, if in his judgment the public interest will be promoted thereby, upon application of any carrier which has exchanged its route certificate for a route warrant on or before July 1, 1934, may pay such carrier for transportation of air mail an amount in addition to the fixed pound-mile rate provided in section 4 of this act, as amended. Such amount shall be determined by the Postmaster General upon a formula, standardized for all operators and calculated to create a financial inducement and incentive to competitively develop the aeronautical industry, to improve its efficiency to the end of making it self-supporting, to encourage the development of safety, speed, additional space for carriage of passengers and express, and to promote the national defense.

"'SEC. 11. (a) When used in this act the term "pound-mile" shall mean the transportation of 1 pound of air mail 1 mile.

"'(b) For the purpose of computing compensation for transportation of air mail under this act the mileage for transportation between any points having more than one connecting route shall be the mileage of the shortest route between such points.

"'SEC. 12. The Postmaster General shall promulgate forthwith the formula, referred to in section 10 hereof, for determining the rates of payment in addition to the fixed pound-mile rate to be made to route warrant holders transporting air mail under this act. He shall publish in his annual report said formula, the payments made thereunder, and the improvements in the standard of efficiency, economy, safety, speed, space for the transportation of passengers and express, and contribution to the national defense upon which said additional payments were based.

"'SEC. 13. The Postmaster General shall provide in the rules, regulations, and orders made by him under section 5 of this act standards of qualification of pilots, including experience in operating aircraft on night schedules, standards of working conditions for pilots, copilots, mechanics, and laborers, which shall not be less safe and efficient than working conditions in effect in 1933, and standards of compensation to be paid by the holder of such warrant to such employees, which shall be not less than the rate of compensation paid by air-mail carriers during 1933, unless the same be changed from time to time through the medium of collective bargaining through representatives of their own choosing, or other bargaining, standards for landing fields, lighthouses, radio stations, and other means of communication and aids to navigation, as well as standards of planes and their equipment.'"

The statement above referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR AUSTIN, OF VERMONT, SENATOR DAVIS, OF PENNSYLVANIA, AND SENATOR BARBOUR, OF NEW JERSEY, IN EXPLANATION OF AN AMENDMENT IN THE NATURE OF A SUBSTITUTE TO BE PROPOSED BY THEM TO S. 3170

The existing law relating to contracts for carrying air mail was framed for the objectives of developing the volume of mail and fostering commercial aviation, for the purpose of promoting the national defense, improving our national position in industry and commerce, and making air transportation self-supporting.

Before the adoption of the McNary-Watres Act the scheme of air-mail routes, which had grown a little at a time, was illogical. There were short lines and there were long lines, which the McNary-Watres Act authorized the Postmaster General to extend or to consolidate, to develop the aeronautical industry. As administered, the effect of the law was to consolidate the short, detached, and failing lines into well-financed and well-managed systems, providing three independent transcontinental operations, with appropriate north and south intersecting services, which competed evenly with each other in service at all important terminals. Cross-ownership of stock and interlocking directorates were discontinued, effecting complete independence. Neither complete monopoly nor pure competition were accomplished. Sufficient competition was created to produce transport airplanes under competitive conditions in the passenger and express transportation industry which attracted public patronage, reduced operating costs, and reduced the cost to the Government of carriage of the mail from $1.09 per mile in 1929 to $0.42 per mile in 1933. A further reduction of 32 percent has since been made. This latter reduction cannot be attributed to development of the industry but must be credited to curtailment of the service. Notwithstanding an extraordinary development of the air transport industry throughout the period of the depression which has resulted in such progress that America leads the world in the art, the Air Mail Service is not yet earning enough to pay its way without any subsidy.

It is beyond question that commercial aviation, as fostered and supervised by governmental authority, is vital to our national security and has already become an essential service for the business of this country.

The policy of the proposed amendment is:

To preserve the benefits obtained for the public under the McNary-Watres Act and to prevent the setting back of the industry to conditions of 5 years ago.

To assure the people of the United States that their Government is honest and honorable as a contractor with citizens.

To reestablish justice and reaffirm that no person shall be deprived of property without due process of law.

To prevent the passage of a bill of attainder of citizens whose contracts with their Government have been canceled by their Government.

To prevent the passage of a law impairing the obligation of contracts.

To maintain the control of the Postmaster General over the operation of airships with due regard to safety, efficiency, labor relations, service standards, economical management, and the amount of compensation.

To preserve the control of the Government over combinations for the purpose of preventing reduction or elimination of competition on the one hand and ruinous competition on the other hand.

To enable the Postmaster General to place air mail for transportation on any air-mail route by any carrier operating aircraft thereon on a fixed daily schedule and under the authority of the Department of Commerce.

To fix the compensation upon a pound-mile basis at a rate which is not speculative but is based on official statements indicating that the stamp revenue for air mail currently amounts to between $1\frac{5}{10}$ mills and 2 mills per pound-mile for the country as a whole. Said compensation is fixed by the bill at the rate of 2 mills per pound-mile, except that the average compensation shall not exceed 50 cents per airplane-mile.

To frankly provide a subsidy by way of additional pay based upon improvement of efficiency, development of safety, additional space for carriage of passengers and express, and promotion of the national defense;

To continue the practice of employing a formula for ascertaining said subsidy, standardized for all operators and calculated to create the financial inducement and incentive to competitively develop the aeronautical industry as aforesaid.

The amendment recognizes that competitive bidding is not adaptable to the situation. In the words of Captain Rickenbacker, "To ask any one of these companies to bid on another route is as impracticable as asking the New York Central Railroad to bid to carry mail over a route such as the Santa Fe system."

The amendment attempts to assure the future status of the air-mail operators and remove uncertainty and insecurity in order to encourage long-time planning and the making of decisions with respect to new capital expenditures having for their objective decrease of operating expenses and ultimate ability of the industry to support itself. This is done by empowering the Postmaster General to issue route warrants for a period of not exceeding 10 years from date.

The amendment provides for such care of human life as may be obtained through the control of the Postmaster General by rules, regulations, and orders establishing standards of qualification, experience, working conditions of pilots and mechanics, of landing fields, lighthouses, radio stations, means of communications, aids to navigation, and of planes and their equipment.

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXATION—AMENDMENTS

Mr. MURPHY and Mr. NORRIS each submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to House bill 7835, the revenue bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

INCREASE OF NET INCOME TAXES BY 10 PERCENT

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, there has been considerable discussion in the press with respect to my proposal for increasing the net income taxes 10 percent. I ask unanimous consent to offer the amendment now so that it may be printed and lie on the table, and at the same time be printed in the RECORD, together with some tables bearing on the matter, for the information of Senators and to show the exact effect the proposal will have upon individual income taxpayers.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Michigan if his amendment means that each taxpayer's income tax will be increased by 10 percent?

Mr. COUZENS. That is correct. In other words, the man getting $3,000 would have to pay 80 cents extra income tax under my proposal.

There being no objection, the amendment was ordered to be printed and to lie on the table, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Amendment proposed by Mr. COUZENS to House bill 7835, the revenue bill, viz: On page 13, after line 24, insert a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 14. Increase of tax for 1934: In the case of an individual the amount of tax payable for any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1933, and prior to January 1, 1935, shall be 10 percent greater than the amount of tax which would be payable if computed without regard to this section, but after the application of the credit for foreign taxes provided in section 131, and the credit for taxes withheld at the source provided in section 32."

The accompanying tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RECIPROCAL TARIFF AGREEMENTS—AMENDMENTS

Mr. REED and Mr. COPELAND each submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to the bill (H.R. 8687) to amend the Tariff Act of 1930, which were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

INCLUSION OF SUGAR BEETS AND SUGAR CANE AS BASIC COMMODITIES—AMENDMENT

Mr. FLETCHER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H.R. 8861) to include sugar beets and sugar cane as basic agricultural commodities under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

VETERANS' REGULATIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

Pursuant to the provisions of section 20, title I, of the act entitled "An act to maintain the credit of the United States Government", approved March 20, 1933, I am transmitting herewith copies of Executive Orders No. 6668, Veterans' Regulation No. 1 (e), and No. 6669, Veterans' Regulation No. 12 (b), approved by me April 6, 1934.

These veterans' regulations have been issued in accordance with the terms of title 1, Public, No. 2, Seventy-third Congress. Executive Order No. 6661, Veterans' Regulation No. 1 (d), and Executive Order No. 6662, Veterans' Regulation No. 12 (a), contained provisions carrying out the purpose as expressed in my message of March 27, 1934, to the House of Representatives, returning without my approval H.R. 6663, entitled "An act making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes." The provisions of Public, No. 141, Seventy-third Congress, March 28, 1934, have gone far beyond the intent of these regulations. The regulations transmitted herewith are, therefore, for the purpose of canceling them.

TRANSFER OF VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION FUNCTIONS PERTAINING TO CIVIL-SERVICE RETIREMENT TO CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying paper, ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

To the Congress:

Pursuant to the provisions of section 16 of the act of March 3, 1933 (ch. 212, 47 Stat. 1517), as amended by title III of the act of March 20, 1933 (ch. 3, 48 Stat. 16), I am herewith transmitting an Executive order transferring to the the United States Civil Service Commission the duties, powers, and functions now vested in the Veterans' Administration pertaining to the administration of the Civil Service Retirement Act and the Canal Zone Retirement Act.

The administration of laws governing the retirement of civil employees of the Government is logically and properly a function of the Civil Service Commission, and the transfer effected by this order will permit a more efficient administration of the activities involved. The Director of the Bureau of the Budget has informed me that the transfer will result in an annual saving of approximately $45,000.

JOHN MARSHALL AND PHILADELPHIA

It is fitting that this bar should observe the one hundred and thirty-third anniversary of the Chief Justiceship of John Marshall. The great name of Marshall is linked with Philadelphia in many ways. He was born at a little town in Fauquier County, Va., then called Germantown. Under the command of his father's friend, George Washington, young Marshall fought at our own Germantown, at Iron Hill, and at Brandywine, and later endured the winter at Valley Forge. Young Marshall made two pilgrimages on foot to Philadelphia, the first to be inoculated with smallpox, and, during the later years of the war, to return to service under Washington. From Philadelphia he went, under President Adams, as Envoy Extraordinary to France, and, by his blunt honesty in the X Y Z episode, returned in triumph to Philadelphia to receive the plaudits of all. In Philadelphia he argued the case of Ware v. Hylton (British debts), which gave a national setting to his fame as a lawyer. Urged by his friend and leader, George Washington, he reluctantly accepted a nomination for Congress, and, winning his seat after a close fight, he sat here in the last Congress which convened in Philadelphia. It was here that he announced in Congress the death of George Washington, and presented the resolutions drawn by Richard Henry Lee, which included the words, "First in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen." Marshall showed his independence here by opposing the sedition law. He came to Philadelphia in his old age for treatment by Dr. Physic, and in 1835 died at the boarding house of Mrs. Krimn, in Walnut Street, within sight of Independence Hall

The initiative of the Philadelphia bar resulted in the great statue in Washington by William Wetmore Story, which was dedicated in a speech by William Henry Rawle, Esq., of this bar, in 1885, just 50 years after Horace Binney made his memorable eulogy on the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Marshall.

In 1901 the Philadelphia bar observed the centenary of Marshall's service as Chief Justice. The principal address was by Mr. Justice Mitchell, of our Supreme Court.

In 1930, through the generosity of JAMES M. BECK, Esq., of this bar, a reproduction of the Story statue was presented and dedicated under the auspices of this association, with addresses by Judge Buffington, Chief Justice Von Moschzisker, and the late John Frederick Lewis, Esq.

This meeting is held at the suggestion of the committee on citizenship of the American Bar Association, of which Mr. BECK is chairman.

JOHN MARSHALL "FOUNTAIN OF HIS NATION'S HONOR"

Patriot, soldier, advocate, legislator, member of the Virginia Convention, Congressman, diplomat, Secretary of State—in all these Marshall gave eminent and distinguished service. At 19 he began to drill troops as lieutenant. He became captain and acting judge advocate. His courage and resourcefulness marked him out among the many vigorous, sturdy, and brave men of that desperate struggle.

As a lawyer he soon attained front rank. There is one volume of Virginia Reports in which he was of counsel on one side or the other in practically every case.

The War of the Revolution taught him the deep need of a more perfect union of the States, and he became an enthusiastic supporter of Federalistic policies, and with Madison led the debates in the Virginia Convention against Patrick Henry, George Mason, and others.

In the Virginia Legislature his parts and power were so obvious that he was almost at once appointed a member of the council of State, and was reelected even against his preference and notwithstanding his Federalistic principles.

Lord Craigmyle, one of the law lords, who as Shaw of Dunfermline sat in the Privy Council, has said of Marshall:

"* * * the great American * * * was so constituted that corruption made no appeal to him whatsoever * * * therein was his greatness and the secret of his dignity. He stood for his country at that most critical juncture of its early manhood, and in representing it he became the fountain of his Nation's honor."

HONOR VERSUS OPPORTUNISM

Honor or opportunism: That is the issue in government today, and will be tomorrow and to the end of time.

John Marshall was no servile camp follower of "mass psychology." He believed in the existence of right and wrong, and stood for the right, regardless of public clamor and error. He held to that continuity with the past whereby we live. He did not believe in discarding its lessons. He believed in the teachings of experience, and did not hold with experimenting against its truths.

He declared that the temporary "spirit of the people" was not infallible, and that the Supreme Court would declare void an unconstitutional act of Congress.

Lord Craigmyle says of Marbury v. Madison:

"This decision * * * broke through in one swift movement a great bulwark of English tradition and drove the English doctrine of the omnipotence of Parliament from the American field. Congress, the Federal Parliament of the States, was not omnipotent: It stood within constitutional limits. Those limits standing—and until changed by the constitutional machinery of amendment—every court in the land must respect them, and this though Congress itself and all the political parties and wire-pullers should get the shock of their lives. The respect for the Supreme Court was not now unmingled with fear, public security was enhanced, and the power of self-determination of this infant State was by the stern majesty of law made manifest to the world."

And Lord Craigmyle points out how Marshall's decisions were for the healing of the Nation.

"Without John Marshall's interpretations of the Constitution's test, in what predicament would America have been placed? I think, after much consideration, that it would have found flourishing everywhere the seeds of interstate discord, and that the resulting collisions might have worked on to political anarchy and to the national enfeeblement which anarchy brings. From the Atlantic to the Pacific there would have been a welter of rivalries, misunderstandings and cross-purposes, which would have wrecked even social development and made the words 'United States' a derisory term. From these calamities America was saved by John Marshall."

How was Marshall endowed for his great part in the war between honor and opportunism? Francis Gilmer said:

"The characteristic of his eloquence is an irresistible cogency, and a luminous simplicity in the order of his reasoning. His arguments are remarkable for their separate and independent strength, and for the solid, compact, impenetrable order in which they are arrayed."

The only true keystone, the only safe anchorage, is the bedrock of principle.

"This apostle of integrity (Marshall) was the missioner of a straight deal on every issue. No one who discerns true greatness can ever fail to find in it this man who in the midst of national upheaval, and defiant of unpopularity, could dare to put passion, public or private, to the proof of reason, and to obey the call of truth."—(Lord Craigmyle.)

Though it might bring upon him a hurricane of wrath, in any crisis however tragic, such as that of today, he would stand like a rock for national honor against every assault no matter how plausible or "noble in motive."

NATIONAL HONOR MEANS SECURITY

There was ingrained in John Marshall a love of honesty, and a hatred of dishonesty in every form, public or private. He saw governmental repudiation as dishonesty. He believed in a literal and absolute compliance with "Thou shalt not steal." To many it seems that common honesty is as unpopular today as it was in the time of John Marshall. Dishonesty by the Government, no matter by what "high prerogative", was hateful to Marshall. And he helped to win in the Virginia convention the 3 weeks' fight to ratify the Constitution, which contained the simple rule of common honesty, "No State shall * * * pass any * * * law impairing the obligation of contracts. * * *"

It may be added that Marshall believed in honesty not only because it was right, but because it meant security. Where any government, under stress of popular clamor or emergency or for any other reason or excuse, yields in a matter of principle and violates the plain dictates of common honesty, it not only sins against righteousness, but it commits a grave error of policy. The last end of that State is worse than the first. These vital questions of the preeminence of public security and confidence in governmental obligations and dealings between men and men, were threshed out in titanic conflict a century and a half ago. Then, if ever, there were excuses for public and private breaches of faith, when all the colonies were engulfed in a common chaos of financial emergency. But righteousness and the common sense policy prevailed. Read the judgment of the House of Lords in the gold clause cases. (Société Intercommunale Belge d'Électricité), and you will see that the principles that John Marshall labored for have not in 1934 perished from the earth. The Eighth Commandment still has vitality in Great Britain.

MARSHALL'S MORAL GRANDEUR AND STEADFAST MIND

Above and beyond John Marshall's great intellectual gifts tower the moral greatness of his soul and spirit. He did not what he thought expedient but only what he thought was right.

There are timid souls today who voice the view that the true rule to govern legislator, executive, and judge is the rule of expediency. And by that, unconsciously, they mean the rule of imagined or temporary expediency. I have even heard the shocking suggestion that the Supreme Court dare not interpret the Constitution as it is written lest court and government be swept away. Such a suggestion should arouse resentment in every mind. Almost every landmark decision of the Supreme Court under John Marshall was visited with bitter opprobrium. Many of the anti-Federalists hated the centralization of power and hated any interference with the exercise of power by the States. Any difference of opinion today or any possible difference of opinion would seem mild and tolerant compared with the violence and hatred and criticism aroused by the earlier decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. Yet John Marshall, unaffected by clamor, and with a steadfast mind, wrote those miracles of clarity, each of which seems a mathematical demonstration leading inevitably to its Q.E.D. What if Marshall and his Court had wavered? Indeed, what if our courts should waver today? A single step aside from the path of enforcing the Constitution may become a precedent permitting of further deviations, with the result that the true limitations of the instrument are recognized only in the letter.

"It is the duty of courts to be watchful for the constitutional rights of the citizen and against any stealthy encroachment thereon. Their motto should be obsta principiis * * *.

"'It is the loftiest function and the most sacred duty of the judiciary * * * unique in the history of the world * * * to support, maintain, and give full effect to the Constitution against every act of the legislature or the Executive in violation of it. This is the great jewel of our liberties * * *. This is the final breakwater against the haste and passions of the people, against the tumultuous ocean of democracy. It must at all costs be maintained.'"

CENTRIPETAL TENDENCIES ALMOST UNCHECKED

Recent developments

Speaking at the dedication of the monument of John Marshall in 1930, our distinguished fellow member, the late John Frederick Lewis, Esq., mentioned some 40 activities of the Government not expressly authorized by the Constitution. These were not expressly mentioned in the Constitution, but many of them could be regarded as "necessary and proper" to carry out the express powers granted. There is, however, under the decision of the Supreme Court in Massachusetts v. Mellon, and kindred cases, no way in which the constitutionality of many of these measures can be tested unless the United States Comptroller should decline to give his approval. Otherwise the power of appropriation by Congress is practically absolute.

Contrast this with our own wise system in Pennsylvania, of taxpayers' bills, permitting any taxpayer to challenge any unconstitutional appropriation.

Within the last year there have been added 57 varieties of instrumentalities of the Federal Government, from A.A.A. to T.V.A. They are collected in a brilliant brochure by John C. Bell, Jr., Esq., of this bar. Roughly speaking, these activities may be grouped under agricultural relief, financial relief, general relief, industrial control and so-called currency reform.

Under agricultural relief we have a bonus of hundreds of millions to the cotton growers, a right to borrow without recourse at 10 cents, and a right to call on the Government at 6 cents, all in order to decrease production. The result has been a net increase of production of 117,000 bales. We have $150,000,000 bonus to the wheat farmers and $150,000,000 bonus to the hog growers.

Under financial relief we have loans right and left, including twenty millions to China to buy cotton, and projected loans of taxpayers' money to Soviet Russia; also loans to duplicate and put out of business existing public utilities; also loans to build private enterprises such as furniture factories, further to compete with an existing excess productive capacity. Also loans to build labor union centers, as in Philadelphia.

Under general relief we have vast disbursements and rates of wages paid in excess of local wages, so that in some places workmen have left private employment in order to get higher wages under C.W.A. Chairman Buchanan, of the Committee on Appropriations, warns, "There is a great danger of public relief becoming a rapacious maw to devour everything." His remark recalls Lord Macaulay's "You will act like people who in a year of scarcity devour all the seed corn."

Under currency reform we have the repudiation of Government covenants to pay gold, the seizure of all gold, the reduction of the gold content of the dollar, and a paper profit of two billions and upwards by the seizure of the gold in the Federal Reserve banks. Also the purchase of silver at 20 cents per ounce above market price. Further, an attempt rigidly to limit the right of American citizens to make investments abroad. The stated objective is to turn back the hands of time and restore the price level of 1926.

The numerous blank checks given by Congress to the President are not without precedent. In Mexico the legislative phrase is: "Se conceden facultades extraordinarias el Ejecutivo para legislar en los ramos de Hacienda y Credito Publico" ("The Executive is granted special power to legislate in the departments of the Treasury and Public Credit"). In this way there is complete concert between the legislative and executive branches. I recall my feelings on being told in 1919 that the law prohibited taking any Mexican gold out of Mexico. I would have regarded with scorn the prediction that within 15 years the United States, under its high prerogative of plunder, would forbid the ownership of gold and the free foreign exchange of any United States money for the purpose of investment. You are aware that when a New York lawyer tried to raise the question of his right under the Constitution to retain the ownership of bars of gold which he had lawfully acquired, he could not do it as to the whole amount of $200,000, because that would have resulted in a fine of $400,000. He retained a single $5,000 bar, but the Treasury ordered the Chase National Bank to turn over that bar, and the bank did. This recalls the fact that the administration has repeatedly refused to allow any industry to include in its code a provision that the members of the industry reserved their constitutional rights.

It will do us no good to blink the fact of the steady tendency toward one-man-power strong-arm governments such as those now existing in Italy, Germany, and elsewhere. Absolutism means despotism. In theory the British Parliament is omnipotent, but it never abdicated to a prime minister or king, and but once to the Protector Cromwell. There is a great gulf and an irreconcilable conflict between absolutism and liberty. We may pay too much for a hoped-for security; and it will prove illusory under any despotism.

Under industrial control we have legislation decreeing, under hundreds of codes and hundreds to be enacted, minimum pay and maximum hours and limitation of production in industry, whether interstate or intrastate, together with the attempt to enact into law a stimulus to collective bargaining, which has already resulted in doubling the membership in the American Federation of Labor.

The old order has been suddenly and violently changed under threat of boycott and by means of Government-paid propaganda. If an administration has the right to employ the taxpayers' money to pay for publicity agents and publicity to tout the administration's policies, where is the line to be drawn? The total expense to the taxpayers of Federal publicity is not known, but it is charged that the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania alone is paying tens of thousands a year inter alia to confirm the loyalty of those who have signed pledges to be "loyal to the policies approved by the people at the 1930 election." Then there is the Federal propaganda in favor of the so-called "child-labor amendment" (advocated by Secretary Perkins and the Chief of the Children's Bureau) and in favor of unemployment insurance (advocated by Secretary Perkins). And, we are told by her, not of a temporary experiment to restore prosperity, but of a new epoch under a planned equilibrium of production and consumption. This is the end of liberty.

"Drastic changes in the methods and forms of government." These are the words of the present Federal administration. Now in Germany the "Nazi doctrine holds that members of a unified nation should all think and act in the same way." That is also the doctrine of Mussolini and Stalin. Shall we imitate them?

Everyone will agree that the changes are revolutionary, and that they have come with incredible swiftness and in kaleidoscopic variety, accompanied by unbridled propaganda. Most of us believe that they are all steps toward the left.

Are they consistent with honor and the Constitution, or are they dictated by opportunism?

WHAT WOULD JOHN MARSHALL THINK?

What would John Marshall think of the ninety and nine years since 1835, and especially of these years of grace, 1933 and 1934? Is there not a duty on our part to appraise the acts and tendencies of government and to aid in forming a sound opinion as to their constitutionality and wisdom, as well as their effect upon our freedom and security?

Judges in California and in the District of Columbia have sustained the constitutionality of certain provisions of N.I.R.A. and N.R.A. on the ground of emergency. When did the emergency begin? In 1929? Four Justices of the Supreme Court, in the Minnesota Mortgage Moratorium case voted that the statute impaired the obligation of contract, and the majority opinion clearly states that emergency cannot create a power (though it may be the occasion for the exercise of a power already existing). So the Supreme Court is unanimously on record against emergency as creating power, and the Federal Government being a government of limited and delegated powers we must find some provision in the Constitution itself to sustain recent legislation. Federal Judge Akerman, of Florida, has twice held N.R.A. unconstitutional as applied to codes fixing prices in intrastate industries—cleaners and dyers, and citrus growers. Judge Lambertson, of our own court of common pleas, has ruled that a code, though approved by the President, cannot overrule the public policy of Pennsylvania. Several States in a scramble to endorse N.I.R.A. and N.R.A. have adopted statutes attempting to make all codes binding as State laws. The court of common pleas no. 3 has refused a charter to the retail code authority of Philadelphia.

The recovery program contemplates an additional deficit of ten billions, making our Federal debt twenty-nine billions, in addition to local debts of nineteen billions, or a total of nearly fifty billions.

Let us briefly point out the obvious dangers:

1. These billions furnish an enormous fund tending to bribe and debauch the political support of those disbursing and receiving them. The cotton vote, the farmer vote, the silver vote, the labor-union vote, the unemployed vote, the minimum-wage vote—all are being paid for, if not bought, and almost all out of the pockets of the taxpayers.

2. The obvious, if not the announced, objective is the redistribution of property (or poverty), largely away from the East and the North.

3. To Pennsylvania there is one poignant fact in the program to peg perpetual prosperity. Pennsylvania and Pennsylvanians are being bled white in the process. Pennsylvania pays $114,000,000 of Federal taxes, an average per person of $11.73 a year, and has received in gratuities under P.W.A. $1 for every $100 paid. Mississippi, the home of the Chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, gets back $11 for every $1 paid, or 1,100 times what Pennsylvania receives. Arkansas, the home of the Democratic leader of the Senate, gets $5.77 for every $1 of taxes paid, or 577 times what Pennsylvania receives. Of each $1 contributed by Pennsylvania to the processing tax under A.A.A. Pennsylvanians receive back 1 cent. For each $1 contributed by Arkansas, Arkansans get back $26.57. For each $1 contributed by Mississippi, Mississippians get back $23.20. Some of the individual checks are as high as $10,000 each. New York, New Jersey, and other States are similarly victimized. Is this the redistribution of property or the redistribution of poverty; the enrichment of a few large agriculturists at the expense of the plain people of Pennsylvania? Does taking out of their pockets and putting it into the pockets of others increase purchasing power? The figures for C.W.A. are not available but would merely show the continuance of the direct relief previously granted.

4. This not only saps the self-reliance of the individual but discourages sound recovery by imposing a crushing burden of taxation, or by threatening repudiation which may bring down the pillars of civilization itself.

5. The program is carried on with such swiftness and confidence and with such plausible and abundant propaganda and threats of reprisal against dissenters as to muzzle comment or criticism. As in the Nazi State, I repeat, we are all expected to think and act as a unit.

6. There is no adequate machinery with which to test the constitutionality of most of the program; and those who attempt to challenge it must risk opprobrium and popular passion.

The foregoing indicates but in bare outline some of the high spots of the present crisis in our constitutional history and national life.

Yet probably 85 percent of our entire citizenry are still employed or in business and still have a vital stake, as indeed we all have, in averting a final catastrophe. If these can be awakened to the real nature and extent of the danger that threatens, the situation may be saved.

The letter and the spirit of the Constitution, as well as natural justice and common honesty, forbid confiscation, and the impoverishment of those who have, to enrich others. Government is among the least successful of human efforts. Government means politicians. Politicians are eager for power. Despite their ill success with government, they seek to control all business. That way danger lies.

Many of you have received a New Year's card saying:

"Liberty is not merely the absence of restraint. It is active and positive, the human spirit realizing its powers, destiny, and duty.

"And therefore, when for a time the freedom of the individual has been laid aside for a common purpose the citizen when mustered out at the conclusion of the draft, must be alert to resume at once his freedom unimpaired."

"Constitutions must be supported by the wisdom and fortitude of man." They must be supported also by our love and enthusiasm and our high resolve to transmit unimpaired and undiminished the heritage of our forefathers.

What in Marshall's view would be the sum of the whole matter? "Independence, the Nation, the Constitution.

"A Nation whose precepts of justice and righteousness are enshrined in a supreme law ordained by the people; these are unique American concepts of wisdom and safety in government.

"A people, withholding ultimate political power, and limiting the functions and power of the temporary servants of the people; and establishing a great court to whose arbitrament any person, however humble, may appeal against the aggressions of his servants: This was of the essence of the faith of the fathers.

"A supreme court of the people, composed of men of preeminent goodness and wisdom, fearless and upright judges, marking out the respective orbits of the Nation and the States, and safeguarding the sanctuaries of human right; a supreme court owing no duty except to their oaths to the people to support the people's law: This is the proud tradition of five generations of American free men.

"A monument of constitutional jurisprudence, a temple of the people's justice, builded by patriot lawgivers, its noble columns buttresses of our rights, embellished by more than two score precedents in restraint of attempted excesses by the people's servants in Congress: This is our greatest national edifice.

"We, the people, of old time did ordain and establish this Constitution; we confided to our Supreme Court the duty of deciding as between one of the people and our servants, whenever he might be injured by a servant's act; this duty has been performed with rare fidelity and wisdom; our liberties are safe in the hands of the great court of the people; and as to our servants in Congress and elsewhere, we intend that they shall be our servants, not our masters." This should be the answer of the people to any attempt to pull down their temple of justice.

It was Washington who said:

"The preservation of the sacred fire of liberty and the destiny of the republican model of government are justly considered, perhaps, as finally staked on the experiment entrusted to the hands of the American people."

As for America, she has chosen the better part. There is now on permanent view in the Library of Congress the original Declaration of Independence and the original Constitution of the United States. On a background of gray marble, in letters of gold, are the words "Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States." Below can be seen these precious scrolls of American independence and American freedom, the whole a new national shrine. And as for the support of the "wisdom and fortitude of man", let there be deep in every mind and heart the steady purpose that these memorable sayings of the fathers shall not become proverbs of ashes.

John Marshall lives today and will live to the end of time as America's embodiment of the inextinguishable will to be free. Let us highly resolve that the "free Constitution which is the work of his hands be sacredly maintained."

Let us recall the words of Horace Binney a century ago:

"Of all the constitutions of government known to man, none are so favorable to the development of judicial virtue as that of America. None else confide to the judges the sacred deposit of the fundamental laws and make them the exalted arbiters between the Constitution and those who have established it. None else give them so lofty a seat, or invite them to dwell so much above the impure air of the world, the tainted atmosphere of party and of passion. None else could have raised for the perpetual example of the country, and for the crown of undying praise, so truly great a judge as John Marshall."

Of Marshall we can say:

"And thus this man died leaving * * *
An example of noble courage * * *
And a memorial of virtue
Unto all his Nation."

REGULATION OF SECURITIES EXCHANGES

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a very interesting article by President Henry D. Sharpe, of the New England Council, relative to the pending bill for the regulation of securities exchanges.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New England News Letter]

PRESIDENT SHARPE WARNS OF EFFECTS OF EXCHANGE BILL ON BUSINESS

That the Fletcher-Rayburn bill for regulating securities exchanges, now pending in Congress, will have the effect of depressing values and jeopardizing the market for New England corporate securities is the conclusion communicated in a letter to members of the New England Council, and to corporation executives and commercial and industrial assocations of New England, by Henry D. Sharke, of Providence, president of the council.

Too little has been said concerning the effect of this bill on business itself, Mr. Sharpe declared, pointing out that the council is not concerned in the details or procedures of reasonable regulation of securities exchanges, but is "seriously concerned at the prospect of the enactment of a law which would place the hand of the Federal Government on the management of practically all business in New England."

Quoting the resolution on the subject passed by the council at its Hartford meeting, President Sharpe wrote:

"To date, most of the discussion of this bill has been dominated by the considerations important to those directly associated with the stock exchanges. There has been too little discussion from the standpoint of New England business enterprises and investors.

"We doubt if business executives in New England yet realize the extent to which this measure requires the furnishing, and makes possible the publication of information about the affairs of business corporations of every sort. We do not believe it is generally appreciated that this measure creates authority to make rules governing trading in unlisted as well as listed securities.

"It is doubtful that those who hold securities of New England enterprises not listed on stock exchanges appreciate the restrictions which the bill allows the Federal Trade Commission to impose on trading in unlisted securities. There are also certain restrictions on the use of unlisted securities for collateral.

"The revised Fletcher-Rayburn bill still contains provisions vesting in agencies of the Government powers of control over business corporations not essential to the declared purposes of such regulation of securities exchanges.

"It may be that the power and the determination exist in Washington to enact this measure without substantial change," Mr. Sharpe said. "If such be the case, that does not make it any the less incumbent upon the business corporations of New England, individually and through their associations, to make known their views to both the administrative and legislative authorities."

REGULATION OF SECURITIES EXCHANGES

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD some opinions relative to the pending securities bill collected by the Washington Post.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Apr. 4, 1934]

VIEWS OF BUSINESS LEADERS ON EFFECT OF SECURITIES ACT

(Following are some of the replies received by the Washington Post in answer to telegrams asking the opinion of prominent and responsible individuals on Chairman RAYBURN's statement Monday that it was not the Securities Act but the lack of a market which was preventing the sale of securities.)

Morgan B. Brainard, president Aetna Life Insurance Co., Aetna Casualty & Surety Co., Automobile Insurance Co., and Standard Fire Insurance Co.:

"In reply to your telegram our companies have large sums awaiting investment and we believe that the onerous requirements of the Securities Act prevent opportunities which would ordinarily be presented to us in times where there was a decided increase in business activity such as is now evident."

Henry S. Kingman, treasurer Farmers & Mechanics Savings Bank of Minneapolis, and member of the board of directors of the American Bankers Association:

"In reply to your telegram, in my opinion governmental stimulation of business and general recovery program must be gradually turned over to private enterprise in order to carry through for permanent recovery. Liberalization of the Federal Securities Act, in my opinion, is necessary step to permit private capital to further finance such recovery. Ample funds appear to be awaiting investment and strong market available for sound corporate financing."

Darwin R. James, president East River Savings Bank, New York City:

"Chairman RAYBURN has reversed the facts. Bonds are selling today at yields lower in many instances than have been obtained since 1901, notwithstanding the fact that the country has just emerged from a protracted depression. The reason for this is not increased earnings, but the fact that new issues are not coming out because of the Securities Act. There is an excellent market for all high-grade bonds. The Securities Act should be amended promptly."

J. T. Sharp, president Mill Owners Mutual Fire Insurance Co. of Iowa:

"In our opinion the Securities Act is a greater factor in preventing issuance and sale of securities than the lack of a market."

George P. Hardgrove, director American Investment Bankers Association:

"I would take issue with Chairman RAYBURN'S statement that it is lack of a market and not the Securities Act that is today preventing the sale of securities. First, let me state that I am decidedly in favor of regulation of the sale of securities, but it should be fair and sane regulation under which there could be a free flow of capital. We have not lacked a market for securities for months past; and were it not for this act, which puts undue burden not only on the directors of borrowing corporations but also on bankers who know how and can distribute investment securities, there would have been many millions of new securities for refunding purposes and otherwise offered to and subscribed by the public all to the advantage of national recovery.

"There are hundreds of corporations that were it not for these burdens could take advantage of this market in securing funds not only to their own advantage but also to the advantage of national recovery. If there is one thing today that is retarding that progress of recovery it is the drastic provisions of that act which is preventing not only the sale of new issues, but also many reorganizations which would be not only to the advantage of the corporations but even in many cases far more advantageous to the small investors throughout the country who are today holding defaulted securities that could be put in better shape.

"The prices at which high grade corporation and municipal bonds are selling today evidence the fact that we have a market right now that would take many new issues of bonds if it were not overregulated in an unworkable manner. What we need now and what would be a greater help than anything else to combat unemployment and along with that to help the small investor is a free flow of capital which the present market would give us without this insane regulation."

Walton L. Crocker, president John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co., of Boston:

"Responding to your inquiry as to the effect of the Federal Securities Act as proposed, I will state that, in my opinion, there is an ample market for new or refunding issues of sound securities which will be made manifest as soon as the way is cleared."

Robert M. Hanes, director American Bankers Association.

"I believe it will be impossible to get any responsible board of directors to vote for the issuance of securities under the Securities Act. They cannot afford to take the chance if they are at all responsible."

John R. Longmire, director American Investment Bankers Association:

"Feel definitely that Securities Act is preventing the sale of new securities and refunding of a number of situations that seriously hamper recovery program. Believe that real progress cannot be made unless capital market is permitted to function freely, and legitimate financing is allowed, as there is no other available source of investment capital that is satisfactorily serving. My opinion is the only way out is to modify the Securities Act to open economic channels."

Arthur F. Hall, president Lincoln National Life Insurance Co., Fort Wayne, Ind.:

"Of course, present Securities Act and proposed Fletcher-Rayburn Act are interfering with sale of securities. Under them industries do not dare offer securities. We need an understandable law, not subject to arbitrary rulings of Federal Trade Commission, a law preventing unfair underwriting profits and operations of pool-price manipulators; a law to encourage durable goods industries to borrow and capital to invest. Such legislation, together with death of Wagner labor bill, would result in honest prosperity such as we have never known. Our citizens have billions of frightened money awaiting investment. My own little company has 5 millions in unprofitable bank balances."

J. Augustus Barnard, director, American Investment Bankers Association:

"Having had 40 years' experience in bond business, I distinctly disagree with Chairman RAYBURN. I believe if it were not for fear engendered by the Securities Act, there would be many new issues put out and that there would be an excellent market for high-grade bonds. Insurance companies, banks, estates, and private individuals are constantly asking for recommendations, and I firmly believe that the Securities Act is one of the chief reasons for the stagnation of private-capital markets with consequent obstruction to recovery."

Daniel W. Myers, director, American Investment Bankers Association:

"In practical effect Securities Act amounts to a prohibition of borrowing by industry on long-term credit. While highly deflationary, that kind of a prohibition may not be altogether bad. We can stand it. The only question is whether the country as a whole can stand it."

Charles B. Crouse, director, American Investment Bankers Association:

"Re RAYBURN statement, there is a strong capital market for prime securities. However, directors and officers of corporations will not accept direct liability under present Securities Act in the issuance of new securities by their companies. The increase in bond prices the past 6 months is definite proof of a capital market."

J. M. Scribner, director, American Investment Bankers Association:

"Regardless of alleged statement of Chairman RAYBURN, have knowledge of situations where directors recently refused to permit reorganization and negotiations for long-term financing owing to liability provisions and uncertain interpretation of Securities Act. Volume of corporation financing from January 1, 1933, to July 27, 1933, although small, practically ceased on the latter date and has not been resumed, although market conditions for the past several months have been more receptive than at any time in past 18 months. This fact appears to contradict RAYBURN'S statement beyond further argument. Believe greatest single deterrent to recovery is stoppage of capital markets by reason of Securities Act and uncertainty of future monetary policy."

George Leib, director, American Investment Bankers Association:

"Securities Act of 1933, definitely preventing sale of high-grade corporate securities, as witness fact that municipal bonds are being bought and sold daily by bondholders throughout the country at prices approximating highest prices of a decade. Also, at least two issues of railroad bonds have been successfully sold. Both these classes are exempted securities under the act. The quoted prices for other classes of securities are now sufficiently high so that were it not for the liabilities and cumbersome registration requirements of the Securities Act we would at least have a reasonable flow of capital through corporate financing."

T. Stockton Matthews, director, American Investment Bankers Association:

"Referring to statement, Associated Press, quoting Chairman RAYBURN, of House committee, as saying, 'It is not true that Securities Act is preventing the sale of securities. It is the lack of market', I respectfully desire to differ. The excellent current public demand and firm prices for well-secured issues not subject to provisions of the Securities Act is concrete evidence of their marketability. Our firm, engaged in conservative investment business since 1840, is eager to participate in the underwriting of sound new issues of securities and the distribution thereof among investors, but the unjust liabilities imposed by the Securities Act are such that we are not able to undertake new financing which would so materially contribute to the progress of general business recovery, until there is a reasonable modification of the act in these respects."

J. W. Brislawn, president State Secretaries' Association of the American Bankers Association:

"Local securities houses confining activities almost exclusively to municipals because drastic provisions of the Securities Act of 1933 impose such severe liabilities upon borrower and house of issue that not even strong potential market for good, sound, new issues can overcome fear of innocent violation of some of the penal provisions of the Securities Act."

MORE BUSINESS HEADS TELL VIEWS ON EFFECT OF SECURITIES ACT

(Printed below are additional replies received by the Washington Post in answer to telegrams asking prominent leaders in business, banking, and industry to comment on the statement of Chairman RAYBURN that it is not the Securities Act but lack of a market which is preventing the sale of securities:)

William L. De Bost, president Union Dime Savings Bank, New York City:

"Telegram of April 3 received. Cannot agree with Chairman RAYBURN'S statement. Do not believe there is any lack of an investment market as there is much money awaiting safe investment, but Securities Act has made it so difficult for those wishing to borrow that offerings at this time are not being made.

"Also as chairman of bondholders' committee for bonds of State of Arkansas, after months of work we were able with the cooperation of the Governor and his associates to devise a refunding plan which has been voted by the Legislature of Arkansas and are prepared to recommend to all bondholders that they exchange for these new bonds. After doing this we could not proceed due to the complexity of the National Securities Act. The members of the Arkansas bondholders' committee are volunteers serving without compensation in an effort to protect the interest of holders of bonds of the State of Arkansas. The Securities Act, however, imposes upon us what we consider unreasonable liabilities which we do not feel we should be called upon to assume. I am confident that this act needs considerable revision."

Benjamin Rush, president Insurance Co. of North America, Philadelphia:

"Replying to your telegram of the third in regard to statement of Chairman RAYBURN of House committee that it was untrue that the Securities Act is preventing the sale of securities I beg to state that while I have every confidence in Representative RAYBURN'S sincerity in making this statement I am obliged to differ with his conclusions. In my opinion, the Securities Act has prevented, is preventing, and will continue to prevent the sale of securities until the unjust and impossible burdens laid upon the shoulders of those seeking to market securities are removed. It is true that this condition is aggravated by lack of market but that lack of market in turn is caused by lack of confidence on the part of investors in much of the legislation enacted and proposed to be enacted by the administration.

"The Securities Act tends to prevent the issue and sale of new securities. The proposed bill for the regulation of national security exchanges as now drawn will greatly curtail and probably in some instances prevent the dealing in securities already existing. Therefore these two acts taken separately or together will tend to reduce employment, to lower wages, and to slow up the process of industrial recovery."

A. P. Everts, director American Investment Bankers' Association, Boston:

"The experience of our organization with investment departments in 17 leading cities makes it very clear that there is an active demand for well-secured obligations of seasoned and successful corporations. The interest in investment securities is evidenced by figures in this morning's New York Times, which show that total sales for this year to date of domestic bonds on the New York Stock Exchange are over 100 percent greater than for the same period last year and at substantially higher prices. While institutions are heavy buyers of Government obligations, we find that private investors have an active interest in corporate securities.

"It is my opinion, that given an opportunity, investors of this country, both private and institutional, would purchase new issues put out by sound corporations."

R. W. Huntington, president Connecticut General Life Insurance Co., Hartford:

"Feel that provision of 1933 Securities Act relating to liability of directors should be materially modified.

"There is no lack of market for securities of well-managed companies, but stringent liability imposed on directors of issuing corporations, accountants, and venders is preventing needed refinancing and new issues."

Homer L. Boyd, president Marine National Co.; director, American Investment Bankers' Association, Seattle, Wash.:

"In my opinion the drastic provisions of the Securities Act have effectively stopped the sale of new security issues in this country.

"I believe sane modification of the act would release flow of capital funds immediately, which would result in material aid to recovery program."

Ernest Sturm, chairman, the Continental Insurance Co., and the Fidelity Phoenix Fire Insurance Co., New York:

"With the improvement that has prevailed during the last 9 months in the fire-insurance business large sums for investment have accumulated. The lack of new offerings due to the drastic provisions of the Securities Act is preventing the safe and steady flow of investment money into industries that are sound and need capital funds to carry on to increase employment and further speed recovery, which all current reports show is now well under way.

"In my opinion, the Securities Act should be immediately amended so as to release investment funds that are now available."

Harry F. Stix, director, American Investment Bankers Association, St. Louis:

"Chairman RAYBURN's remarks anent the Securities Act, as quoted by the Associated Press, are open to serious exception because present very high prices for high-grade utility railroad equipment and industrial bonds clearly indicate that new issues could easily be marketed were it not for the deterrent of the drastic features of the Security Act."

William A. Law, president Penn Mutual Life Insurance Co., Philadelphia:

"In our judgment the bond market is hungry for new offerings of prime quality hallmarked by first-class issuing houses.

"The best evidence of this is the extremely high prices at which old issues of such character are being purchased."

G. S. Nollen, president Bankers Life Insurance Co., Des Moines, Iowa:

"Almost total absence of offerings to us of corporation securities since passage of Securities Act taken by us as substantiating accuracy of repeated assertions that issuers and underwriters consider personal liability hazard involved too great to justify public offerings of such securities.

"Consider proper amendment of act necessary to restore free security market."

Wilmot R. Evans, president Boston Five Cents Savings Bank, Boston:

"The Boston Five Cents Savings Bank is investing funds for over 198,000 depositors. It is getting increasingly difficult to invest in prime securities at a reasonable yield. It is undoubtedly true that the threat of the Securities Act prevents the offering of many desirable securities which we should like to buy.

"My belief is the Securities Act does far more harm than good."

Francis Moulton, director, American Investment Bankers Association, Los Angeles:

"For the last 20 years we have confined our activities entirely to underwriting and distributing municipal bonds that are not included in Securities Act. Under these circumstances do not feel qualified to answer your query covering operation of Securities Act. Believe opinion dealers in general corporation underwriting business would be of more value. Might say we have found municipal market very active for last 90 days and continued distribution at advanced prices. This would indicate ample funds for investment in municipals."

George L. Burnham, treasurer Ætna Fire Insurance Co., Hartford:

"Securities Act has prevented issue of good securities for which would be good market.

"This accounts in a measure for the high prices of old issues which are selling on a scarcity value basis."

George Willard Smith, president New England Mutual Life Insurance Co., Boston:

"We have accumulated funds which we would be glad to invest in high-grade securities.

"We know that some borrowers are having difficulty in extending their maturities owing to the pending Securities Act, and we have been told that the act is preventing the issuance of new bonds for much-needed permanent financing of business.

"The natural flow of insurance money into income-bearing securities has been materially checked, a condition which causes us concern."

Lewis Gawtry, president the Bank for Savings in the city of New York:

"Referring to your telegram April 3, when I read remarks attributed to Chairman RAYBURN of House committee I was much surprised that he was under impression that a market for good securities was lacking, because there can be no question that a large and unsatisfied demand now exists for high-grade investments. That this is so is proved by present low yield on Government, State, and municipal bonds."

Robert A. Barbour, president Berkshire Mutual Fire Insurance Co., Pittsfield, Mass.:

"It is my opinion that the Securities Act does prevent the issuance and marketing of securities. I do not feel that there is any lack of capital for investment in good securities."

Orrin G. Wood, director, American Investment Bankers Association, Boston:

"Regret to disagree with Mr. RAYBURN. My opinion is that civil liability provisions of the Securities Act have been the most important cause of preventing new security issues. Believe further that present form of registration statement is onerous on issuing companies and a confusing method of presenting facts to the investors."

A. D. Baker, president, Michigan Millers Mutual Fire Insurance Co., Lansing, Mich.:

"In reply to your telegram, I believe Chairman RAYBURN has been incorrectly informed. The demand for high-grade securities is in excess of the supply. In my opinion removal of the uncertainties involved in the Securities Act and governmental attitude toward business would render desirable many securities which at present we do not dare purchase.

"Removal of the uncertainties above referred to would also justify many corporations in making definite plans for the future and issuing bonds for carrying out those plans. Money is at present piling up in banks for lack of really high-grade securities.

"The uncertainties above referred to are holding back both business and investments. What business needs now is something stable upon which it will be justified in making plans for the future, and the present situation in my opinion lacks the necessary stability."

C. G. Rives, Jr., director, American Investment Bankers Association, New Orleans:

"In this section, Securities Act is seriously interfering with reorganization of outstanding bond issues. At present, dealers principally handling municipal bonds, but believe public would purchase high-grade corporate and utility investments if offered."

P. M. Fraser, vice president, Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Co., Hartford:

"The remarks of Mr. RAYBURN may best be answered by referring to the prices at which many corporate issues are selling. Among such issues are many which would probably be retired and refunded at lower interest rates were it not for the liability features of the Securities Act.

"Such refunding operations would be of financial benefit to the corporations involved. That the market is in position to also absorb other corporate financing is evidenced by manner in which municipal obligations are being rapidly absorbed daily. The Pennsylvania Railroad has also been successful in selling some of its treasury holdings, such subject, of course, to approval of I.C.C.

"The liability provisions of the Securities Act appear contrary to the wishes of President Roosevelt to create credit expansion."

J. Stewart Baker, chairman Bank of the Manhattan Co., New York City; director, American Bankers Association:

"In answer to your question regarding Representative RAYBURN's statement that 'It is not true that the Securities Act is preventing the sale of securities; it is the lack of a market', it is my opinion that a market for new securities has not had an opportunity, because of the stringencies of the Securities Act, to appear.

"To me it is very much the same thing as prohibiting by legislation the sale of, let's say, a Ford car, and, with the product off the market, justifying the legislation by saying, 'There is no market for such an automobile.'"

FORTY-ONE MORE LEADERS JOIN ATTACK ON SECURITIES ACT IN POST SURVEY—UNANIMOUS IN CALLING LAW RECOVERY SNAG—PROTESTS REPRESENT ALL LINES OF TRADE

(Printed below are additional replies received by the Washington Post in answer to telegrams asking prominent leaders in business, banking, and industry to comment on the statement of Chairman RAYBURN that it is not the Securities Act, but lack of a market, which is preventing the sale of securities:)

SAM REYBURN v. SAM RAYBURN

Samuel W. Reyburn, president Associated Dry Goods Corporation of New York City:

"Congressman SAM RAYBURN honestly believes Securities Act has not prevented sale of securities, but long experience in business convinces me he is mistaken. If he could find time, believe I could persuade him he is in error in his claim. Reasoning as follows, I believe in governmental regulation and supervision of commercial and investment banks and bankers, security exchanges, and other large dealers in public credit, but am sincerely opposed to Government control or imposing duties and responsibilities of business management on political agencies.

"Securities law of 1933 and stock exchange bill of 1934 go far beyond safe and sound regulation and supervision and have destroyed faith and confidence of many people in the value of corporate securities. For nearly a century capital for large undertakings in economic life has been largely raised through use of credit of private corporations and their management.

"The securities of a corporation are its promises. Its promises are salable at fair prices only when many people have faith and confidence in themselves, in other men, in the corporation, its management, and in the stability and efficiency of a government that gives assurance that life, liberty, and property will be protected, lawful contracts enforced, and justice administered. The prosperity of 1926 and 1927 produced a wild optimism that ran into expansion and expansion in turn ran into inflation, during which time men and women in economic, political, and social activities ceased to use forethought and judgment. They were lured by high hopes for the future and acted on rumors and hunches.

"In this wild mass mood most of the leaders in business and politics and in educational affairs were infected with the contagion. Inflation ran its course and, as always, ended in panic followed by depression, the most distressing in our history. All of us were and most of us still are greatly demoralized. The great pressure from unhappy sufferers on our officeholders and lawmakers for relief has caused that group to become frantic and make all kinds of endeavors to correct our distressing condition. With best intentions, legislation has been enacted, regulations enforced have had the effect of adding to rather than correcting many of our difficulties.

"The Securities Act of 1933 and stock exchange bill of 1934 are examples of this misguided zeal. The first should be repealed and a new constructive law passed; the second should not be passed in its present form. If they stand, both will do serious injury to industry, commerce, and trade, cause harm to both labor and the consumer and impede the President's national recovery program."

David F. Houston, former Secretary of the Treasury and Secretary of Agriculture in the Wilson administration; president Mutual Life Insurance Co., New York:

"There undoubtedly has been for several months and is now a good market for sound, new, or refunding issues of well-managed basic industries. This is evidenced in part by the rapid absorption of prime investment issues such as Federal and municipal bonds. To what extent in the present situation, with its uncertainties, sound businesses would sell new bonds or engage in refunding operations if it were not for the unreasonable liability provisions of the securities act I have no means of ascertaining. My opinion, however, is that the volume of their offerings would be substantial.

"It seems clear, in any event, that directors of such businesses will not assume the unusual risks which they would incur under the present liability provisions of the act and will not vote for new or refunding issues. I believe in regulation of security issues, but I think that those responsible for the act as it stands got more out of our past experience than there was in it, and that prompt modification of the measure would greatly contribute toward economic recovery."

Frank D'Olier, vice president, the Prudential Insurance Co., Newark:

"Replying to your telegram, we do not believe that lack of market is preventing the sale of securities. Based on our own experience we believe that life-insurance companies and other like institutions offer a substantial market for new issues of high-grade securities."

Lammot du Pont, president E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., Wilmington:

"Telegram received. If statement refers to new issues, feel confident chairman is mistaken. Know positively of cases where Securities Act has prevented issue of new securities. Lack of market may be contributing cause, but I have no information to so indicate."

Henry D. Sharpe, president Brown & Sharpe Manufacturing Co., machine tools, Providence:

"Replying to your inquiry, Chairman RAYBURN'S statement is ingeniously worded to obscure real happenings. Realities of situation are all against implications of his statement. Fault of Securities Act is discouragement of issue of new securities potentially of enormous volume leading to lack of supply of prime securities in present market. Buying and selling in prime securities now generally confined to selected issues of period before Securities Act resulting in selected issues being priced too high. Securities Act, without reasonable doubt, has actually prevented issuance of healthy new securities because of intrinsic difficulties prescribed and refusal of directors to submit themselves to unreckoned liabilities. Securities Act in present form was monumental blunder."

R. H. Whitehead, president New Haven Clock Co., Hartford:

"The Securities Act has prevented the sale of securities. In many cases financing has been done through banks on short-term basis, which should have been through permanent long-term financing. The market is willing and anxious for good securities at present. The matter has now become a vicious circle. Manufacturing corporations looking ahead fear planning for new financing because of fear of penalties under Securities Act. Bankers fear handling for same reason. Buyers fear to purchase because proper action is hampered under the act. If a dam can be broken, manufacturing corporations will plan ahead, sell securities, buy new machinery and materials, put men to work, thus reversing the circle. Even if Mr. RAYBURN'S statements as to last year were correct, we should be looking ahead in regard to this act rather than estimating its effect on past years' financing."

C. M. Chester, president General Foods Corporation, New York:

"Your wire third. As our corporation is not now, nor likely to be in need of financing, our interest in the securities bill is solely what bearing it has on retarding recovery. It is the unanimous opinion of my friends, whom I consider most competent to judge, that the drastic provisions of the National Securities Act are unquestionably holding back new financing which, if permitted to take place, would have beneficial effects of the greatest importance and would definitely stimulate employment."

C. D. Sturtevant, president Bartlett-Frazier Co., grain dealers, Chicago:

"The uncertainty as to extent to which powers granted under the Securities Act might be used to control general investment in securities has tendency to make capital hesitate about immediate investment in corporate securities. I feel, however, that the present noticeable lack of market for new private securities is rather the result of uncertainty of the general-future attitude of Government toward private industry. Constant repetition by public officials of the theory that the profit motive can be officially ignored in industrial reorganization, public press discussion to the same effect, and the enforcement of short hours and high pay, with consequent increased cost of production, coincident with a cracking down upon consumer prices, is probably the strongest deterrent to new investment of private capital in recapitalization of industry. With present belief that the N.R.A. program is directly dissipating industrial capital, there is naturally small enthusiasm in furnishing additional capital to be handled the same way."

P. W. Litchfield, president Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., Akron, Ohio:

"I believe both the Securities Act and the pending stock exchange bill are still too severe and go beyond the needs of regulation to a degree calculated to retard recovery. In my opinion the Securities Act is tending to dam necessary new and refunding securities which must be sold if particularly the capital goods industries are to share in the upward swing. I am particularly opposed to those sections of the stock exchange bill which unnecessarily involve corporations and propose to subject them to additional burdensome control merely because their securities are dealt in on the stock exchanges. It should not be necessary for our Government to hamper business with additional regulation because some corporations may have been charged with improper financial transactions. There are ample existing laws. Better enforcement of them would prevent recurrence."

F. C. Rand, chairman International Shoe Co., St. Louis:

"In attempting to fix responsibility under Securities Act, contingent liabilities, uncertain and far-reaching, are established. This uncertainty is not only adding another burden to industry but is retarding the sale of securities of many healthy corporations which are conducted on the highest plane of integrity and service. The drastic provisions of the Securities Act have put an end to the sound principle of distributing stock to employees. Industry is not asking the Government for help, but it is making an earnest plea that Government desist from unnecessary regulations and restrictions which interfere with the orderly processes so essential to permanent success in business."

G. C. Miller, president Dodge Manufacturing Corporation, machinery and elevators, Mishawaka, Ind.:

"If RAYBURN is honestly quoted, he is unaware of actual facts. There is ample money seeking investment. Numerous worthy industries need the capital. Underwriters willing and anxious to underwrite securities. Neither underwriters nor industry's sponsors dare risk the penalties of the Security Act or the spirit of vengeance against industry by Congress. Fear of this spirit is defeating the President's avowed plan for reemployment."

Randolph Catlin, president Gold Dust Corporation, New York:

"Think present form Securities Act undoubtedly hindering flow new capital into industry. Reasonable modification liability provisions should be made promptly."

J. Lichtenstein, president Consolidated Cigar Corporation, New York:

"It is my judgment and experience that the Securities Act is impeding the issuance of all character of securities except, perhaps, those of a highly speculative nature. Legitimate houses of issue and legitimate accountants are unwilling to assume the burdens which the act places on them, because the risks inherent therein are entirely out of line with any possible compensation paid to them or possible profit they may enjoy. I believe this has resulted in many corporations accumulating substantial sums to meet maturing obligations over the period of the next few years because they are convinced they cannot refinance their requirements in the ordinary channels. Such a course necessarily tends to restrict what otherwise might prove expansion programs to the benefit of business generally."

John A. Bush, president Brown Shoe Co., Inc., St. Louis:

"Purchasing power of public enormous as demonstrated by large purchases Government and high-grade bonds. Who would think of issuing securities under the present act? Bring forth good securities, and the public will buy and start the wheels of capital industries."

F. A. Seiberling, president Seiberling Rubber Co., Akron, Ohio:

"The Securities Act is preventing issue of new securities. Sale of existing securities seriously retarded by lack of confidence and fear on part of investors."

Carleton H. Palmer, E. R. Squibb & Sons, drugs and chemicals, New York:

"Answering your telegram today, while this company is not directly interested in marketing securities I personally know that the Securities Act in its present form is a direct barrier to the issuance of new securities by companies needing new capital for proper business purposes, and it is a powerful, if not the most powerful, influence against the flow of available capital. This is especially true when this act is considered in conjunction with the proposed stock exchange bill in its present form."

George M. Brown, president Certain-teed Products Corporation, roofing materials, linoleum, paints, etc., New York:

"Answering your inquiry for any comment from us regarding the position of Chairman RAYBURN, of House committee, will say we entirely disagree with his position. We believe business will improve throughout the world if allowed to proceed in a normal way. We further believe that all this experimenting and tinkering is already being harmful and will become extremely dangerous if continued."

C. F. Burroughs, president F. S. Royster Guano Co., Norfolk, Va.:

"Answering your wire, it is my opinion that the very rigid and minute restrictions in the present Securities Act will restrict the issuance of even the best new securities to a minimum. There is evident a strong and wide-spread demand for choice securities, this being held in check, however, by the general feeling of uncertainty."

L. S. Zacher, president the Travelers Life Insurance Co., Hartford:

"Conditions under which financing must be undertaken for emergencies, developments, and new enterprises which are all helpful to business recovery are made difficult by the restrictions and liabilities on directors, shareholders, and employees of borrowing corporations imposed by the Securities Act of 1933, in consequence of which there are few new issues of securities being listed on leading exchanges or enjoying a free market in which financial institutions have been accustomed to invest and for which funds have accumulated and are now awaiting employment in substantial amounts."

John S. Sensenbrenner, vice president Kimberly Clark Corporation, paper and pulp, Chicago:

"In my opinion, the great expense involved and the unlimited liability imposed on every person connected with the issue of securities is chief cause preventing sale of new securities."

Edgar M. Queeny, president Monsanto Chemical Co., St. Louis:

"The theory of the Securities Act meets with almost universal approval, but some of its terms, particularly those which impose unreasonable liabilities upon officers and directors for actions they may take on behalf of and in the interest of thousands of investors, are unjust. Only in the direst need will a man of responsibility submit to such a continuing liability and to the possibility of defending many unjustified nuisance lawsuits. A modification of the act, which would bring it into parallel with the British, which has satisfactorily stood the test of time, would, with a returning confidence in the stability of our currency, greatly increase the volume of securities available and stimulate employment in the lagging, heavy industries."

E. M. Allen, president the Mathieson Alkali Works, New York:

"Any statement that the Securities Act is not preventing the sale of securities, with the attendant loss of millions for construction and the keeping of thousands of men out of work is so far from the actual facts that a statement contradicting such misleading views hardly seems necessary. The Mathieson Alkali Works undoubtedly is consulted by many people contemplating putting out stock, due to the fact that we went through the filing of a certificate of registration when we put out over six million of stock."

P. D. Block, president Inland Steel Co., Chicago:

"Replying your telegram, difficult to make categorical assertion, but if Chairman RAYBURN is correctly quoted he is apparently mistaken about the lack of a market, since quotations for high-grade bonds demonstrate excellent market demand and large New York State issue just sold at very low yield, all indicating substantial capital seeking investment. Registration and other features of Securities Act undoubtedly deterring much necessary financing and to that extent impeding economic recovery and throwing extra burden on Federal Government."

Richard R. Deupree, president Procter & Gamble, soap manufacturers, Cincinnati:

"In my opinion, the penalties and liabilities imposed by the Securities Act not only prevent but practically prohibit the issue and sale of new securities. We are in sympathy with properly regulated procedure but believe act as it stands detrimental to public interest."

Ralph E. Flanders, vice president and director, Jones & Lamson Machine Co., Springfield, Vt.:

"Chairman RAYBURN of the House committee is quoted as saying that the poor demand for securities is not due to the Securities Act, but to the lack of a market. This is a meaningless statement. There are considerable funds available for investment which are not attracted by private enterprise under present conditions and so drift into the support of Government financing as the least of the many available evils. We are thus being edged further and further into doubtful governmental enterprise at a time when private enterprise should be rapidly increasing. The conditions which discourage the market for private investment are primarily due to governmental policies which are well meant but destructive in some elements. Both the Securities Act and the Stock Exchange Act carry proper provisions for correcting abuses but they also carry unnecessary extreme and harmful provisions which discourage the flow of private funds into private enterprise. Much improvement has taken place recently in governmental policy but more needs to be done. The Government must actively foster private enterprise while guarding the investor. Only so can that volume of safe private employment be built up which will put the maximum of pay roll dollars into the hands of the workers of the country."

B. B. Gossett, president Chadwick Hoskins Co., cotton-goods manufacturers, Charlotte, N.C.:

"Replying it is my opinion that liberal investment of private capital is one of the prerequisites to the restoration of business, and I strongly feel that one of the greatest obstacles now in the path of recovery is lack of confidence and fear due to Securities Act. Therefore, unless prompt and definite action is speedily taken to remove causes for this lack of confidence, inevitable effect will be to prolong the depression."

Frank Munson, president Munson Steamship Co., New York:

"Your wire fourth. I have heard of present Securities Act preventing number of issues of new securities and materially interfering with or delaying reorganization plans."

Hal Y. Lemon, vice president National Bank of Detroit; director American Bankers' Association:

"In reply your telegram asking my opinion whether Securities Act is preventing sale of new securities, believe that it is certainly one of many factors which are retarding same. Would hesitate to guess its magnitude among these factors, but believe that it is important. Best indication of this is large number of high-coupon bonds of first-rate corporations selling at substantial premiums over call price. Only Securities Act, seems to me, to explain failure to refund these at lower coupon. If act is thus influencing refunding it must have corresponding effect on new financing."

J. B. Levison, president Firemen's Fund Insurance Co., San Francisco:

"It is my firm conviction that while the proposed Securities Act does not actually prevent the sale of securities, the information required under its terms, much of which is in my judgment irrelevant and without value to a prospective investor, to say nothing of the time and expense required, will deter corporations from entering the open market for their requirements. I believe the provisions of the act are altogether too burdensome in its present form and that drastic changes are vital to the success of future corporate financing. I cannot agree with the statement that the present difficulty is lack of market, as there appears to be an active demand for high-grade corporation bonds provided terms are attractive to borrowers."

Albert H. Morrill, president Kroger Grocery & Baking Co., Cincinnati:

"Have no personal experience on which to base accurate opinion as to the effect of the Securities Act preventing sale of securities. Kroger Grocery & Baking Co. does not need additional capital, but if it does its necessities would have to be pressing for me as president to take the responsibility of issuing statements on which a sale might be based, for I would hesitate to undertake the indefinite liability which might be involved."

B. C. Heacock, president Caterpillar Tractor Co., Peoria, Ill.:

"Chairman RAYBURN's statement probably possesses the doubtful virtue of being only part of the truth. Question is, What will be the effect of our legislation when sound enterprise again needs credit? During periods of business curtailment adequately financed concerns accumulate surplus cash, and as business expands disburse this cash and use credit. Present and contemplated legislation surely will retard business in seeking credit; therefore delay business recovery and in many instances delay action until the business is in desperation, with nothing more to risk, seeks credit and finds it no longer available to it, and if available, only through less sound securities than if same securities had been issued sooner. Believe it largely true that recently little except doubtful liquor and mining issues have appeared, possibly because businesses of sound standing have not needed credit and possibly because sound enterprise could ill afford to risk legislative penalties until law or practices have clarified obligations of issuers of securities."

Silas H. Strawn, past president United States Chamber of Commerce, New York:

"I believe there is abundant market for securities if the Securities Act did not prevent their issue and distribution. Confidence can only be restored by modification of this law."

Benjamin F. Affleck, president Universal Atlas Cement Co., Chicago:

"Replying telegram do not feel competent to express original opinion on Securities Act, but I accept judgment of experts in whom I have confidence and whose opinion it is the Security Act is making it extremely difficult for capital-goods industries and others to sell bonds and stocks and therefore raise money to carry on."

Bernard F. Gimbel, president Gimbel Bros., department store, New York:

"Replying to your telegram which has just reached me: My business does not enable me to be a judge of the volume of business in the sale of securities. The serious aspect of existing and proposed legislation concerning both the issue and sale of securities on exchanges seems to me to be as follows: In accordance with the habits of our people and the evolution of American business half our National wealth is represented by securities. The stock exchange is a complex mechanism constituting a great auction mart. On the whole I think it enjoys the confidence of the American investing public. Many ills seem attributed to it which have their cause elsewhere. In my personal relations with members of the New York Stock Exchange I have found their dealings efficient, honorable, and satisfactory. Frankly, I am fearful of the effect of any attempt by law to readjust the machinery of the exchange. Of course from a selfish standpoint any serious interference with the freedom of this great securities market will have a disastrous effect on the economic life of New York City and I believe will impair the value of the savings of the people as represented by securities which profit by the existence of a free, open, and honorably conducted market."

George W. White, president National Metropolitan Bank, Washington:

"Reference to your letter of this date. It would be interesting to know just how many corporations have applied for and/or received registration of proposed new investment securities. There is at least a rather widespread feeling that the drastic penalties imposed by the securities act upon officers and directors of corporations so applying have operated as a deterrent. The investing public should, of course, be protected from wildcat and speculative securities and operations. If perfectly responsible concerns are unwilling to put out new issues under the proposed regulations, the general business of the country will undoubtedly suffer, or else the proposed regulations should be so amended as to encourage new business and the use of credit."

J. S. Crutchfield, president American Fruit Growers, Inc., Pittsburgh:

"There is no lack of market for good new securities, but existing restrictive laws and fear of further similar legislation are interfering with normal volume of offerings. Congress should seize present unprecedented opportunity not only to eliminate manipulator, gambler, and crook but also to promote and insure maximum national prosperity for years to come by affording legitimate financing and business every reasonable facility and encouragement rather than hampering and restricting same. A free, open security market protected against manipulation would then reflect true status of Nation's business and finance and afford a dependable guide to investors and the public."

Justin Peters, president Pennsylvania Lumbermen's Mutual Fire Insurance Co., Philadelphia:

"Replying to your telegram of today, there is no doubt that Securities Act is very much retarding business recovery and is a grave mistake in its present shape."

F. B. Wells, vice president F. H. Peavey & Co., grain merchants, Minneapolis:

"Your telegram of even date has been referred to me in the absence of Mr. Heffelfinger. The nature of our business is such that we do not feel qualified to express an opinion upon the effect of the Securities Act. We have a distinct impression that the financing of new issues and the refinancing of maturing obligations is being seriously retarded by the proposed legislation."

Virgil Jordan, president National Industrial Conference Board, New York:

"The simplest way to test the correctness of Mr. RAYBURN's interpretation of the situation in the private-capital market is to moderate the primitive provisions of the Securities Act for a year and see what happens. In my opinion, the Securities Act as it stands will force Government financing of industry and cause enormous loss both to holders of outstanding securities and purchasers of new issues, because the act makes it improbable that executives of responsible corporations and security marketing concerns with substantial resources will assume the unlimited liabilities involved in new issues even of a sound character necessary for essential needs of industrial expansion, while new flotations of dubious and highly speculative securities by irresponsible persons are not only possible but definitely favored by the act. The record of security flotations under the act suggests clearly that the market will absorb all the securities offered, even bad ones, which are preferred under that act. Why not let investors have some good ones, too?"

O. J. Arnold, president Northwestern National Life Insurance Co., Minneapolis:

"Replying your wire: While I do not believe Securities Act is sole contributing factor to lack of new securities issues, there appears, nevertheless, to be evidence new issues of merit for which ready market exists have been withheld or have been offered with attractive features as exchanges for outstanding maturing issues in preference to cash sale because of provisions of act. This company is actively seeking appropriate investments for accumulating funds at reasonable yields, but finds field for investments extremely limited with really good securities selling at very high prices, probably due to lack of new emissions. While favoring reasonable measures governing securities offered for public sale, I feel it likely unfavorable effect of any too stringent provisions in Securities Act will be in more pronounced evidence from now on than at any time since its passage."

EXHIBIT SPEAKS LOUDER THAN WORDS

Charles R. Hook, president the American Rolling Mill Co., Middletown, Ohio:

"My opinion is diametrically opposed to that of Chairman RAYBURN of the House committee. Industry generally is opposed to the 1933 securities bill in its present form and also to the securities exchange bill now pending, not because they are opposed to the proper regulations covering securities issues and the stock exchanges, but because these acts place unnecessary and unfair regulations upon industry and prevent the issue or underwriting of securities which would find a ready market at the present time were it not for the fear of unscrupulous persons looking for technical openings to bring suits against bankers and industrialists.

"I am in possession of facts with respect to a sound industrial corporation which is anxious and desirous of making expenditures for capital goods to the extent of over $1,000,000. Like most all corporations in the durable-goods field, its working capital has been depleted by the depression and it would not be good business to use these funds for capital expenditures. The directors, because of the conditions imposed by the Securities Act and the personal liability that would hang over their heads, are unwilling to attempt a sale of the corporation's securities. This is a specific illustration of men in a durable-goods industry being denied employment because of restraint on the flow of new capital into private enterprise.

"I am sending herewith a copy of the employment record of the four major plants of our own company. You will note that in plant A the number of men on the pay roll in April 1934 over April 1933 was increased by 76.6 percent. At plant B the increase was 87 percent, at plant M 66.7 percent, and at plant Z only 2.1 percent. In plants A, B, and M a major proportion of the production goes into industries manufacturing semidurable products, while in plant Z the character of the equipment is such that the entire production of that plant is for the capital-goods industry only. It seems to me that this exhibit made up from the actual figures of our own company speak louder than any words that I might utter with respect to what has happened to the durable-goods industries and the need for sane consideration of industry's plight as a result of the oppression of the restrictive measures now in existence and proposed. Nine tenths of our unemployment is in capital-goods industries."

TAX ON BUTTER SUBSTITUTES—OPINION OF SUPREME COURT

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, on April 2, 1934, the Supreme Court delivered an opinion on the validity of a statute of the State of Washington which levies an excise tax of 15 cents per pound on all butter substitutes sold within the State. The tax was attacked on the ground that it was excessive and destructive of the business of appellant.

The Court held that a tax within the lawful power of a State may not be judicially stricken down under the due process clause simply because its enforcement may or will result in restricting or even destroying particular occupations or businesses. This decision, it seems to me, completely disposes of the arguments that have been made to the effect that the tax in the cotton bill, recently passed by the Senate, is unconstitutional. I ask unanimous consent to have the decision printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the opinion of the Supreme Court was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

No. 589.—October term, 1933

A. MAGNANO CO., APPELLANT, AGAINST G. W. HAMILTON, AS ATTORNEY GENERAL OF THE STATE OF WASHINGTON, ET AL., ETC. APPEAL FROM THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE WESTERN DISTRICT OF WASHINGTON

(Apr. 2, 1934)

Mr. Justice Sutherland delivered the opinion of the Court.

Appellant assails as invalid a statute of the State of Washington which levies an excise tax of 15 cents per pound on all butter substitutes sold within the State. Every distributor of such butter substitutes is required to file a duly acknowledged certificate with the director of agriculture, containing the name under which the distributor is transacting business within the State and other specified information. Sale of any butter substitute is forbidden until such certificate is furnished. The distributor must render to the director of agriculture on the 15th day of each month a sworn statement of the number of pounds of butter substitutes sold during the preceding calendar month. Section 10 of the act provides that the tax shall not be imposed on butter substitutes when sold for exportation to any other State, Territory, or nation; and any payment or the doing of any act which would constitute an unlawful burden upon the sale or distribution of butter substitutes in violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States is by section 13 excluded from the operation of the act. Violation of any provision of the act is denounced as a gross misdemeanor.

Appellant is a Washington corporation, and has for many years been engaged in importing and selling "Nucoa", a form of oleomargarine. Prior to the passage of the act it had derived a large annual net profit from sales made within the State. Since then, claiming the tax to be prohibitive, it has made no intrastate sales and no effort to do so. "Nucoa" is a nutritious and pure article of food, with a well-established place in the dietary.

Suit was brought to enjoin the enforcement of the act on the ground that it violates the Federal Constitution in the following particulars: (1) That the imposition of the tax has the effect of depriving complainant of its property without due process of law and of denying to it the equal protection of the laws in violation of the fourteenth amendment; (2) that the tax is not levied for a public purpose, but for the sole purpose of burdening or prohibiting the manufacture, importation, and sale of oleomargarine in aid of the dairy industry; (3) that the act imposes an unjust and discriminatory burden upon interstate commerce; and (4) that it interferes with the power of Congress to levy and collect taxes, imposts, and excises in violation of article I, section 8.

The case came before a statutory court of three judges, under section 266 of the Judicial Code, as amended, Twenty-eighth United States Code, section 380, first upon an application for an interlocutory injunction, which was denied, 2 Federal Supplement, page 414, and subsequently for final hearing, at the conclusion of which that court made written findings of fact and conclusions of law, as required by equity rule 70½, and entered a final decree dismissing the bill. Second Federal Supplement, page 417.

First. We put aside at once all of the foregoing contentions, except the one relating to due process of law, as being plainly without merit. 1. In respect of the equal-protection clause it is obvious that the differences between butter and oleomargarine are sufficient to justify their separate classification for purposes of taxation. 2. That the tax is for a public purpose is equally clear, since that requirement has regard to the use which is to be made of the revenue derived from the tax, and not to any ulterior motive or purpose which may have influenced the legislature in passing the act. And a tax designed to be expended for a public purpose does not cease to be one levied for that purpose because it has the effect of imposing a burden upon one class of business enterprises in such a way as to benefit another class. 3. The act, considered as a whole, clearly negatives the idea that a burden is imposed upon interstate commerce as the court below held. The tax is confined to sales within the State, and (secs. 10 and 13, supra) has no application to sales of oleomargarine to be either imported or exported in interstate commerce. 4. The contention that the act interferes with the taxing power of the United States seems to be based upon the supposition that the State tax is so great that it will put an end to the sale of oleomargarine within the State of Washington and thereby destroy a potential subject of Federal taxation. Assuming such a consequence and putting other questions aside, the effect of it upon appellant would be so remote, speculative, and indirect as to afford appellant no basis for invoking the powers of a court of equity. Compare Massachusetts v. Mellon (262 U.S. 447, 487); Florida v. Mellon (273 U.S. 12, 17–18).

Second. Except in rare and special instances,[1] the due process of law clause contained in the fifth amendment is not a limitation upon the taxing power conferred upon Congress by the Constitution. Brushaber v. Union Pac. R.R. (240 U.S. 1, 24). And no reason exists for applying a different rule against a State in the case of the fourteenth amendment. French v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. (181 U.S. 324, 329); Heiner v. Donnan (285 U.S. 312, 326). That clause is applicable to a taxing statute such as the one here assailed only if the act be so arbitrary as to compel the conclusion that it does not involve an exertion of the taxing power, but constitutes, in substance and effect, the direct exertion of a different and forbidden power, as, for example, the confiscation of property. Compare M'Culloch v. Maryland (4 Wheat. 316, 423); Child Labor Tax Case (259 U.S. 20, 37, et seq.); McCray v. United States, (195 U.S. 27, 60); Brushaber v. Union Pac. R.R., supra, 24–25); Henderson Bridge Co. v. Henderson City (173 U.S. 592, 614–615); Nichols v. Coolidge (274 U.S. 531, 542). Collateral purposes or motives of a legislature in levying a tax of a kind within the reach of its lawful power are matters beyond the scope of judicial inquiry. McCray v. United States, supra, 56–59). Nor may a tax within the lawful power of a State be judicially stricken down under the due process clause simply because its enforcement may or will result in restricting or even destroying particular occupations or businesses; Loan Association v. Topeka (20 Wall. 655, 663–664); McCray v. United States, supra, 56–58), and authorities cited; Alaska Fish Co. v. Smith (255 U.S. 44, 48–49); Child Labor Tax Case, supra, 38, 40–43), unless, indeed, as already indicated, its necessary interpretation and effect be such as plainly to demonstrate that the form of taxation was adopted as a mere disguise, under which there was exercised, in reality, another and different power denied by the Federal Constitution to the State. The present case does not furnish such a demonstration.

The point may be conceded that the tax is so excessive that it may or will result in destroying the intrastate business of appellant; but that is precisely the point which was made in the attack upon the validity of the 10-percent tax imposed upon the notes of State banks involved in Veazie Bank v. Fenno (8 Wall. 533, 548). This Court there disposed of it by saying that the courts are without authority to prescribe limitations upon the exercise of the acknowledged powers of the legislative departments. "The power to tax may be exercised oppressively upon persons, but the responsibility of the legislature is not to the courts, but to the people by whom its members are elected." Again, in the McCray case, supra, answering a like contention, this Court said (p. 59) that the argument rested upon the proposition "that, although the tax be within the power, as enforcing it will destroy or restrict the manufacture of artificially colored oleomargarine, therefore the power to levy the tax did not obtain. This, however, is but to say that the question of power depends, not upon the authority conferred by the Constitution, but upon what may be the consequence arising from the exercise of the lawful authority." And it was held that if a tax be within the lawful power of the legislature, the exertion of the power may not be restrained because of the results to arise from its exercise.

In Alaska Fish Co. v. Smith, (supra, 48–49), a statute of Alaska levying a heavy license tax upon persons manufacturing fish oil, etc., was upheld as constitutional against the contention that it would prohibit and confiscate plaintiff's business. "Even if the tax," the court said, "should destroy a business it would not be made invalid or require compensation upon that ground alone. Those who enter upon a business take that risk. * * * The acts must be judged by their contents not by the allegations as to their purpose in the complaint. We know of no objection to exacting a discouraging rate as the alternative to giving up a business, when the legislature has the full power of taxation."

In the Child Labor Tax Case, supra, this court, in holding unconstitutional the provisions of the Revenue Act of February 24, 1919, imposing a tax upon the employment of child labor, fully recognized the foregoing limitations upon the judicial authority; but declared that the act constituted an attempt to regulate a matter exclusively within the control of the State, and that although the exaction was called a tax it was, in fact, not a tax but a penalty exacted for the violation of the regulation. "Taxes are occasionally imposed", it was said (p. 38), "In the discretion of the legislature on proper subjects with the primary motive of obtaining revenue from them and with the incidental motive of discouraging them by making their continuance onerous. They do not lose their character as taxes because of the incidental motive. But there comes a time in the extension of the penalizing features of the so-called 'tax' when it loses its character as such and becomes a mere penalty with the characteristics of regulation and punishment. Such is the case in the law before us."

The statute here under review is in form plainly a taxing act, with nothing in its terms to suggest that it was intended to be anything else. It must be construed, and the intent and meaning of the legislature ascertained, from the language of the act, and the words used therein are to be given their ordinary meaning unless the context shows that they are differently used (Child Labor Tax case, supra, 36). If the tax imposed had been 5 cents instead of 15 cents per pound, no one, probably, would have thought of challenging its constitutionality or of suggesting that under the guise of imposing a tax another and different power had in fact been exercised. If a contrary conclusion were reached in the present case, it could rest upon nothing more than the single premise that the amount of the tax is so excessive that it will bring about the destruction of appellant's business, a premise which, standing alone, this court heretofore has uniformly rejected as furnishing no juridical ground for striking down a taxing act. As we have already seen, it was definitely rejected in the Veazie Bank case, where it was urged that the tax was "so excessive as to indicate a purpose on the part of Congress to destroy the franchise of the bank"; in the McCray case, where it was said that the discretion of Congress could not be controlled or limited by the Courts because the latter might deem the incidence of the tax oppressive or even destructive; in the Alaska Fish case, from which we have just quoted; and in the Child Labor Tax case, where it was held that the intent of Congress must be derived from the lanugage of the act and that a prohibition instead of a tax was intended might not be inferred solely from its heavy burden.

From the beginning of our Government the courts have sustained taxes, although imposed with the collateral intent of effecting ulterior ends which, considered apart, were beyond the constitutional power of the lawmakers to realize by legislation directly addressed to their accomplishments. Those decisions, as the foregoing discussion discloses, rule the present case.

TAX ON OILS AND FATS AND JAPANESE TRADE WITH PHILIPPINES

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD without reading a joint statement made by the National Grange, the American Farm Bureau Federation, the American Fisheries, the National Dairy Union, the Texas and Oklahoma Cottonseed Crushers' Association, the National Cooperative Milk Producers' Association, and the Association of Domestic Producers of Inedible Fats, and also a short statement from the Associated Press concerning sales of Japanese goods in the Philippine Islands and Philippine trade to be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint statement and the Associated Press article were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 7, 1934.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The domestic groups which produce animal, vegetable, and marine fats and oils, signing this letter support without qualification, and without exemptions, excise taxes on the commodities named in paragraph (A) section 602 of the pending revenue bill, known usually as the Connally amendment.

Three major plans to secure exemption from these taxes are now being discussed, all of which plans we oppose:

1. To exempt certain amounts of coconut oil from the Philippine Islands, with an exemption of flóor stocks included. The Philippine product has an advantage in our markets of 2 cents per pound over coconut oil imported from other regions owing to the rate of duty not operating on the insular product. If the floor stocks should be exempted together with exemption of Philippine coconut oil practically all benefits would be denied the domestic producers.

2. To exempt all oils and fats which go into inedible products like soap. The American producers of oils and fats will never surrender either the edible or inedible uses to which these products can be put. No one urges a manufacturer to confine himself wholly to making and selling an edible product when as a natural output of his enterprise he has an inedible commodity to offer.

3. To exempt all oils and fats which are "denatured"—made unfit for edible uses. This exemption, if adopted, would be equivalent to forcing the domestic producers out of the edible uses to which their products could be applied.

If the Federal Government is to secure considerable revenue from these taxes; if the price level is to be raised so as to benefit both domestic and imported products; and if additional employment is to be given to American citizens, all exemptions and amendments like those above described must be defeated.

Very respectfully,

JAPAN GAINING FILIPINO TRADE AS UNITED STATES LOSES—NIPPONESE SALES UP 50 PERCENT, AMERICAN DOWN 12 PERCENT IN YEAR, SURVEY INDICATES—GREAT SHIFT IN TEXTILES—COTTON PRODUCTS' MARKET PASSING TO NEW CONTROL

(By the Associated Press)

MANILA, P.I., February 17.—Sales of Japanese goods in the Philippines increased about 50 percent last year as compared with 1933, while American sales declined 12 percent, preliminary estimates by E. D. Hester, American trade commissioner, reveal.

The principal Japanese gain was in the sale of cotton textiles, and the view that this market is definitely lost to the United States unless a new tariff is imposed was expressed by officials. In 7 months of 1933 Japan's share of the textile trade, normally amounting to only $10,000,000 a year, increased from 8 to 56 percent.

Because of the free-trade relations between the United States and the Philippines, Japan's total trade with the islands remained only a little more than a tenth of that of the United States, however.

TOTAL TRADE INCREASES

The total Philippine trade for 1933 was approximately $176,000,000, slightly larger than the year before. Shipments to the United States amounted to $90,500,000 as compared with $83,000,000 the year before, but imports were only $43,500,000 as compared with $51,500,000. Total trade with Japan was $12,000,000, imports increasing from $6,150,000 to $9,000,000 and exports from $250,500 to $3,000,000.

The Philippines' favorable trade balance for the year was approximately $30,000,000, the third largest on record and nearly twice the $16,000,000 of 1932. The United States duty-free market was the economic savior of the islands again, as the favorable balance with the United States alone was $45,000,000.

SUGAR LEADING EXPORT

Sugar accounted for about 70 percent of the value of Philippine exports, as compared with 63 percent the year before, all going to the United States. The American share of the textile market was 85 percent last May and Japan's only 8 percent, but in November Japanese sales of cotton goods had grown to 56 percent and the American had shrunk to 32 percent.

The end of the Chinese boycott of Japan in May was believed to be the chief reason, but higher American costs under the N.R.A. formed another factor. The boycott was effective in the Philippines because retail trade is largely in the hands of Chinese merchants.

The insular legislature rejected proposals for an increase in the tariff on textiles in 1932.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce the absence at his home of the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], occasioned by public necessity.

I also announce the absence of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], occasioned by illness, and the absence of my colleague the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], who has been called to his home by important litigation.

I desire further to announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] is necessarily detained from the Senate.

Mr. HEBERT. I wish to announce that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas in the chair). Eighty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 7835) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] had the floor when the Senate recessed last Friday. I do not mean to take the Senator off the floor, but I am wondering if we may now reach some understanding either as to a limitation of debate on the pending amendment or as to a vote on the amendment at a certain time?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, I could not hear the first portion of his remarks.

Mr. HARRISON. I was suggesting whether, following the speech of the Senator from Oklahoma, who desisted on Friday because of my request, we might get a unanimous-consent agreement that debate on the pending amendment be limited.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, does the Senator from Tennessee intend to leave the amendment in the same form in which it was proposed on Friday last?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if the amendment remains in that form and proposes to cut out all allowances for depletion, there will be considerable discussion of it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; it cuts out all special allowances for the oil companies, but it gives them the same rights that all other companies have for depreciation or depletion. If the Senator will look at the first section, at the top of page 81, he will see that paragraph (1) is left unchanged. The amendment does not take the oil companies out of that paragraph.

Mr. BORAH. Will the Senator from Mississippi permit the request to go over until the Senator from Oklahoma shall have concluded?

Mr. HARRISON. Very well. I merely express the desire that we might at least close this bill and get through with it by tomorrow. Of course, if we take up all day on this amendment, there will be no chance in the world to do it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to say to the Senator that I shall be glad to expedite the passage of the bill in every way in the world, and shall take very little time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I am sorry to take so much time of the Senate in discussing so tedious and so tiresome a topic as this. The fact that the subject is more or less statistical is no fault of mine. The fact that the discussion is so tedious is but partly a fault of mine. It was said that President McKinley had the faculty of crystallizing statistics into poetry. That would be a great gift on the part of anyone. I do not have it.

When I yielded the floor last Friday I was sketching the history of our legislation with respect to depletion allowances as applied to oil and gas wells in particular and to mines in general. I shall try to summarize in a sentence so the Senate will have the background.

The sixteenth amendment was adopted in 1913. The first income tax law was passed in October of that year. It provided the first depletion allowance, which was a maximum of 5 percent on the gross sales of oil and gas or minerals at the mouth of the well or mine. This measure was passed by a Democratic Congress, approved by a Democratic President, and administered by a Democratic Secretary of the Treasury, now a distinguished Member of this body—Senator McADOO.

Another law was enacted in 1916 which was carried over into the act of 1917, providing a new basis for depletion, which I shall not detail—passed by a Democratic Congress and approved by a Democratic President. In 1918 another measure was passed and became a law, adopting a new system insofar as discovery properties were concerned. It made special provision where a discovery well was brought in on an oil property or any other discovery of mineral deposits was made. That is the discovery provision which has provoked so much hostility on the part of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR]. It was passed by a Democratic House, passed by a Democratic Senate, approved by a Democratic President, and was administered in the first instance by a Democratic Secretary of the Treasury, now a distinguished Member of this body, the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS].

In 1926 the discovery provision, insofar as it applied to oil and gas properties, was discontinued. It was abandoned. What is known as the percentage basis was substituted in its stead, which permitted depletion in respect of oil and gas properties of not more than 27½ percent of the gross income derived by the operator from the property, the particular property from which the income was derived, and with a further provision that in no case should the depletion allowance exceed 50 percent of the net income from the property.

To make the history complete, discovery value was continued with respect to other mineral resources until the act of 1932, when it was discontinued as to coal, sulphur, and metal mines, which were at that time placed on a percentage basis, the limitation with respect to coal being 5 percent of the net income, with respect to metals, 15 percent, and with respect to sulphur, 23 percent. Why that indulgence in favor of brimstone I do not know unless the supply was not equal to the demand. The discovery provision still continues with respect to other natural deposits excepting those which I have just enumerated.

Mr. President, if there had happened what the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] charges has happened under this legislation, it would be extremely unwise legislation; I may say it would be reckless legislation; I think I shall go so far as to say it would be reprehensible legislation. But what the Senator said has happened under that measure not only did not happen, but it could not have happened, as I shall undertake to demonstrate.

The Senator from Tennessee said that under the various acts mentioned the owner of an oil property was in the first instance allowed to deplete up to the full amount of cost or value of the property; then that he was allowed to deplete up to the full discovery value of the property; and that then, under the act of 1926, the percentage basis, he was allowed to deplete 50 percent each year on his capital.

To use his illustration, in 1926 and 1927, on the basis of 50 percent, he was allowed to deplete up to 100 percent of the value of the property; again in 1928 and 1929 another 100 percent; and again in 1930 and 1931 another 100 percent. So the Senator said that under the various measures the owner of an oil property would have been allowed to deplete his capital cost seven times. His own computation shows only six times, but I should think that one full depletion more or less would make no particular difference in a wonderland of this sort.

The Senator from Tennessee, beginning with the first act back in 1913 and taking the first 5 years under our depletion policy, stated a hypothetical case which he said he used as an illustration. Unfortunately, it is not an illustration, because it could not have happened. It simply could not have happened. He assumed a party who bought an oil property in 1913 costing $10,000. The Senator said the purchaser would be allowed to deplete $2,000 a year for 5 years until he had depleted the full 100 percent value or cost of the property.

Mr. President, that illustration proceeds upon four false assumptions—and when I use the word "false" I mean no reflection, of course, upon the Senator from Tennessee. His illustration proceeds upon four different assumptions which do not accord with the law or the facts.

In the first place he assumes that under our first depletion act the basis for depletion allowance is the full value or cost. That was not true at all. It had no reference either to value or cost. It was limited to 5 percent of the sale value of the oil and gas at the mouth of the well—not to exceed 5 percent of such value. The Senator proceeds on the theory that a 20-percent deduction could have been made each year for return of capital—20 percent a year, according to his illustration. According to the law it could not have been more than 5 percent; not 5 percent of the capital, but 5 percent of the gross income from the sale of oil. It could not have exceeded 5 percent in any year.

The Senator's illustration proceeds upon the assumption that the Secretary of the Treasury, in rules and regulations prescribed by him, had fixed the life of an oil well as 5 years. No such rule or regulation was ever adopted. Each particular oil well and oil property was treated as a distinct entity, and its expectancy was computed according to the circumstances and conditions of the particular case.

The Senator goes on the further assumption that the production of an oil and gas well would have been uniform for 5 years, yielding a basis upon which 20-percent depletion would have returned the full capital in 5 years. I presume the Senator fell into that error because, generally speaking, oil producers do estimate the productive period of an oil well at approximately 5 years. It varies in different fields and with different wells; but the trade generally assumes that 60 percent of the full production of the well will be realized during the first year, 20 percent during the second year, 10 percent during the third, 6 percent the fourth, 4 percent the fifth year; but, as Senators all know, these wells generally settle down at about that period and may for years produce 1 or 2 or 3 barrels a day, as illustrated by the 275,000 wells now producing an average of 1 barrel a day.

That is the Senator's illustration, Mr. President; and much of his criticism is based upon the assumption that that illustration is true, or that it could have been true.

I have shown that it is not founded upon the facts or the law; that it is not true; and of course I mean no reflection, as the Senator understands.

Mr. President, that thing did not happen. It could not have happened under the law of 1913. It was a sheer impossibility. Let us see what did happen. Let us see what did happen out in the oil fields where the struggle for existence is a stern reality, and not a mere theatrical performance.

I have here the Two Hundred and Eighty-third United States Reports. I refer to the case of Thompson Oil Co. against the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. If this case had been improvised for the occasion, it could not have more perfectly fitted the facts and the law, or more perfectly refuted the conclusion which the Senator would have us draw from his illustration.

Now, let us see. The case came up from Oklahoma. The Thompson Oil Co. owned a producing oil lease on March 1, 1913, the basic date upon which calculations are made to determine fair market value with reference to our income-tax laws. As already stated, the first measure was passed in October of that year. The oil lease in this case on March 1, 1913, had a fair market value of $156,000; and this case, let me say, involves the law of 1913, the law of 1916, the law of 1917, and the law known as the act of 1918, but which was passed in February 1919. It involves each and every one of those measures.

As I say, the property had a fair market value on March 1, 1913, of $156,000. The oil company depleted for the first 3 years under the act of 1913. That act was in effect during 1913, 1914, and 1915. Under that measure this company was allowed to deplete $6,322. That was the return of capital to this company from that oil property—about $2,000 a year. That was the depletion allowed under the 5 percent act of 1913. But, sir, the actual depletion sustained by the oil company—and this is admitted in the record—was $91,686. Ninety-one thousand dollars was the actual depletion sustained by that company on that property during the 3 years mentioned. Thirty thousand dollars each year would have been allowed to the company, according to the Senator's illustration, but instead of that it was limited to $6,300 in the aggregate for the 3 years, so that as a matter of fact the oil company was compelled to pay taxes on $85,000 worth of its capital extracted from the well.

So you see how unsuited the Senator's illustration is to the law and to the facts at that time.

During the years 1916 and 1917 the company depleted under the new act of 1916. During those 2 years the allowed and the sustained depletion were the same—about $20,000. Then the act of 1918 was passed. When the Government came to apply the act of 1918—the question of discovery value was not involved—when it came to apply that act to this company and to ascertain its depletable reserves, of course, the oil company wanted to establish as broad a base of depletable capital as possible so as to minimize its taxes in the future. So it insisted that $6,000, and only $6,000, the amount which the Government had allowed for 1913, 1914, and 1915, should be charged against its depletable reserves for those 3 years in making the new appraisal.

The Government said, "No." It said, "While we have allowed you only $6,000 return of capital untaxed for those 3 years, when we come to lay the basis of your taxation in the future we are going to subtract the $91,000, notwithstanding $85,000 of it was disallowed, so as to narrow your capital value or reserve in the ground, and thus increase your taxes for the future." So the company was allowed only $6,000 depletion free from tax under the law of 1913; but under the act of 1918, when it came to lay the basis for future taxation, the Government subtracted $91,000 for the same period from the estimated reserves in the ground.

That is what happened, Mr. President. That is the company's experience under the law.

I might say in this connection that on the basis of value the oil in this lease had a depletable unit of 56 cents a barrel on March 1, 1913; but when the Government recomputed the unit of depletion under the act of 1918 it was reduced to 22 cents per barrel. Another element of value had entered into the question in the meantime which I shall not detail. It does not affect the principle.

Mr. President, that is what happened. What the Senator from Tennessee says about depleting once, depleting again, and depleting still again, could not happen under the law.

I ask Senators now to turn to page 23 of the pending bill, go to line 21, and read the sentence beginning on that line. They probably will not understand it. Senators from other than oil and gas States would prove themselves geniuses if they did understand it. I am afraid even some from mining States would not understand it. But what does it provide? It provides:

> In any case in which it is ascertained as a result of operations or of development work that the recoverable units are greater or less than the prior estimate thereof, then such prior estimate (but not the basis for depletion) shall be revised.

And so forth. That when it becomes evident from development and operation that the estimated depletion reserve was erroneous, there shall be a revised estimate. Notice that not the basis—not the value of the remaining reserve—shall not be changed, but only the estimate as to the number of recoverable units.

What does that mean? I will give an illustration in round numbers.

Suppose an oil property cost $100,000. That was the cost. Then its depletable value would, of course, be $100,000. Suppose the Treasury Department estimated that it would yield a million barrels. Then the depletion unit would be 10 cents a barrel. The owner would be entitled to subtract that amount on each barrel from his net income-tax return. You divide the value, of course, by the total recoverable units.

Suppose in that case 500,000 barrels were produced the first 2 years, and depletion was made on that basis, which would mean a return of capital of $50,000, which would still leave $50,000 undepleted in the ground, which would be the base referred to in the section to which I have just called your attention. That base of $50,000 cannot be changed. But suppose the Treasury Department decides that its first estimate was too low, and that the property would still yield a million barrels. Then the $50,000 of remaining value, still undepleted, would be divided by 1,000,000, thus getting a new depletion unit of 5 cents a barrel. Suppose the next year the well yields 100,000 barrels. The owner would get $5,000 as his depletion allowance for that year. The contingency which seemed to frighten the Senator from Tennessee has been hedged against by the Congress itself. So far as cost depletion is concerned, the thing could not happen.

Under the act of 1918, for reasons which I recited the other day, discovery valuation was adopted with reference to oil and gas and other natural deposits in cases where there was actual discovery and where the discovery value was out of proportion to the cost. I shall not rehearse the reasons which gave rise to that legislation.

It proves extremely difficult to administer. Under that law the Treasury, through its engineers, and the company, through its engineers, had to make elaborate computations and investigations to determine what the probable life of the well would be and what its annual production would be during its probable life. It was unsatisfactory from every standpoint; and I do not hestitate to say that, in my judgment, in some instances it led to unexpected consequences which were not desirable from the standpoint of the Public Treasury. As a result the law was amended by the act of 1921, so that the depletion in discovery cases could not exceed 100 percent of the net income from the property.

Mr. President, that was a restriction upon the depletion allowance and not an extension of it. It ought to commend itself to the Senator from Tennessee.

Again, in the act of 1924, the 100-percent allowance was reduced to 50 percent, the law providing that the depletion allowance should not exceed 50 percent of the net income from the discovery property. That would be a still further limitation, a still further restriction, upon the depletion allowance, not an extension of it. It ought to commend itself to the Senator from Tennessee.

In the act of 1926, because this discovery-value provision had proven so unsatisfactory and so difficult to administer, the Congress abandoned discovery value, insofar as oil properties were concerned, and provided that the depletion allowance should not exceed 27½ percent of the gross income from the particular property, but in no case to exceed 50 percent of the net income from the particular property.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. Has not the Senator's experience indicated that 27½ was perhaps too much?

Mr. GORE. I will say to the Senator that, as a matter of history, the question is academic. I know of only one case where 50 percent of the net income amounted to as much as 27½ percent of the gross income. That was in the case of the Vinton Oil Co., which I believe came to the Supreme Court. So, so far as the operating company is concerned, so far as those who own the working interests are concerned, that question is largely academic. It does have application to the royalty owner, as I shall show in a moment. I was not a Member of the Senate at the time that law was passed, and I do not know what motives or reasons led to the enactment of that measure.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. GORE. Certainly.

Mr. COUZENS. I think I perhaps could refer the Senator to a report made by the select committee of the Senate which investigated the Bureau of Internal Revenue.

Mr. GORE. I have examined the report.

Mr. COUZENS. I think that shows the reason for the change to the 27½ percent instead of using the analytical method of arriving at values.

Mr. GORE. Could the Senator quote the sentence?

Mr. COUZENS. The report which the committee made was the result of a great diversity of opinion among engineers, and a great possibility of fraud and favoritism in using the analytical method of arriving at valuation and, from the valuation, deducting a depletion and depreciation credit.

As an outcome of its study, the committee arrived at 27½ percent of the gross earnings as the proper basis, and experience has demonstrated that the Senator is correct in his position with respect to using this method rather than the analytical method. The only question that arose in my mind was whether or not, in arriving at the 27½ percent, Congress has not been too liberal in its allowance.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, as I was observing, the law provides that the depletion allowance shall be 27½ percent of the gross income, but that in no case shall it exceed 50 percent of the net income. As a matter of fact, the 27½-percent allowance is seldom allowed, seldom invoked, seldom applicable, because there is a limitation to 50 percent of the net income, and that point is arrived at before the 27½ percent is reached.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Both figures should be reduced at the same time, it seems clearly apparent. For instance, if we are to stand by this system, then the reduction certainly ought to be not to exceed 15 percent of gross income, and, say, 30 percent net. These subsidies should not be paid this one class of corporations in the United States.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. REED. When the figure of 27½ percent was arrived at, as the Senator from Michigan will recall, it was on the basis of specific statements from a great group of oil companies which were charging their depletion on the analytical basis. We found extreme irregularity among them. With some of them the depletion was as low as 20 percent of their gross, with others as high as 50 percent. It seemed to us to indicate great favoritism in the administration of that part of the law, and we took the average, which was shown by the analytical method, of all those companies, and it figured out 27 and a fraction percent. Then, when we got the bill on the floor, an effort was made here by some of the Senators from the oil States to increase it to 30 percent. We beat that by a margin of only one vote. That is how the 27½-percent provision was arrived at, and that is how it was kept in the bill.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, as the Senator suggests, the discovery valuation provision was extremely difficult to administer, assuming absence of favoritism, and assuming its presence, it did open wide the door for abuses, I might almost say scandals, although I have no particular cases in mind.

I do not know exactly what the Senator from Tennessee indicates when he says that no greater depletion allowance should be extended to oil and mining companies than is extended to other corporations.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, does the Senator want to know what I mean?

Mr. GORE. Yes; I do not know exactly what thought the Senator has in mind.

Mr. McKELLAR. The bill uses depreciation and depletion as one thing. What is called depletion in section 113 seems to be what is referred to as depreciation in the case of other corporations. They all ought to be put on the same basis. Oil companies have depreciation. In addition, they have depletion of 50 percent of their net, which is nothing in the world but a subsidy paid by the Government to oil companies. That is all it is.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, of course all other concerns have depreciation, and I might say that the table read by the Senator the other day showed that depreciation in the aggregate is 10 times as large as depletion.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; if the Senator will permit further, but the depletion is in addition to depreciation. Other companies have depreciation, and these particular companies have depletion in addition.

Mr. GORE. Not at all. Oil companies have both depletion and depreciation. They have depreciation like other companies. Insofar as their machinery, tools, pumps, and other equipment are concerned, they have depreciation like other companies. In addition to that they have depletion, to meet an entirely different situation and characteristic of this business. Depletion is limited to the return of capital as invested in natural deposits.

The Senator's analogy fails. As illustrated the other day, a flour merchant who expended $300,000 for flour and sold it for $400,000 would be allowed to deduct the $300,000 which he paid for the flour before arriving at his gross income. We should not call that depletion, but the thing happens, the deduction is made as a matter of course. With respect to mining concerns, we call it depletion, because it is a return of capital represented by the deposit removed from the ground, and it is done as a matter of public policy in order to enable these concerns to continue in business.

I had supposed that the 27½-percent provision was enacted with special reference to the royalty owners, because, as I understand, they have, technically speaking, no net income. Their net income and gross income are one and the same. Yet their capital is depleted or exhausted, and they deplete, of course, on the basis of 27½ percent of gross income. They do not deplete on a basis of 50 percent net. They have no net income in a technical sense. Percentage depletion is therefore a matter of vital concern to all owners of royalty, to those who own the land, but who have no share and own no stock in any oil trust or monopoly. It is the only protection provided for that large and important group in the oil States and mining States. Of course, Senators know that this percentage depletion applies only to producing companies where there is a net income from a particular oil property. In this respect there is a distinction between the producing company and the royalty owner.

Books are kept with each separate oil property, a lease generally constituting what is known as "a property."

Mr. President, I come to another part of the Senator's illustration which ought to remove some of the objections which he stated just a moment ago. The Senator spoke of what occurred after depleting in full on the basis of cost, after depleting in full on the basis of discovery value. In that connection let me say this: When a concern claimed discovery depletion after the act of 1918, if it had been operating as far back as 1913, as had the Thompson Oil Co., when the Department came to ascertain its basis for depletion under the act of 1918, all the sustained depletion under each of the preceding acts was deducted from the discovery value in order to ascertain the remaining discovery value subject to depletion under the discovery provision of the act of 1918.

It was not a duplication of depletion, as the Senator from Tennessee seems to fancy. The depletion allowed under the Discovery Act of 1918 was limited to the capital reserve still remaining in the ground. All previous depletion, whether allowed or not—all actual depletion was subtracted in arriving at the new value under the discovery enactment as a basis for future depletion.

But now the Senator from Tennessee says that under the percentage basis provided for in the act of 1926 an oil company which had depleted 100 percent of cost or value, had depleted 100 percent of discovery value, could still deplete again, over and over again. I hope the Senators will note the language.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Can the Senator give us any information as to whether the oil companies pay any taxes at all to the Federal Government?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir; Mr. President.

Mr. McKELLAR. I should like to see such a statement, if the Senator knows of any. Of course we cannot get it from the Treasury, because the Treasury does not permit tax returns to be made public.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I will insert in the RECORD a schedule showing the taxes paid by oil companies during the 12 years from 1921 to 1933. That schedule will show that for the year 1932, including the gasoline tax, which is a burden upon the oil producer, the oil industry of this country paid $747,000,000 in taxes; not to the Federal Government alone, but to the Federal Government, the State governments, and our various local governments.

Mr. McKELLAR. How much did it pay to the Federal Government?

Mr. GORE. That year it paid to the Federal Government only $12,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Twelve million dollars to the Federal Government, and the oil industry one of the biggest in the country!

Mr. GORE. The oil industry is one of the biggest in the country, yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. That industry paid to the Federal Government the pitiful sum, comparatively speaking, of $12,000,000. I do not see how the Senator can uphold his contention.

Mr. GORE. That would be characteristic of every other concern which has not been making profits during the depression. One year I remember the Federal taxes ran as high as $81,000,000. The payment of $12,000,000 to the Federal Government was made at the depth of the depression, and while that is true, and while the Federal tax was about the lowest that year of any year, their aggregate taxes, including gasoline taxes, were the highest in the history of the oil industry, the highest in the history of the United States.

Mr. President, the oil and gasoline taxes finally concentrate and react upon the oil producers. They bear the burden either directly or indirectly. Let the Senator mark this: Of all the taxes laid by our National, State, and local Governments combined, aggregating $14,000,000,000 a year, one twentieth of that vast aggregate is paid by the oil industry at one time or another, or in one form or another.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator's figures are very interesting. The oil industry, as I understood the Senator, paid seven hundred and some million dollars.

Mr. GORE. Seven hundred and forty-seven million dollars; that is, including the gasoline tax.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes. The industry paid $747,000,000 to the various State and other governments?

Mr. GORE. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. It paid to the Federal Government during that year $12,000,000?

Mr. GORE. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. How much of that $12,000,000 was due to the gasoline tax?

Mr. GORE. I do not think any of it was due to the gasoline tax. There is no way to estimate that. Does the Senator mean the profits from gasoline?

Mr. McKELLAR. Then it paid only $12,000,000 in income taxes?

Mr. GORE. To the Federal Government; that is true.

Mr. McKELLAR. To the Federal Government?

Mr. GORE. In that year.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator think the Federal Government should yield its taxes, and allow the oil business to be a taxable entity solely for the State and county governments?

Mr. GORE. Oh, no; not at all. The oil industry paid in income taxes to the Federal Government $81,000,000, I believe, in the year 1926. Hard as times are, bad as business is, the oil industry paid into the Federal Treasury last year $185,000,000 on gasoline—$185,000,000 paid at the refinery. In addition, the oil business pays the States and counties directly or indirectly, ad valorem taxes, gross-production taxes, excise taxes, as well as income taxes amounting to more than $700,000,000 a year. And excepting the last tax mentioned, the oil industry pays these ad valorem taxes, these gross production taxes and these excise taxes whether it has any net income or not. Is that welching?

I will put in the RECORD at the close of my remarks the schedule showing the record of tax payments for 12 years.

Mr. President, coming back to the Senator's illustration about these repeated deductions of 100 percent of capital, Senators will mark where the Senator from Tennessee said that in 1926 and 1927 they depleted 100 percent; in 1928 and 1929, 100 percent; in 1930 and 1931, 100 percent; 1932 and 1933, 100 percent. It counted up four different depletions of 100 percent.

Mr. President, the fundamental error in the Senator's computation is that he mistook invested capital for net income. Now, let me illustrate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. GORE. I yield for a question; yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Technically speaking, or speaking from the standpoint of the use of words, the Senator may be correct; but when we come to the actual fact we will find that each year at present every oil company is entitled to go scot-free of taxes on one half of its net income. The Senator says that an oil well's period of life is, on the average, 5 years. It is easy enough to find what the facts are. The oil companies are escaping taxation.

The Senator makes a bugaboo about dry wells and wildcat wells. They are not the wells that are paying the taxes. They will not pay the taxes under any law; but the real corporations are the Standard Oil Co., the Gulf Refining Co., Doherty's company, and Sinclair's company. Those are the concerns that are virtually escaping taxation under the present law, and it ought to be stopped.

Mr. GORE. Those big concerns realize the bulk of their income not from production, but from pipe lines, refineries, and the marketing end of the business, which incomes are unaffected by depletion of any sort.

Mr. President, in 1920 there were 16,000 oil producers in the United States. But 32 concerns out of that large number produced 58 percent of the total output. Sixteen thousand other individuals and companies produced 42 percent. This number is now much reduced. The mortality rate has been high. The small ones have perished. Perhaps a thousand or so survive. At a more recent date five of the former Standard Oil group produced one fourth of all the oil. Six large independent concerns also produced one fourth of the output, and the remaining independent concerns produced one half of the output.

Mr. President, the big concerns of which the Senator speaks are known in the trade as integrated concerns. They have producing wells or properties; they have refineries; they have pipe lines; they have tank cars and tank ships; they have retail wagons; they have filling stations. These big concerns, however, are not primarily producers, because they make a profit from the pipe lines, they make a profit from the refineries, they make a profit from the marketing of the refined products. It is to their interest for oil at the well to be cheap, and they do not object to a cheap price on their oil at their own wells, because it enables them to purchase oil from the independent producers at a cheapened price. They drive the price down, even though it reacts on their own oil at the well, and even though they take a loss on it as compared with the lifting cost. But when they refine and market the products of the oil, that is when they make their profits, when they do realize a profit, particularly on the pipe lines, which are more or less monopolized by the big companies.

But the independent producer, the little fellow, has no other market than the big companies which own refineries. Crude oil has a limited market. No one has any use for it except those who have refineries. The independent producer is perfectly helpless. He must sell to the big concerns which own refineries, and he has to take the price they pay. It is in his behalf that I stand here pleading today as against the big concerns which can throttle and destroy him, reducing the price of his output so low that he has to sell out to them, and he often does and goes his way and seeks again as a pioneer, or a wildcatter, for another well.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator's figures awhile ago struck me with some force. He said that the oil companies of the United States paid $747,000,000——

Mr. GORE. No; I did not say the oil companies.

Mr. McKELLAR. The oil industry.

Mr. GORE. Yes; I said that the entire gasoline tax, wherever imposed, pressed back upon the oil producers. Of course, he does not pay it out of pocket.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am accepting those figures. There are 48 States in the Union, and, according to the Senator's own figures, if the oil taxes were divided ratably by States, each State would get about $17,500,000 out of the oil industry, while the United States, under the law as it exists now and as the Senator is in favor of retaining it, would get only $12,000,000.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, it is not the fault of the oil companies if they did not pay more than $12,000,000 on their net income in 1932. The Senator knows that in 1932 oil was selling at the well in east Texas for 8 and 10 cents a barrel, whereas I believe the Tariff Board estimated that it cost $1.18 in Oklahoma to produce a barrel of oil. With oil selling for 8 cents a barrel, there was no net income. I presume the oil companies would have been glad to pay on a net income. That was the darkest hour in the oil industry; that was the "Valley Forge"; that was at the bottom of the depression; and some of the big concerns, even the larger companies, found themselves in serious danger. I do not mean the big standard companies or the big independents, but in former years they paid as high as $77,000,000 when the rate was low; they paid what was assessed against them.

Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee says that these concerns have been allowed to deplete five times over, to realize their capital five times over, in addition to former depletion on cost and former depletion on discovery value, making some seven times full depletion. Here is what actually happened: Take an oil company having properties worth $100,000, we will say. We will take an extraordinary case and assume that such company earns—the record of the business shows that the oil industry, taken as a whole, never has netted as much as 5 percent—but let us assume that this was an exceptionally rich property and an exceptionally fortunate owner, and that the property, which cost $100,000, had a net income of $20,000, which is a high maximum, taking the history of the business into account; but let us say its net income was $20,000. What would its depletion allowance be? It would be 50 percent of $20,000, or $10,000. It would not be $50,000 a year for 2 years, as the Senator from Tennessee estimates, but in 2 years it would be $20,000. The next year, with an income of $20,000, the depletion allowance would be $10,000, and the next year $10,000; so that it would complete its depletion in about 10 years—not 500 percent in 10 years, as the Senator says, but 100 percent in 10 years.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEWIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. GORE. I yield for a question; yes, sir.

Mr. McKELLAR. Here is an oil company with an income of $100,000.

Mr. GORE. Oh, no; the Senator is departing from the illustration.

Mr. McKELLAR. Wait a moment; I just want to complete the illustration.

Mr. GORE. But in the illustration the Senator used he assumed the value of the property as $100,000, not the net income.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will now take a company with an income of $100,000.

Mr. GORE. Very well.

Mr. McKELLAR. Suppose the discovery value of the well is $100,000 and it has an income of $100,000.

Mr. GORE. The discovery feature is all past history.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; it is past history; but here is what I want to ask the Senator: There is taken off $50,000 of its income for depletion, and that is 50 percent of its capital cost. That is taken off this year.

Mr. GORE. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. And next year there is taken off 50 percent on the income, which is $100,000 for capital depletion, solely and alone for capital depletion; and when the two are added together that takes off the discovery value of the well, as I understand.

Mr. GORE. That is the very point I was making. The Senator confuses invested capital with net income. In the case he used on Friday the value of the property was $100,000, and the Senator depleted its value 100 percent each 2 years by taking 50 percent a year. In the case which the Senator has just stated the income was $100,000 a year, and not the capital. That is to say, he assumed a case on Friday where there was $100,000 capital invested, and this morning he assumes a case where the net income is $100,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; on Friday I assumed that the discovery value was fixed at $100,000.

Mr. GORE. Very well.

Mr. McKELLAR. That the income was $100,000 and that there was a depletion allowance permitted of $50,000 because there was a net income of $100,000. and 50 percent was charged up to depletion. Under the law in 2 years the net income would do away with the discovery value.

Mr. GORE. The Senator has now assumed and stated the only conceivable case in which his illustration could apply—a case which is indeed conceivable, but which would never happen—and that is a case where the net income year after year was 100 percent of the invested capital. Of course that would not happen in one case in a thousand, and probably never would happen.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator evidently has never read the propaganda that used to be sent out for the sale of stocks of oil companies.

Mr. GORE. I wish I could say I had not. [Laughter.] I put some money in an oil well once and it is still there.

Mr. President, as I have said, the case cited by the Senator on Friday last assumed an oil property worth $100,000, which cost a hundred thousand dollars. Then only if it be assumed that its net profit would be $100,000 a year would his illustration apply and his conclusion follow. The whole history of the oil business shows a net income ranging from the "red" up to about 5 percent or a little less than 5 percent. Of course, there are a few instances——

Mr. McKELLAR. In that case there would not be any tax charged to anybody, because the allowance would be so much greater than 5 percent that there would not be any tax at all paid.

Mr. GORE. That is where the Senator gets confused again.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes, perhaps.

Mr. GORE. The tax applies to the income, and if they have any net income, and if the depletion applies to the income, whenever they have a net income, of course, the depletion allowance applies. As I have previously stated, where there is no net income, of course, the percentage depletion allowance does not apply, and it is only in a case where the net income was equal to the entire capital invested that the Senator's illustration would be apt. I think, generally speaking, it is assumed that the net profits are something like 6 to 10 percent of the gross—I may be far afield on that—and the history of the industry shows that around 2½ to 3 percent is the net income on the investment.

So, by no conceivable case that would ever happen would the oil company deplete its full valuation in 2 years and again in 2 years and again 2 years, because that assumes that the production would keep up, but, as a rule, it rapidly declines. So the Senator's illustration does not fit the facts as they are.

Mr. President, the Senator suggested the other day that I was speaking for home consumption. I do not profess to be indifferent to the wishes or to the welfare of the people of my State. It happens that Oklahoma has from time to time been the leading oil-producing State in the Union. It is now one of the three largest. It is one of the largest producers of zinc and lead in the United States or in the world and a larger producer of coal. I think I am justified not only in feeling but in expressing interest in the welfare of the thousands of small concerns in my State which are struggling for existence and for the thousands of royalty owners as well.

Of course, it happens that the State of Tennessee is not so largely interested in mining as is the State of Oklahoma, although I may say, in passing, that the mining output of the State of Tennessee is not inconsiderable. During many years the output of the mines of Tennessee exceeded in value the entire output of the cotton crop marketed in the State, and frequently, year after year, the aggregate value of the mineral output of the State of Tennessee exceeded and, indeed, on some occasions has been twice as much not merely as the corn marketed within that State but twice as much as the corn produced in that State. Of course, I do not know why the Senator concentrates on oil and gas unless it be because no oil is produced in Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, yes; oil is produced in Tennessee.

Mr. GORE. I beg the Senator's pardon. There is a small oil field in Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. There are some oil wells in Tennessee; but I am not asking for a subsidy for the people of my State or of the United States anywhere.

Mr. GORE. I appreciate the fight the Senator has made in the past against subsidies. I sometimes think he sees them where they do not exist.

Mr. McKELLAR. It could not be so in this case because we have the testimony of the Secretary of the Treasury, who is certainly a fair and impartial man. In his testimony before the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives, referring to the allowances for which the Senator from Oklahoma is fighting, he calls those depletion allowances in direct words a plain subsidy.

Mr. GORE. I know he used that language, and it may be very apt as a figure of speech. I believe figures of speech are designed to appeal to the imagination, and they certainly appeal to the imagination of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator has given the figures showing that the oil industry has paid $747,000,000 of taxes to the various States and counties thereof and only the pitifully small sum of $12,000,000 to the United States Government; there is no indulgence in fancy about the matter. It is a matter of dollars and cents. The oil industry ought to pay its just share of the burden of taxation to the Federal Government as well as to the State and county governments.

Mr. GORE. It pays on its income; and, as I have shown, it pays directly or indirectly more than $700,000,000 a year.

Mr. President, there are one or two other statements I wish to insert in the RECORD in connection with my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

(See exhibits A and B.)

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee has greatly overestimated the importance of depletion legislation and depletion allowances in our system of income taxation. He submitted a table the other day showing that for the 10 years, from 1921 to 1930, the aggregate of all deductions claimed by all corporations for all purposes, salaries among other things, amounted to $419,218,847,229. The table also showed that all depletion allowances claimed and received by all corporations entitled to such deductions for the entire 10 years amounted to only $5,031,847,450. That was but a trifle more than 1 percent of the total.

The table showed that for the year 1930 the aggregate for all deductions for all corporations for all purposes amounted to $50,751,112,292. The table showed that the total depletion allowances for that year amounted to only $463,015.786. That was less than 1 percent of the aggregate for the year.

Strange to say, the table showed that the total depletion allowances were less at the end of the 10 years than they were at the beginning of the 10 years. And, Mr. President, this includes and represents all the depletion allowances claimed and received by all the oil companies in the United States, with an aggregate invested capital of more than $12,000,000,000; and all the depletion allowances claimed and received by all the mining companies in the United States, including coal, copper, iron, sulphur, zinc, lead, gold, silver, and every other description of mining property or business.

The total depletion allowances for the year 1930 was less than one half of 1 percent upon the capital invested in the oil and mining business—the third largest business in the United States. It was hardly more than the dust in the balances. Of course, it would not do to say "much ado about nothing."

Mr. President, I think what I have said demonstrates conclusively that the oil concerns cannot deplete once, twice, thrice, and seven times over, as the Senator from Tennessee alleged. The depletion legislation was not designed and has not operated as a subsidy. It was enacted as a sort of insurance against the unavoidable risk and inevitable losses which are inseparable from the oil industry. If the flour merchants, taken as a class, should find from experience that 1 out of every 3 carloads of flour which they order was wrecked or lost in transit and was uninsured, they would have to take that fact into account in the conduct of their business, and the Government would have to take it into account and make allowance for it in the taxation of their business and the fixing of their prices; call it depletion or not.

Let me take the case of a small concern that spends $25,000 in 1 year exploring and drilling a well and gets a dry hole, with no income against which to charge the expense.

Again, the second year another $25,000 is spent, with similar results. Similar expenditure is made in the third year, and again in the fourth year, and thus the small concern has a total loss of $100,000. Such cases are not unknown. In the fifth year the concern invests another $25,000 and gets oil production.

It has been the object of this legislation to reimburse that concern to some extent for the losses which have been sustained and the losses taken in an effort to explore for and discover oil. That has been the design of the legislation. It has not been abused, according to the history and according to the statistics of the industry.

Mr. President, I hope the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee will not prevail.

EXHIBIT A

EXTRACT FROM REMARKS OF JOHN CULLEN, REPRESENTATIVE OF MID-CONTINENT OIL & GAS ASSOCIATION, TULSA, OKLA.

For purposes of comparison it is assumed that the taxpayer invested the same $200,000 in a manufacturing industry and realizes the same net profit of $17,000 cash over the same 5-year period and assumes that he realizes it all in the fifth year. He will pay income taxes in the following amount:

Net profit	$17,000
Less personal exemption	2,500
Net income subject to tax	14,500
Tax 4 percent on first $4,000 of income	$160
Tax on 8 percent on balance over $4,000	840
Surtax	270
Total tax	1,270
Net cash profit remaining	15,730

In this case, the manufacturer pays a total tax of only $1,270 on a true net profit of $17,000 and has left an actual cash balance of $215,730 while the oil producer pays a total income tax of $39,630 without allowance for percentage depletion and a tax of $27,219 after allowance for percentage depletion as provided for in the present law.

Assume that the oil producer is not entitled to consider the $150,000 lost in dry holes in previous years as deductible from the income from the profitable venture, then he realized a net taxable profit after percentage depletion from the profitable venture of $139,100 over the 5-year period.

Had the investment been made in a manufacturing industry where the income was more stabilized and the profit was returned equally each year over the 5-year period, the income tax paid would be as follows:

Total net profit over the period	$139,100.00
Or a net profit per year of	27,820.00
Net taxable income per year	27,820.00
Less personal exemption	2,500.00
Income subject to tax	25,320.00
Tax at 4 percent on first $4,000 of income	160.00
Tax at 8 percent on balance of income	1,605.60
Surtax	1,180.20
Total tax per year	2,945.80
Total tax for 5 years	14,729.00

In this case the manufacturer pays an income tax of $14,729 over the 5-year period on a total profit of $139,100, while the oil operator pays an income tax on the same amount of net profit over the same period of years of $27,219 after allowance for the present percentage depletion, or will pay a tax of $39,630 if percentage depletion is denied.

In both cases the taxpayers invested $200,000 of original capital and the taxpayer in the manufacturing industry has left after all taxes a cash balance of $324,371, while the oil producer has left a cash balance of only $189,781 if percentage depletion is allowed and $177,370 if percentage depletion is denied.

The above examples and comparisons show conclusively the inequities of an income tax law on the oil producer as compared to other industries. They also show the vital importance of percentage depletion or some other reasonable allowance to partially eliminate these inequities. If this deduction is denied capital will not be available to the oil-producing industry and subsidies will then be necessary in order to assure the country of a supply of crude oil.

Estimated investment of the oil industry based on best available information. In 1930 American Petroleum Institute estimated the investment of $12,000,000,000.

Petroleum industry net earnings for the years 1921-31, inclusive, from publications of the U.S. Treasury Department. Earnings for the year 1932, estimated, based on published report of 30 major oil companies.

Income and profits tax arrived at in same manner.

Other taxes partially estimated.

Gasoline sales taxes from actual published figures.

It will be noted that the highest earnings on the industry's investment was 4.96 percent in 1925; 4.75 percent in 1926; 4.54 percent in 1929; and that the earnings in other years ranged downward to a loss of 2.76 percent in 1931, giving a weighted average earning on the investment for the 12-year period of 1.66 percent.

It will be noted that out of total net earnings by the industry for the 12-year period of $1,994,039,974, the industry paid in income and profits tax $527,556,324 and in other taxes $1,260,507,936, making a total of $1,788,064,260, which together with the gasoline sales taxes of $3,074,227,569 brought the total tax bill of the industry to the sum of $4,862,291,829.

RECIPROCAL TARIFF AGREEMENTS

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I realize that the subject which I am about to discuss may be said to be not entirely germane to the measure now under consideration, but it is of such tremendous import to many of my fellow citizens in the State of Rhode Island that I feel justified in asking the indulgence of my fellow Senators while I sound a note of warning to them that they may know what impends in the way of legislation in the Congress.

At the hearings before the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives on a bill to amend the Tariff Act of 1930, held on Thursday, March 8, 1934, the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wallace, speaking of what he termed "inefficient industries", was asked to designate which ones in his judgment should be displaced. In answer to a question by Mr. TREADWAY, of Massachusetts, he is reported as saying:

It would seem to me—and this is speaking, I may say, quite personally—that it would be necessary for the Executive and his advisers, in administering these powers, to use them with the same consideration for the industries and the wage earners employed in those industries, the inefficient industries, to use the powers with the same consideration for those industries as is being shown with respect to the humanity involved in these export industries which have been crippled by high tariffs. In other words, the procedure should be slow, should be careful, taking into account the fact, we will say, for instance, that here are certain workers who have spent their whole lifetime working in a factory of this type, and if there is a rapid loss in markets for the goods produced through that factory, an injustice might be done, and that fair warning should be given. It would seem to me that special efforts should be made to discover the kinds of goods that could be imported that would be noncompetitive. There are vast amounts of goods in Europe and the Orient produced by handwork methods of the nature of luxuries that could be imported here to the great delight of our women folks. They are the finer types of textiles, of which we produce very little, and in this direction should be our first efforts.

And the following colloquy occurred, as reported in the printed hearings at page 51:

Mr. TREADWAY. Let me get a little more of your views on that textile work. [Laughter.] When you speak of the Orient and India and around in there, I perhaps have in mind hand-woven rugs and that sort of thing, which I admit we do not make; but you used the word "textiles." Will you please give us a little insight into that, because there you are getting pretty near to Massachusetts? [Laughter.] In other words, instead of joking, let us talk seriously.

Mr. WALLACE. I qualified textiles by the adjective "finer."

Mr. TREADWAY. All right. I am glad you used that adjective "finer" textiles. Now will you please distinguish as between finer textiles that can be imported into this country under such trade agreements as you are asking Congress to set up for the administration, and that cannot be manufactured sufficiently and satisfactorily to the purchasing public of this country? Now, if you can answer questions of that kind, we may be able to do some business. [Laughter.]

Mr. WALLACE. Well, sir, it would seem to me to be altogether out of place to go into any great details——

Mr. TREADWAY. No; it is not. We want details; at least, I do. I tried to get them from the Secretary of State this morning without success; but I did do what I could to make the effort, at least.

Mr. WALLACE. I think there are certain grades of lace that Massachusetts does not make.

Mr. TREADWAY. I realize there is a little lace; that is true; but that is not a textile, is it? Would you define fine imported laces as corresponding to cloth?

Mr. WALLACE. Laces carry all the way from 100 to 120 percent; I suppose they must have intended——

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes; but New Jersey produces laces; they can be produced in New Jersey. We went all through that in the Tariff Act.

Mr. WALLACE. If you cannot produce them, why did you put on the tariff?

Mr. TREADWAY. Suppose you put every lace and curtain factory of the States of New Jersey and Pennsylvania out of business by this reciprocal method, how big an impression on the exportation of our goods will that make, by bringing those few lace curtains into this country? Now, if that is the reciprocal trade you men want to get, let us understand it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEWIS in the chair). Will the Senator from Rhode Island allow the present occupant of the Chair to ask, for information, before what committee that testimony was given? It interests the Chair very much.

Mr. HEBERT. The testimony was given before the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives on the 8th of March 1934, the committee at that time having under consideration what is commonly known as the "reciprocal agreements bill", which would authorize the President to enter into agreements to change the tariffs to a certain extent upon importance coming into this country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thanks the Senator, and apologizes for interrupting him.

Mr. HEBERT. From these statements by the Secretary of Agriculture, I feel justified in drawing the conclusion that in the administration of the provisions of the so-called "reciprocal trade agreements bill", one of the industries marked for early death is the manufacture of laces, and before I discuss the lace industry, as I propose to do, I want first to correct the misstatements appearing in the testimony given by the Secretary of Agriculture.

It is clear to me that the Secretary of Agriculture is not informed—at any rate, not to any considerable extent—of the domicile of the lace industry, that he does not know the volume of production in this country, that he is not familiar with the number of operatives engaged in our lace mills, and clearly he is not correctly informed as to the duties which laces carry under the existing law.

The Secretary of Agriculture states in his testimony, which I have quoted, that laces are subject to a duty all the way from 100 to 120 percent. Under the Tariff Act of 1930, paragraph 1529–a, wherein are listed all of the laces that are subject to a tariff charge when imported into this country, a duty of 90 percent ad valorem is imposed. Then follows a provision affecting some specific lace articles which carry a duty of 75 percent. In paragraph (b), articles made in whole or in part of lace carry a duty of 70 cents per dozen, 3 cents each, and 40 percent ad valorem, with some modifications for different grades. And it is to be observed that nowhere in this provision of the tariff law is there a duty of 100 or 120 percent provided.

Under date of April 4, 1934, I received a letter from the treasurer of the Richmond Lace Works, Inc., whose mills are located at Alton, R.I. He says with reference to these proposed reciprocal tariff agreements:

As Secretary Wallace has publicly cited the lace industry as one of the inefficient industries, and seems willing to sacrifice the entire industry in order to endeavor to develop export trade, I beg to call attention to a few facts with regard to this industry.

With an experience of 25 years in an important position in the cotton textile industry, plus 17 years in the lace industry, I feel perfectly competent to state that in my opinion the lace industry in America has become a very efficient industry. It is the most intricate, complicated branch of the entire textile industry.

In 1909–10, for a period of some months, the United States Government invited investment in this industry by placing the complicated and expensive lace-making machinery on the free list, and many investors in this country responded, with the result that more than $20,000,000 of invested capital was put into the industry, followed by further amounts in recent years, and probably more than 8,000 people are employed, many of them highly skilled workers, who look upon their occupation as a life trade.

I believe that today the industry is more efficient in the United States than in Europe, but due to the very high wages paid here in comparison with those paid in France and other European countries, probably three to four times as great, the lace industry certainly needs a high rate of tariff protection in order to survive. The present rate was never intended to shut off foreign competition, as it is most desirable to have European goods coming into this country freely as they always have, but we do need an adequate rate in order to exist, and the present rate has been found over a period of years to be not too high.

It seems to us that the lace industry is a very desirable one for the United States, providing lucrative and agreeable employment to many people.

The industry was one of the first to respond under the National Industrial Recovery Act, and is operating under the sixth code signed by the President. Naturally our operating costs have been increased materially, but the industry is operating in a very efficient manner, and we greatly resent Secretary Wallace's characterization of the industry as inefficient.

Especially in view of the manner in which investment in this industry was encouraged by the Government, we feel that it would be a great injustice to wipe out the invested capital and throw out of employment thousands of people in order that some foreign trade in other commodities might perhaps be obtained.

It is our hope that you will make every possible effort to oppose the passage of this bill, at least in its present form.

The writer of this letter, I believe, is absolutely correct in the conclusions which he sets forth in his letter.

Now let me give you a little bit of the history of the lace industry as it has been developed in the United States. It was first established here in 1909, shortly after the passage of the tariff act of that year. That tariff act exempted lace machinery from any import duties, the idea being that it would encourage the establishment of that type of manufacture in this country, to supplement the cotton-textile industry, and to take up the excess labor which had previously been employed in cotton-cloth manufacturing. As a result of this legislation a number of plants were established at that time, and it is estimated that approximately 95 percent of the machinery for the manufacture of laces now operating in the United States was imported during that period. I may add that all lace machinery now in use here is imported from abroad.

The lace industry of the United States had its inception in the State of Rhode Island, where at the present time nearly half of the total productive capacity is to be found. Some mills are located in the States of New Jersey, Pennsylvania, New York, Connecticut, Ohio, and Illinois. The number of lace machines, as the looms upon which laces are manufactured are known, and the States where they are located, are as follows:

Rhode Island	258
New Jersey	70
Pennsylvania	78
New York	80
Connecticut	70
Ohio	31
Illinois	29
Total	616

CAPITAL INVESTED

At the time the tariff bill was under consideration here in 1929, it was estimated that approximately $25,000,000 had been invested in the lace mills in the United States. There were at that time some 8,000 operatives actually employed in the industry, though it was estimated that at full capacity they could provide employment for not less than 15,000 people. While actual production for the year 1927, which was the last then available, had a value of approximately $12,000,000, yet the potential annual output was estimated to be in the neighborhood of $35,000,000.

As compared with this total output of the industry in the United States, the then average annual importations had a value of something in excess of $26,000,000.

In other words, while the output of our mills at that time had a value of approximately $12,000,000 the importations from abroad competing with those products of our mills had a value of approximately $26,000,000.

COMPARISON OF AMERICAN AND FOREIGN METHODS OF MANUFACTURE

The lace machines operated in America are identical with those in use in France and England, our principal competitors, though our machines are, in the main, more modern. The fact is that all of our machines are imported from abroad, none of them being produced in the United States. It is safe to say, too, that American plants are operated more efficiently than those in Europe. For the most part, the individual units are much larger. The average American plant consists of from 18 to 20 lace machines, whereas European plants, particularly those in France, operate from 2 to 6 machines per unit. It is to be noted that every process of manufacture, both here and abroad, is identical, so that the only essential difference in costs is found in the items of labor and yarns.

COMPARATIVE WAGES IN UNITED STATES AND EUROPE

Ninety percent of the lace-machine operatives in this country have been trained abroad. The training of these operatives is a slow process and so far as the operation of machines in the industry is concerned, it follows that there is no difference in point of efficiency between the United States and France and England.

There is a difference, however, in the salaries and wages paid to the operatives. For example, in 1929, lace weavers in this country were paid a weekly wage of approximately $55, whereas the same workmen, trained in the same way, though working longer hours generally, but having the same efficiency and operating machines identical with those in the United States, received $14 per week in France. The workers other than weavers in the mills in the United States received a weekly wage of $42, while like operatives in France were paid $9. The average wage in the lace mills of this country at the time to which I refer was $39.88 per week per worker; and the average wage in the lace mills in France at that time was $9.38 per week.

Practically all of our lace machine operatives were trained in France and England, and if we assume they are inefficient, then we must assume that similar operatives in France and England are likewise inefficient.

It cannot be said that there is inefficiency in the lace industry in the United States, so far as the machinery is concerned, since that, too, is manufactured abroad and imported here and is just like that in use abroad.

It is true, and I have admitted the fact many times, because we had this subject under discussion for a considerable period of time when the tariff bill was before the Senate in 1929, that unless the lace manufacturers in the United States can secure a sufficient degree of protection so as to equalize the labor cost, they cannot compete with importations from abroad. That is likewise true of many of our American industries which have to meet foreign competition and which could not be classed as inefficient by any stretch of the imagination. Given the same conditions of manufacture, the same costs of material, the same rate of wage as obtain in the countries of Europe, my contention is that American manufacturers could compete with the world. I believe that is true of the lace industry, but it is not hard to understand how difficult is the problem of the American manufacturer whose wage rate is 400 percent greater than that of his competitors abroad. It might be that in some industries, because of mass production and of conditions which obtain there and are nonexistent elsewhere, our manufacturers can, in a large measure, overcome this difference in the wage scale, but it is not true of the lace industry since the processes are the same here and abroad, the machinery is the same, the quantity of production is about the same, and therefore the cost to the manufacturer is about equal with the exception of the item of labor.

It happens that the lace industry in the United States was first established in the State which I have the honor to represent in part in this body. It gives employment in normal times to several thousand people. It employs skilled labor, and it has paid high wages, on the average. Notwithstanding lace is protected to the extent of a 90-percent duty, it has come to my attention only recently that our mills are unable to compete with foreign importations. In fact, within a month, the representatives of lace factory operatives in my State wrote me and asked me to endeavor to obtain a sufficient degree of protection so that they might secure employment.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I might say to the Senator that the same condition exists in Pennsylvania.

Mr. HEBERT. I am quite sure that that must be so, because the conditions in the lace mills in Pennsylvania are very much the same as those in the lace mills in the State of Rhode Island, and in every other State where that industry is domiciled.

It will be observed that the Secretary of Agriculture proposes that those who are to be charged with the enforcement of the reciprocal provisions of the tariff bill shall have due regard to the humanity involved. Those officials of the new deal who propose to set themselves up as the final arbiters of what, in our country, is to survive, and what shall pass away, intend to be merciful so far as the exigencies will permit. In other words, it is not proposed that the lace industry, among others which the Secretary has marked for extinction, shall be summarily put out of existence, but rather that it shall be permitted to die a slow, lingering death. For, he says in the course of his testimony, to which I have already referred:

> It would seem to me, and this is speaking, I may say, quite personally, that it would be necessary for the Executive and his advisers in administering these powers, to use them with the same consideration for the industries and the wage earners employed in those industries—the inefficient industries—to use the powers with the same consideration for those industries, as is being shown with respect to the humanity involved in those export industries which have been crippled by high tariffs. In other words, the procedure should be slow, should be careful, taking into account the fact, we will say, for instance, that here are certain workers who have spent their whole lifetime working in a factory of this type; and if there is a rapid loss in markets for the goods produced through that factory, an injustice might be done, and that fair warning should be given.

Thus we see that, according to the views of the Secretary of Agriculture, an industry the death of which shall have been decreed is to be notified of the fact beforehand. It is to be told when it should prepare itself for the final stroke. Those engaged in that industry—the workers, the men having families to support, men who in many instances have been able to save something out of their earnings to purchase their little homes—will be notified in advance so that they may prepare themselves to engage in other lines of work. I assume what the Secretary of Agriculture has in mind is that a lace worker, for example, may in the space of a few months prepare himself to become a cultivator of the soil; or perhaps he might soon learn the manufacture of automobiles and fine tools; all of this during his spare time, so that when his industry passes out of existence he can step right into some other line of work. It does not appear that any consideration has been given to the capital needs of the business that is to die. It is assumed that the decrees are to be issued in advance of their execution, but no thought is to be had for those whose capital is invested, and, of course, all hope of recovering it must be abandoned. This will mean the loss of the savings of many of the working people—in Rhode Island at any rate, since much of the capital of the lace industry there comes from that source.

So far as the manufacture of lace is concerned, then, not long after the passage of the reciprocal tariff law the workers are to be told, with due consideration and with regard to the humanity involved—slowly, carefully—since they have spent their whole lifetime in a factory of this type—lest an injustice might be done and that fair warning may be given:

"Your industry is inefficient; at any rate, it is not as efficient here in the United States as it is in England and France. Therefore we have decreed that your jobs must be given to workmen in those countries. It is true that they work for about one fourth what is paid you. Their machines are no better than yours, but you cannot compete successfully with them. We are going to take away your protection and remove the duties on laces from other countries. We shall enter into trade negotiations with them to the end that someone here will be benefited, but you must make the sacrifice. Efforts will be made to find employment for you elsewhere, and it is hoped they will succeed."

Mr. President, the case I have cited is but an example of what may eventuate if the reciprocal tariff bill passes and its provisions are to be enforced by theorists who, for the most part, have no business of their own or have never been able to succeed in business if they have ever had one or have no experience in any industry. The manufacture of lace, started here at the instance of and with the encouragement of our Government, may be the first to pay the penalty of failing to live up to the standards of efficiency of a group of bureaucrats. What are the others that are to be marked for extinction? I have heard beet sugar mentioned. There must be many others. If, as in the case of lace, they need protection because of the high wages they pay, then may the wage earners be admonished as to what is impending.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HEBERT. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I have the greatest sympathy with the Senator's sturdy pro-American thesis. It may be some consolation to him, in respect to the lace industry in his State, to know that we in the Middle West have had experience of this same unhappy sort with these prospective tariff-bargaining bureaucrats, and we know what an amazing percentage of error they can reach in their conclusions. So much error may ultimately give pause even to our Democratic leaders ere they persist in this menacing program.

We of the West have been told, for example, that our domestic sugar-beet industry, like the Senator's lace industry, is inefficient, this being the word of the Secretary of Agriculture, and that it is expensive, this being the word ominously used by the President in his sugar message. We are told that, because it is inefficient and expensive, in the view of these philosophers, sooner or later it should progressively disappear from our economy. Yet the fact is that, thanks to this inefficient and expensive industry, sugar sells in the United States at retail cheaper than anywhere else in the world, with two possible exceptions. Not only is it prominent and useful in our agriculture and industry but it is a boon to our ultimate consumers. If that shows inefficiency and if that shows expensive production, heaven give us more of them in this country rather than less.

But the point is, as was well submitted by the able Senator from Rhode Island, who commendably steps promptly to the defense of his own menaced people; the point is that it is nothing less than contemptuous impudence for any academic bureaucrat in Washington to undertake to classify and regiment and hobble and ultimately to decree the destruction of any industry in the United States. This is not freedom. It is feudalism.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for his observation. I should have no fault with the judgment of men qualified to pass upon those things. If men in the industry itself, who have spent a life of endeavor in acquiring knowledge of it, were to pass upon the efficiency or inefficiency of a particular plant, that would be something with which we might have some sympathy; but to leave it to bureaucrats, to theorists, to men who probably never have been inside a lace factory, to decide that any factory is inefficient, is, to my mind, reducing the problem to the point of absurdity.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator once more on the same point, again carrying my analogy into his thoroughly pertinent observation?

Mr. HEBERT. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The particular commissar of the Department of Agriculture who is in charge of our sugar industry is a rice expert. He never was remotely related to sugar until within the last few months.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I assume that because both rice and sugar come from the soil, therefore he is qualified to pass upon both, and the efficiency of the production of each.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I think I can give a better illustration. In order to be assured that you are not prejudiced in what you do, you ought to have somebody who does not know anything about it pass on it. Then there can be no charge of prejudice.

It seems to me that the Senator from Rhode Island has been making a very remarkable statement about an industry which is new in the United States. I have been impressed by what he has said. The industry is very young, yet there is invested in it in the neighborhood of $29,000,000, more than is invested in either of the old countries where the industry had its beginnings; and as I understood the Senator, all the machinery used by the American manufacturers is purchased abroad.

Mr. HEBERT. That is true.

Mr. FESS. There is no reason why, under American stimulation, we may not also produce the machinery that is needed. The difficulty with respect to this theory is that we must take into consideration the European producer, in the hope that he will buy from us something that he is not buying at the present time. If that hope—which is a faint one, it seems to me—shall not be realized, it will give him employment that would otherwise come to America.

It seems to me the Senator from Rhode Island has castigated fairly the unfair situation which results from holding that, on the mere basis of inefficiency, we are not going to permit the lace industry at home to continue; and if that is to be the judgment with respect to industry generally, then, as the Senator from Michigan said, God help American industry.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, following along the lines of the observations made by the Senator from Ohio, these lace machines have never been produced in the United States, because they are most intricate and are very expensive; and our manufacturers here have never felt justified in entering upon their production, because they have never felt they could secure the protection they need against importations from abroad.

I have already said in my statement here this morning that the labor cost in the lace mills in the United States is just 400 percent more than that in France. Incidentally, during the tariff debate in 1929, I endeavored to secure further protection for American-made laces, and the item was contained in the bill as it passed the Senate but was eliminated in conference, and the inadequate provision for protection theretofore afforded was restored.

Let me state as a matter of interest, that when it was learned in Calais, France, which is the center of the lace industry of France, that the duties had been increased in the tariff bill, the French lacemakers paraded the streets, and it is said that as many as 5,000 people walked the streets of Calais protesting against what the Senate of the United States was attempting to do in order to find employment for its own people at remunerative wages. Whether or not the demonstration in Calais had any effect upon the Congress at that time I am not prepared to say, but I repeat that the item which I succeeded in having embodied into the tariff bill at that time was taken out in conference.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. HEBERT. I yield.

Mr. FESS. I think what we should primarily ask of the administration which is requesting this legislation, is a bill of particulars. What industry in the United States is to be exchanged for some alternative one over in Europe? There must be something sacrificed by us if we are to get something we are asking for, and it seems to me the administration ought to be frank with us and give us that information. The Ways and Means Committee of the House tried to get the information from the administration officials as to what particular industries we are going to sacrifice in order to get some special advantage from Europe which will enable us to increase our exports to Europe.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, the members of the committee who heard the Secretary of Agriculture, tried repeatedly to have the Secretary enumerate the industries that were going to pass out and be exchanged for industries abroad, in order that we might in this country make some advantageous agreements, but so far as I have been able to learn from a reading of the proceedings of that hearing they were not successful in having the Secretary of Agriculture name one, unless it be the lace industry, which I am discussing at this time.

Mr. FESS. That seems to me to be the serious danger of this blanket authority, because we are asked to give to the Executive authority without any specification as to what particular items will be acted upon, and it seems to me that not a Senator here would be willing to grant that sort of blanket authority.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, so far as the State which I in part represent is concerned, it is a very serious question. In that State we are essentially industrial, and unless our industries can have the necessary protection they are going to be wiped out. Many of our industrialists are most apprehensive, if I can read aright their views as expressed to me in the letters they are writing me constantly as to what is going to happen to them if the bill shall be enacted into law.

To such an extent is that true that in many instances the necessary capital is not forthcoming because of the uncertainty of the future. That, I again submit, may have much to do with preventing the recovery which we all hope to see.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. HEBERT. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator was referring a moment ago to the reaction in France 2 or 3 years ago when we temporarily increased the tariff on laces. I should like to call his attention to the more immediate reaction in Italy when the House passed the reciprocal tariff bill which the Senator is attacking. I read an Associated Press dispatch of March 29, 1934, from Rome:

> Approval by the United States House of Representatives of a bill conferring tariff bargaining powers upon President Roosevelt was welcomed prominently here tonight in the Italian press.

This is the Italian press applauding the action of the American House of Representatives. Continuing reading:

> Although the news arrived too late for official comment, the Fascist attitude toward the action was easily predictable, since Fascism always has considered tariff commercial conventions a particular prerogative of the Chief Executive.

In other words, Mr. President, with the Senator's permission I observe that the pending legislation, which the Senator so correctly and justly castigates, is a direct and specific step in the direction of American fascism.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I have mentioned what may happen to the lace industry if the bill should become a law. I am led to ask, What other industries are to be marked for extinction? The Senator from Michigan has referred to the item of beet sugar. I assume that there are many other items. If, as in the case of lace, they need protection because of the high wages that are paid, then may the wage earners be admonished as to what is impending.

Mr. President, this proposal of the Secretary of Agriculture, may or may not be a beautiful theory, but whether it be good or bad, it is pure theory nevertheless. It is in no sense new. Something of the kind has been tried through the years, indeed, through the centuries, and has always been set aside because it would not work out in practice.

If the passage of the pending reciprocal tariff bill contemplates any such action on the part of any administration, whether Democratic or Republican, then I am opposed to it, and I shall continue to oppose it while I am a Member of this body. After all, this is a government of laws and not of men.

Mr. FESS. Until recently.

Mr. HEBERT. And the Senator from Ohio remarks, "Until recently", and to some extent I am inclined to agree with the observation. It seems to me the tendency has been to change its form, notwithstanding it has been successful now for 150 years.

We are told that reciprocal tariff agreements will encourage foreign nations to purchase our goods. What are their means for doing so? They are unable, at any rate, that is their contention, to pay us the money which they now owe us. Would it be wise under those circumstances to make further advances to them upon their credit? They have not bought our goods for the simple reason that they have not thought it was advantageous for them to do so.

It must be borne in mind that other nations do not purchase our goods out of sentiment. They make purchases of us when they find it to their advantage to do so, just as we buy from them when we are convinced that it will be to our advantage.

I should prefer to protect our American markets, give employment to our people, maintain our standard of living—and, after all, they consume 92 percent of everything we produce—than to take the chance of destroying those markets for the sake of some business from abroad.

Mr. President, I realize that a more opportune time to discuss this particular question might present itself when the reciprocal tariff bill reaches the Senate for consideration, but I have been unwilling to defer until then this discussion of the recent statement of the Secretary of Agriculture in relation to an industry which means so much to the people of my State, and which in its implications, means the survival of the industrial system of our country.

This question rises above partisan politics, Mr. President, because it involves our whole people and their destiny. But if it must become involved in politics, I am encouraged that the party to which I have the honor to belong is a unit against this new threat and will resist it to the end. We are for protection. We are for America.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (S. 1135) to amend section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide for determining the heirs of deceased Indians, for the disposition and sale of allotments of deceased Indians, for the leasing of allotments, and for other purposes", approved June 25, 1910, as amended.

The message announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills of the Senate:

S. 193. An act to amend section 586 (c) of the act entitled "An act to amend subchapter 1 of chapter 18 of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia relating to degree-conferring institutions", approved March 2, 1929;

S. 194. An act to change the name of B Street SW., in the District of Columbia;

S. 1820. An act to amend the Code of Law for the District of Columbia;

S. 2057. An act authorizing the sale of certain property no longer required for public purposes in the District of Columbia; and

S. 2509. An act to readjust the boundaries of Whitehaven Parkway at Huidekoper Place, in the District of Columbia, provide for an exchange of land, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8471) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes, requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi, Mr. PARKS, Mr. BLANTON, Mr. BOLTON, and Mr. POWERS were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (S. 2729) to repeal an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to prohibit the manufacture or sale of alcoholic liquors in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes", approved February 14, 1917, and for other purposes, and it was signed by the Vice President.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WHITE in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8471) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. COPELAND. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. COPELAND, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. SHEPPARD, Mr. STEPHENS, Mr. TOWNSEND, and Mr. CAREY conferees on the part of the Senate.

CHARGES OF DR. WIRT—CANCELATION OF AIR-MAIL CONTRACTS

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HEBERT. I yield the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I send to the desk a copy of a resolution adopted by the Dunes Federated Club, of Gary, Ind., and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At the request of the Senator from Indiana, the resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DUNES FEDERATED CLUB,
Gary, Ind., April 5, 1934.

Senator ARTHUR R. ROBINSON,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR ROBINSON: At a regular meeting of the Dunes Federated Club the following resolution was endorsed unanimously:

"Whereas the extensive publication of recent statements of William A. Wirt, superintendent of Gary schools, charging unnamed Government officials with engaging in certain subversive and revolutionary movements designed to overthrow our present constitutional Government has created Nation-wide interest in the subject; and

"Whereas Dr. Wirt is known to members of the Dunes Federated Club, of Gary, as a man of serious thought and unimpeachable integrity: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Dunes Federated Club, of Gary, considers the above-mentioned charges of such grave importance as to require a full, searching, and complete investigation by a competent congressional committee into the truth or falsity of the charges, and that if the charges be sustained appropriate action should be taken by the Government; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of the foregoing resolution be sent to United States Senators FRED VAN NUYS and ARTHUR ROBINSON and Congressman WILLIAM T. SCHULTE."

We are asking your aid of Dr. Wirt in his preparation for and his appearance during any hearings before the House committee. We will greatly appreciate your influence in bringing about a complete investigation for the purpose of safeguarding the inherent rights of the American people.

Very respectfully yours,

L. LU ELLA COX,
Corresponding Secretary.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, a few days ago Dr. William A. Wirt, a very prominent educator, superintendent of the Gary schools since 1907, made his statement with reference to the trend of this Government toward Russian communism or toward communistic methods under the direction of the so-called "brain trust." Tremendous publicity was given to the utterance of Dr. Wirt. I suppose the country was stirred by that statement as probably by nothing else in recent weeks, unless, indeed, by the ruthless cancelation of the mail contracts, which was itself originally a tragic blunder, to be followed by blunder after blunder, until we have now reached the point where the aviation industry in America is practically destroyed, and a method for reestablishing the mail routes has been proposed by the Postmaster General that seems to have in it neither method nor reason.

However, I wanted to say a word about Dr. Wirt and his charges. No sooner had his statement been given publicity than prominent members of the Democratic Party, all over the United States, sprang to their feet attempting to indict Dr. Wirt. Prominent members of Congress of both Houses have pounced upon him as if he were a criminal, and, since there was no real answer to the charges he had made, they have sought to poison public opinion against Dr. Wirt himself by attempting to laugh off the charges, as if he were a common clown. Mr. President, that just simply cannot be done. The reason there has been the tremendous interest in the charges made by Dr. Wirt is because the American people—I think a majority of them—have been thinking along the same lines and Dr. Wirt has expressed in concrete terms the fears of the country. Because of that fact, his charges have had wide attention, and will continue to have wide attention, regardless of whether or not tomorrow the House committee may give him an opportunity to develop those charges. Many people here and throughout the country believe that the attempt tomorrow will be to convict Dr. Wirt, when, as a matter of fact, it is the "brain trust" and their wild idiosyncrasies of government that are under fire. It is not Dr. Wirt who is under fire; it is the "brain trust." Let no one ever forget that for a moment.

Dr. Wirt is a public-spirited, patriotic American citizen, who has a tremendous audience every time he speaks, who is known to every educator in the country, and who has done valuable constructive work in the educational world. But the "brain trust"—that is different.

There was this morning brought to my attention an article by David Lawrence in the United States News of the issue of April 9 of this year. I shall not read it all, but I certainly want it to go into the RECORD, because this whole question is well covered by Mr. Lawrence. It is under the caption—

THANK YOU, DR. WIRT

Midwestern educator has performed a public service in asking for an inquiry into the operations of the "brain trust." It is a species of invisible government that should be brought into the open. All influences that motivate legislation should be revealed.

Then the article reads at the outset as follows:

Out of the Middle West—from Hoosier land—comes a cry for truth.

The man who seeks it is not of Wall Street.

Dr. Wirt was not a broker or a New York banker or a high-powered salesman.

Dr. Wirt was not one of those oft-condemned classes who are supposed to be responsible for the crash of 1929 and the misery of our fellow citizens.

Dr. Wirt is just a superintendent of schools—one of those charged with the duty of telling the youth of America that this is the land of the free and the home of the brave; that the Constitution is a living document of human as well as property rights; that the system of government established by George Washington and Thomas Jefferson was a broad charter of principles, as fair today as it was 150 or more years ago, and that the people can add to or subtract from it at will by proper methods.

So Dr. Wirt has a right to speak and to ask questions. His position entitles him obviously to the right to petition Congress and ask what governmental policies mean. Nobody can deny him that privilege.

We can dismiss as lightly as we please the comment that somebody told Dr. Wirt that Mr. Roosevelt was just the Kerensky of the revolutionary movement and that a Stalin would succeed him. This is not really the important question—what someone remarked to someone else. The query raised by Dr. Wirt is a broader one and Congress would do well not to brush it aside carelessly.

There should be no whitewashing of the "brain trust" tomorrow when the House committee meets. It should give Dr. Wirt an opportunity to make his statement first of all, and then interrogate him, as other witnesses are interrogated when they come here.

Dr. Wirt is an American citizen entitled to the respect of the Congress. If the "brain trust" respects nobody, it does not mean necessarily that the "brain trust" controls the Congress, and that therefore Congress will respect nobody.

The country expects the House to go into this matter, and if it is not done right over there, then a committee should be appointed by the Senate for a real investigation. There should be no whitewashing of the "brain trust."

Dr. Wirt is not on trial. Let that be understood. It is the "brain trust" that is on trial.

I quote a little further from the David Lawrence article:

Who is back of new-deal legislation? For many years we have been condemning invisible government. We assume that hidden influences are corrupt. But often they are by no means corrupt because they hide from public view. In the present instance the "brain trust" works invisibly because that is tactful technique as long as we have the National Legislature.

Of course, if the National Legislature is abolished and we have a dictatorship, either a Kerensky or a Stalin in charge of the Nation, then the "brain trust" can be as bold as it desires. But it is necessary, so long as we seem to have a form of constitutional government, a form of parliamentary deliberation, a legislative system, to use tactful technique.

The article proceeds:

But it would be interesting to know the authorship of the new-deal legislation, just who sponsored some of the provisions in existing law and what were the reasons back of such sections of law as are today causing confusion and litigation.

There will be no difficulty about securing an admission that certain phrases were inserted in the preamble of existing law as a subterfuge—

This is Mr. Lawrence himself making the charge. This is not Dr. Wirt speaking:

Certain phrases were inserted in the preambles of existing law as a subterfuge, namely, to give lower courts—

This is a serious charge, Mr. President—to give lower courts a chance to uphold the alleged constitutionality of measures which were sought as a means of regimenting the American people under a system that is entirely alien to American tradition.

There will be no difficulty, too, about discovering that the now famous consent-in-advance theory was written into law and is inserted in the codes and is to be found in pending bills. It is as unfair a method of forcing the citizen to forfeit his constitutional rights as has ever been devised.

Then, skipping some more of the article, I read further:

What conferences are held by members of the "brain trust" with the Members of Congress? By whose authority are they sent to Capitol Hill to lobby for legislation?

Mr. Lawrence is speaking of the "brain trusters":

By whose authority are they sent to Capitol Hill to lobby for legislation? And what interests do they consult when they draft legislation?

Yes; whom do they consult? Is this just a closed corporation? Is this indeed the invisible government?

We cannot for either the good of the left wing or the right wing point of view afford to have secrecy in government.

Members of Congress, driven by the party whip, have been inclined to accept administration proposals as being the work of the President or at least of having his sanction and approval. But he cannot possibly know the hidden meanings that lurk in the clever and adroit phrases written into legislation by a group of "brain trusters" who have in the back of their minds a complete alteration of our system of government.

For years lawyers of big business have very cleverly used loopholes in the law and vague phrases to save their clients from going to jail. There can be little question about that. But does that justify the legal brain trusters in resorting to the same tactics of intellectual dishonesty? Do two wrongs make a right? And is this the fair way to deal with the rights of millions of people? Would it not be desirable to debate these questions so that if the people wish to surrender their rights they may do so with their eyes open and with full knowledge of the facts?

Did the American people in the 1932 election vote for Mr. Roosevelt or for a tricky group of lawyer "brain trusters"? Did the American people have the slightest inkling that the Cabinet would be relegated to a secondary position and that behind the scenes a group of new-fangled thinkers with economic doctrines and experiments suited to other lands and other environs would reign supreme in the making of a legislative program?

Who made this program? Who are the "brain trusters"? Who runs this Government?

Then I pass over a few more paragraphs, and read further:

We shall have to consider whether the classification of Mr. Roosevelt as Kerensky is not metaphorical after all. Do the men who have dominated new-deal legislation think they can mold Mr. Roosevelt to their views and gradually lead him on to a more and more extreme change in our system of Government and in our whole economic set-up? Doubtless they do. That is the true purpose of the "brain trust."

There is a direct charge, not by Dr. Wirt but by Mr. Lawrence in the United States News:

That is the true purpose of the "brain trust."

Further on in the article Mr. Lawrence says:

The House committee may ask Dr. Wirt a few questions, give him his day in court—

Mr. President, Dr. Wirt is not in court. Dr. Wirt makes the charges. I think the vast majority of the American people believe there is a great deal to these charges. They cannot be laughed off.

The House committee may ask Dr. Wirt a few questions, give him his day in court, and try to forget the episode. But it will not be squelched. It will rise again to plague everybody who tries now to minimize its importance or significance.

The way to meet charges of this kind is by public debate and exposure.

Nothing is so wholesome as the exposure of such controversies and doubts to the fresh air of public opinion.

Dr. Wirt indeed may naively inquire of Congress: "What shall I say to the youth of my city?

"Shall I tell them that the government of the people and for the people and by the people is just a myth?

"Shall I teach them that the Constitution is nineteenth century liberalism and is out of date?

"Or, shall I teach them that the invisible influences which seek to alter our form of government by adroitly worded statutes and demagoguery are merely passing phantoms in a world of too many ghosts?"

At the conclusion of my remarks on this subject, I ask that the entire article by David Lawrence be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Indiana? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Before I resume my seat, Mr. President, I should like to invite the attention of the Senate and the country to an editorial appearing in the Lynchburg News, which I understand is a paper published by the very distinguished and very able Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. It has to do with the injustice of the cancelation of the air-mail contracts. I send this copy of the editorial to the desk and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the article will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

[From the Lynchburg News]

AIR-MAIL CONTRACTS—SENATOR GLASS' NEWSPAPER ON THE INJUSTICE OF THE CANCELATIONS

Little by little, step by step, the Federal Government is getting back to where it started from.

Incensed by evidence that there had been fraud and collusion in the award of air-mail contracts, the administration abruptly canceled all contracts. It could not wait for completion of the evidence to discover the identity of the guilty and the degree of guilt, and even today nothing has been done, so far as announcements show, to punish further the individuals who were guilty.

Then the administration turned the work of carrying the mails over to the Army, with the result that 11 Army flyers lost their lives and the mails were not carried on schedule or with anything approaching efficiency. The death of 11 men aroused the country more than an act of wholesale injustice and the Army was ordered to discontinue its work.

Then the administration, after making preparations that should have been made in the beginning and which would have saved lives, put the Army flyers back to work on a limited schedule, announcement being made that the arrangement was temporary.

Now it is proposed to return the air mail to private companies on contract, with provisions to prevent fraud and collusion, or with that purpose in view, and with the further provision that companies formerly holding contracts will be ineligible unless and until they have reorganized and gotten rid of officials in control when the former contracts were awarded.

One more step is in order and then the great harm done by hasty and ill-considered action in the beginning will be partly undone. That step is to permit all air companies to bid on contracts and award contracts to the lowest bidder. That would permit bidding by companies suspected of having practiced fraud and collusion, but to bar all, except under impracticable conditions, would be to deny contracts to the innocent unless they discharge valued and innocent officials. It would be another case of punishing the innocent along with the guilty and not punishing the guilty enough. Then the administration through investigations, through Department of Justice activities, could undertake to ferret out the suspected individuals and bring them to the bar of justice there to answer the charges against them.

That, of course, is what should have been done in the first place. Instead of ruthlessly canceling all contracts—and there are two parties to every contract, and one party can't honestly cancel it—the facts should have been established, the guilty companies deprived of their contracts and the guilty individuals sent to prison. But that wasn't done and it is too late now. What can be done is to do justice as best possible—and justice still requires that the innocent have their rights restored. They cannot have their rights restored unless the clause requiring them to fire experienced officers whose guilt has not been established, some of whom at least are innocent and all of whom have the right of presumed innocence until guilt is established.

The entire article by David Lawrence, appearing in the United States News for April 9, 1934, is as follows:

[From the United States News, Apr. 9, 1934]

THANK YOU, DR. WIRT—MIDWESTERN EDUCATOR HAS PERFORMED A PUBLIC SERVICE IN ASKING FOR AN INQUIRY INTO THE OPERATIONS OF THE "BRAIN TRUST"—IT IS A SPECIES OF INVISIBLE GOVERNMENT THAT SHOULD BE BROUGHT INTO THE OPEN—ALL INFLUENCES THAT MOTIVATE LEGISLATION SHOULD BE REVEALED

This is not really the important question—what someone remarked to someone else. The query raised by Dr. Wirt is a broader one and Congress would do well not to brush it aside carelessly.

REVOLUTION A WORD BROAD IN MEANING

Dr. Wirt, in common with millions of other citizens, has been watching the passing scene. He has had more nerve than the rest. He has risked ridicule and abuse by stating openly that he wanted to know whether a revolution was being planned in America.

But the word "revolution" is broad in its meaning and application. Donald Richberg, general counsel of the National Recovery Administration, uses it in one sense and President Roosevelt in another. Political leaders call the election of 1932 a revolution. The President in the foreword to his new book takes a middle position. If it's a revolution, he says somewhat doubtfully, then it's a "peaceful revolution."

Let us examine what Mr. Richberg, as sincere a gentleman as ever accepted Government office, said in a speech over a national network of radio stations:

"Sometimes on hearing well-fed, jovial men and well-dressed, cheerful women chatting in their comfortable homes I wonder how many of the fortunate people of this country understand that the long-discussed revolution is actually under way in the United States.

"There is no need to prophesy. It is here. It is in process. In many other countries there have been revolutions since the World War—each one with surprisingly little bloodshed, but with a tremendous exercise of force and oppressive power.

"In this favored land of ours we are attempting possibly the greatest experiment of history.

"Revolution by the sword and bayonet is nothing new. Revolution by the pen and voice is different. The violent overthrow of Parliaments and rulers is nothing new, but the peaceful transition of all departments of government from one fundamental concept of a political economic system to another is different."

FUNDAMENTAL CONCEPTS CHANGING

"It is a revolution, not in purpose but in method; yet so profound a change in method that our purposes may seem changed. That is not so. The ideals that are written into the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States still guide this Government.

"It is the freedom of the individual, his right to pursue happiness, the security of his home, of his life, and of his thought, that our Government has been established to maintain—and will maintain."

Now, that is probably as fair a statement of what the left wing or so-called "intellectual group" would say they meant by revolution. Certainly it is a definition that argues for profound change and seeks to justify itself as coming within the spirit, if not the letter, of the Constitution.

But, as has too often been proved, there is a sharp distinction between the statement of a principle and the detailed application of it. Mr. Richberg's whole speech might be reduced to a single sentence declaring that he favored the principle of constitutional government. The every-day experience of the people, however, with their Government will show whether the rights granted under the Constitution are actually being transgressed.

Mr. Richberg is not the only administration official who has discussed revolution frankly. In these pages it will be recalled that considerable space was devoted a few weeks ago to a summary of the pamphlet by Secretary Wallace of the Department of Agriculture, in which he outlined the revolutionary changes that he foresaw.

"Force", said Dr. Tugwell, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture and one of the leaders of the "brain trust", "never settles anything", so he prefers "a process of gradual substitution."

But we need not deal with these abstract principles to find that Mr. Richberg is right when he says a revolution of some kind is in progress in America. Small wonder that Dr. Wirt is bewildered.

WHO IS BACK OF NEW-DEAL LEGISLATION

For many years we have been condemning invisible government. We assume that hidden influences are corrupt. But often they are by no means corrupt because they hide from public view. In the present instance the "brain trust" works invisibly because that is tactful technique as long as we have a National Legislature.

But it would be interesting to know the authorship of the new-deal legislation, just who sponsored some of the provisions in existing low, and what were the reasons back of such sections of law as are today causing confusion and litigation.

There will be no difficulty about securing an admission that certain phrases were inserted in the preambles of existing law as a subterfuge, namely, to give lower courts a chance to uphold the alleged constitutionality of measures which were sought as a means of regimenting the American people under a system that is entirely alien to American tradition.

There will be no difficulty, too, about discovering that the now famous consent-in-advance theory was written into law and is inserted in the codes and is to be found in pending bills. It is as unfair a method of forcing the citizen to forfeit his constitutional rights as has ever been devised.

There will be no difficulty in developing that in the Securities Act and in the Tugwell food and drug bill and in the Wagner labor bill there have been provisions which would make the findings of fact of a commission or Government agency final and not subject to review by the courts.

There will be no difficulty in establishing that in the proposed air-mail legislation, a penalty was inserted against any company which sought to exercise its constitutional right to seek redress in the Court of Claims.

NO AUTHORITY FOR SOME ACTS OF GOVERNMENT

There will be no difficulty in discovering that the Blue Eagle was originally set up as a Government boycott without warrant of law; indeed the words of the National Industrial Recovery Act specifically stated that there must be no discrimination of any kind. The fact that the Government encourages the discrimination does not make it lawful.

And by what authority of law were the President's reemployment agreements continued? The ordinary concept of fair play is that it takes two to make a contract and that when it is extended both parties must sign the extension. Yet the Government has declared all these reemployment agreements extended by proclaiming that anybody who displayed the Blue Eagle after January 1, 1934, agreed in fact to an extension of his contract.

Why these plain efforts to circumscribe the constitutional rights of the individual?

These are questions Dr. Wirt probably wants to know, but there are millions of citizens who have an even deeper yearning for information than that which has been given them.

What conferences are held by members of the "brain trust" with the Members of Congress? By whose authority are they sent to Capitol Hill to lobby for legislation? And what interests do they consult when they draft legislation? We cannot for either the good of the left wing or the right wing point of view afford to have secrecy in government.

MORE LIGHT NEEDED ON ACTIVITIES

Members of Congress, driven by the party whip, have been inclined to accept administration proposals as being the work of the President or at least as having his sanction and approval. But he cannot possibly know the hidden meanings that lurk in the clever and adroit phrases written into legislation by a group of brain trusters who have in the back of their minds a complete alteration of our system of government.

But does that justify the legal "brain trusters" in resorting to the same tactics of intellectual dishonesty? Do two wrongs make a right? And is this the fair way to deal with the rights of millions of people? Would it not be desirable to debate these questions so that if the people wish to surrender their rights they may do so with their eyes open and with full knowledge of the facts?

Did the American people in the 1932 election vote for Mr. Roosevelt or for a tricky group of lawyer "brain trusters"? Did the American people have the slightest inkling that the Cabinet would be relegated to a secondary position and that behind the scenes a group of new-fangled thinkers with economic doctrines and experiments suited to other lands and other environs would reign supreme in the making of a legislative program?

A NEW ORDER TRUE PURPOSE OF "BRAIN TRUST"

Unquestionably the people elected Mr. Roosevelt because they had faith in his aggressiveness, his liberalism, his honesty, his broad humanitarianism, his simplicity, and, above all, his promise of a new deal as compared with their luck under Mr. Hoover. They can still retain their faith in Mr. Roosevelt's leadership and in his ultimate capacity to discard the wrong and retain the right out of the multiplicity of proposals and schemes put before him in the last year or so. But they are beginning to wonder if he has been imposed upon by men who think he is putty in their hands.

We shall have to consider whether the classification of Mr. Roosevelt as Kerensky is not metaphorical after all. Do the men who have dominated new-deal legislation think they can mold Mr. Roosevelt to their views and gradually lead him on to a more and more extreme change in our system of government and in our whole economic setup? Doubtless they do. That is the true purpose of the "brain trust."

The first principle in the "brain trust" philosophy is that everything that happened prior to March 4, 1933, is wrong and can be discarded as the old deal. The second is that collectivism or socialization of our whole system of agricultural and industrial production is absolutely essential and that if the idea of capital and investment is retained at all it should be limited, regulated, and controlled by the central government.

No such power exists in the Constitution, but it does exist in the people. They retain sovereignty. They still have the right of rebellion at the polls or by force of arms. Nobody can deprive them of that privilege. We have had riots and strikes and farm holidays and violence here and there, but on the whole the Nation has been peaceable in the midst of a great emergency.

WILL PEOPLE READILY YIELD THEIR RIGHTS?

But what will be the temper of a people who discover rights torn from them? Will they submit to the edict of the Government at Washington which will tell them how much they shall plant and what they shall receive for their products? The Bankhead bill of compulsory control of cotton production is as serious for the farmer as is the proposed governmental control of all businesses which list their securities for public sale. Will American business accept the right of the Government to say whether a machine shall be replaced when obsolete, whether new typewriters can be bought for old, whether new capital can be introduced to develop mineral resources?

It requires no great amount of research to learn that in the bills proposed and those now actually on the statute books there is a revolutionary change in the rights of the individual and that we are preparing to put in the hands of a few men—a few political overlords—the full power to issue money and to restrict at will the opportunity of the individual in all walks of life.

The House committee may ask Dr. Wirt a few questions, give him his day in court, and try to forget the episode. But it will not be squelched. It will rise again to plague everybody who tries now to minimize its importance or significance.

The way to meet charges of this kind is by public debate and exposure.

Nothing is so wholesome as the exposure of such controversies and doubts to the fresh air of public opinion.

Dr. Wirt, indeed, may naively inquire of Congress: "What shall I say to the youth of my city?

"Shall I tell them that the government of the people and for the people and by the people is just a myth?

"Shall I teach them that the Constitution is nineteenth century liberalism and is out of date?

"Or shall I teach them that the invisible influences which seek to alter our form of government by adroitly worded statutes and demagoguery are merely passing phantoms in a world of too many ghosts?"

And if the asking of these questions results only in making Congress itself understand the full implications of its acquiescence in this new crop of "noble experiments" then Dr. Wirt's plea for light and truth will not have been in vain.

OHIO RIVER BRIDGE NEAR CAIRO, ILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Utah in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2675) creating the Cairo Bridge Commission and authorizing said commission and its successors to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Cairo, Ill., which was, on page 9, after line 23, to insert:

(a) Notwithstanding any restriction or limitation imposed by the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes", approved July 11, 1916, or by the Federal Highway Act, or by any act amendatory of or supplemental to either thereof, the Secretary of Agriculture may extend Federal aid under such acts, for the construction of said bridge, out of any moneys allocated to the State of Illinois with the consent of the Department of Public Works and Buildings of said State, and out of any moneys allocated to the State of Kentucky with the consent of the State Highway Commission of said State.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, the bill which is the subject of the amendment just laid before the Senate is merely for the building of a bridge over the Ohio River near Cairo, Ill., to take the place of an old one that is said to be in danger. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The amendment was agreed to.

THE TAX BILL AND THE FOREIGN DEBTS

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I address myself to what I feel are proper considerations relative to the pending tax bill. It is in this connection I desire to enter into some observations as to the foreign debts due to the United States from the debtor countries. I allude to the latter in view of information which reaches this Government this morning, known to our State Department, and which in some respects is made public property today.

The bill pending before this honorable body is designated as the tax bill. It has for its purpose creating a fund or establishing quantity of revenue to meet the expenses of the Government. It is very difficult to find any new subject of taxation. It is exceedingly severe to place upon the already accepted subjects and objects of taxation the necessary increased burden which they will have to bear unless we can reduce that aggregated amount to be levied upon our own people, by turning with hope and enjoying with confidence the prospect of some payments from the foreign debtors, the countries indebted to the United States in the sum of several billions of dollars.

Mr. President, as I stated but a second ago, this Government is advised, and its State Department is now informed, that there is already set afoot something of a concurrent action on the part of the principal debtors looking to threatening the United States with complete ignoring of the debts unless we shall adopt some plan that will conform the debts to the contentment of the debtor, or to cancel them at the instance of the debtors who demand that disposition.

We pause for a moment to note that Britain last week presented to the world an interesting disclosure of how, with her home debts provided for, there was a residue in the treasury of what would amount to hundreds of millions of dollars in America. For this excess there is no immediate demand in the English budget. The amount of excess is said to be reserved for such future uses as England itself shall find proper for uses in Britain.

At this point I am bold enough to intimate that one of the expenditures most proper for our renowned friend, sublime England, is a contribution by way of payment upon the debt due the United States of America. I invite the honorable Senate, and those kind enough to pay heed to this particular proposition, to that which is now known to our Government in specious detail but voiced in a general manner by public cable which I read. Referring to England, the statement is:

Nobody here would give a brass farthing for Britain's chances of making any further collections on its war-time loans to its former Allies. The suggestion therefore that Britain should be stigmatized as being in default unless this country resumes payments to the United States on the full Baldwin-Mellon scale seems to Englishmen particularly unfair.

Mr. President, we who know the splendid record of England in ever maintaining faith in financial obligations marvel at the further disclosure revealed in the cabled information. The recital continues in saying: For instance, it will be remembered that—

Within less than 2 years events have so transpired that virtually every argument used by the British Government in 1932 to justify token payments—can now in strict logic be reapplied to prove that resumption of full payments would be justifiable. For instance, at that time British governmental finance was in a shaky state; today Britain alone among the world's great nations has a budgetary surplus. Then the treasury's problem was to keep the value of the pound up; today it is to keep it down.

Meaning payments to her—

Yet, says the information:

Anyone in touch with the realities of the situation must know that this Government—has not the slightest intention again of turning over $180,000,000 annually to the United States.

Meaning England—

No statement that the amount is not due for money loaned nor that it has not been due by a long-time agreement of compromise.

The agreement, says this information, made and signed 12 years ago, has "ceased to command that respect which usually attaches to contracts here", meaning England.

It is pointed out, for instance, that one agreement after another with regard to German reparations has been torn up.

This to intimate that the agreement with the United States might now be but "a scrap of paper."

In England, sir, in Britain, sir, let it be said this is the further information as recited:

Moreover, it is still firmly believed by 99 percent of Britons—who have ever given thought to the matter—that Britain immediately passed on to her allies the loans received from the United States; alternatively that the United States made such enormous profits on the supply of munitions and war materials that the debt total could be held to be an extortionate one—a gracious accusation—and again alternatively that since the United States finally came into the war, all other arguments are inconsequential besides the one that our (England's) financial outlay, meaning indebtedness to the United States, should have been considered as a contribution to the common victory.

Mr. President, this assertion from Britain has never been made in these exact words before. Such utterances of misstatement were the stock of the torturing politicians who were of the parties of France, and no honor to that deserving people. It is not until now that we observe this text of a partial France has been completely partaken by Britain and announced as a new credo of England defining the debt it holds of the United States.

Mr. President, we continue to note something of the information brought to us, to our United States:

The recital is but some of these submissions are demonstrably inaccurate. None would commend itself to a diplomat having to justify the omission of a full payment, and the American suggestions that the British budgetary surplus should be devoted to a resumption of the debt service seems simply in bad taste.

Therefore, says Britain, through its principal organ of government, the Morning Post, as follows:

That the Government should offer—

To America, Mr. President—

a lump sum of reasonable dimensions to the United States in full and final settlement.

There is nothing said as to what is a reasonable dimension. The dimension is not uttered, nor what is reasonable suggested. But we have this from the organ of the present Government of Britain, which, let us know, would never have this expression had it not been previously endorsed by the officials of power of Great Britain. The expression is that the debtor shall submit to us—the United States; the creditor—an offer of "a lump sum of reasonable dimensions to the United States in full and final settlement."

Then the organ of the Liberal Party, the Evening Star, proceeds to declare:

Not a penny should be sent.

Mr. President, this has not been previously the attitude of Britain—Britain ever distinguished for impeccable honor. That was an expression of those who, defined as "cannaille", surrounded the Chambre des Députés of France in Paris, and in an all day of turbulence, howled expressions against "le paiement—pas un sou." Now comes forth the liberal organ representing one of the democratic parties of Britain opposed to the party represented by the Morning Post—the Conservative—and likewise echoes, as to any payment to the United States of debt due, "Not a cent."

The Evening Star says:

If cancelation is not obtainable, then Britain should do as France has done—default.

I submit to my colleagues of this honorable body that this is probably the first time they have heard that expression as coming from the statesmen of England. She may have in the past complained that it was not convenient to make an installment payment, and that plea has been considered and accommodated by our country from time to time. Britain found it agreeable to send her special envoys to our Capital here in Washington, where they presented such attitudes of thought or action as they felt to the advantage of their country. These envoys of Parliament were of exalted standards. They have seen their petition yielded to by the officers of our own Government assenting from time to time. But not now is the course one of petition. A new policy seems to have possessed Britain. No longer will they make an offer or plead for privilege nor ask for favor. They demand of us as a creditor to understand that as to any payment due they are now ready to assert the doctrine of "not a cent."

Mr. President, we then turn to note, as is said by the paper of the opposite party to the present Government, that England will adopt the plan of France and "default." Says the commentator on this particular cable:

The word "default" has a sinister sound to business men and bankers, who feel that the acceptance of this stigma might encourage their debtors to go and do likewise.

By a process of elimination, the Government seems to be driven back to take its stand upon the intangibles. In the next debt communication to the United States various specific arguments for nonpayment will be touched upon.

Therefore I invite the attention of my colleagues to the fact that heretofore the positions of our debtor have always been either for delay or for diminution of the amount due, but now it is that they will end all payments of their own election. This drastic and ungenerous attitude has not been suggested before from Britain.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McCARRAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. The paragraphs read by the able Senator from Illinois are simply recording what has been apparent for some time. It seems to me that our Government has rather encouraged the debtor countries to reach the conclusion which they have now reached. I do not know of any action which our Government has taken to bring those people to realize that we expect them to pay the debts. They have drawn the inference that we are willing that the matter shall slide into oblivion and be forgotten.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I regret that conditions compel me to concede the position taken by the able Senator from Idaho. I deplore that the administrations of both Presidents in which I have lately served here have not found it convenient to be more absolute in the assertion of our rights. This should have been done in a manner seeking no conflict, urging no unnecessary contests, and, under all circumstances, striving to avoid any disruption of friendship. Nevertheless, sir, we should ever and constantly have insisted upon the right of the United States to enjoy the collection of its just debts, coupled with assertion ever expressed to these eminent countries that we expect to have faith fulfilled.

I conclude some observations touching this question. After referring to the fact that the next communication is to be one of complete nonpayment of anything further, it is said:

The whole war debt and reparation structure has broken down. Any effort—

Meaning any effort on the part of the United States.

Any effort to reconstitute it would now endanger world recovery.

Mr. President, I invite my able friend the Senator from Idaho, very learned and very distinguished on this subject, to note that already it is to be proclaimed that any attempt on our part to press the collection of these debts is to interfere with world recovery. The eminent statesmen of Britain are now returning to an ancient shibboleth of which we have endured such a superfluous repetition in different parts of the country. It was ever the demand that America sacrifice her rights in order, first, to aid in world recovery; next, we are to refuse to assert our rights of recovery lest to do so would disturb the recovery of some other land. Therefore our position must be to suffer all form of wrong and loss that other countries may enjoy all form of right and gain. I do not subscribe to that creed, and so far as my impotent voice, and possibly less capacity, shall be invoked, I must oppose such a doctrine, whether it comes from the source of that which is called my party, or from the demand of foreign lands. For myself I insist that America shall remain American, and press her rights as American, and let us meet any opposition upon such basis as shall appear to be just, within the meaning of obligation—with the spirit of true friendship, but true, sirs, of a greater justice between the nations of equal standing before the bar of honor.

We turn, then, for a moment to call attention that these animadversions against the United States are the observations of the British statesmen. But it may interest the Senate to know that on the same day the expressions are voiced on the part of these eminent statesmen representing Great Britain there is a meeting called at Paris, and, Mr. Chairman, it is to be noted that at the same hour of the day when the observations are being echoed by Great Britain, to let us know that at last they have reached the point where there is to be an assertion by Britain of "not a cent", there is at the same time an assertion by France of "pas un sou"—not a cent. At the same time France makes a declaration which the American Chamber of Commerce of Paris is compelled to heed by proceeding to make a report at once, and we turn to the report from Paris, where the committee of the American Chamber of Commerce of Paris, referring to the action of France in announcing no recognition of the obligation to the United States in any form whatever, says:

The committee fears the present policy of the French Government may tend toward further limitations of imports, and that the time may not be distant when the importation of many American products by France will be impossible.

Therefore the Chamber of Commerce of France called attention to this action at Paris on the part of the Government officials, and notes that France has a purpose, in pursuit of what she feels her own interest, of course, in withholding any privileges or trade to the United States; and this as a penalty for the United States seeking to enforce the debts due us, the collection of those due to us from France. We shudder at the chill that once warm and affectionate France now ices upon us. We wish we could thaw it all out into a once again running rill of a happy stream.

Sirs, I summon you to recall that this administration has not in the last month taken any steps toward renewing the demands for payment. It is interesting for us to consider what information has been sent to either Britain or to France by which either Government should assume that just at this time we have entered secretly into some new design to press a collection upon these countries. Whoever communicates the information that has aroused retaliation and defiance we cannot prophesy. I am sure that they who have initiated the demand must have done so without any direction on the part of our Government. The officials of this Government would not have taken any step along such line without informing this, its correlative body, the United States Senate.

It therefore invites us to very serious reflection as to why these countries at the same time find themselves concurring to the same objection, to the same view, and expression of the same purpose, to wit, to say to the United States, "We are in default. Get your money if you can."

In the meantime, Mr. President, we turn to behold Italy. The government of Italy sends a message by the way of England to announce that it is unjust on the part of the United States to assume to collect money due from Italy while in the meantime we are by a form of government, as is asserted, doing an injustice to her people in the immigration laws, and likewise, sirs, a discrimination against her commerce by our existing export tariffs. We are the admirers of the noble stand for peace, for order, for advance Italy takes before all the world. Her people have done marvels in finance, industry, and government.

Mr. President, I still am greatly invited, not so much out of curiosity, but largely from the education that has been borne in on me from my experience as a lawyer, to ask why these three governments, through their very eminent and able statesmen, should have found it agreeable, though many miles apart, to have acted almost within the same hour, with the same declaration and the same purpose of a complete defiance of the United States as against the collection on her part of $1 of the debt wholly due her, much of which we have through charity and generosity—a list of which the eminent Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] gave some time ago, released them from paying. But instead of receiving any thanks, or the expression of appreciation, we find this combined undertaking now to defy us in any hope we may have to recover a dollar.

Someone might ask, "Why is this so suddenly done, and what is the spirit that brings it forth? Why this new ghost at our banquet of brotherhood?"

Mr. President, I would deduce that these governments, gathering the proposition from our legislation as reported in the public press, as being on the eve of seeking some reciprocity of mutual dealing as respecting trade and the reduction of tariff barriers, the melting of obstructions, are serving notice upon us—and, Senators, we might as well face the proposition and cease playing plush and velvet and know that it is a stand of steel and iron. The notice is an announcement, though saying, "Gentlemen of America, before you can hope to carry on any of your reciprocity treaties which secure from us a recognition of or favor to your trade, you first will please banish these debts; and keep in mind, America, that it is our purpose to inform you now that you can hope for nothing in your proposed plan of reciprocity of treaties for the exchange of trade lest you first remove from us the obligation of these debts which you are now seeking to enforce upon us."

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield.

Mr. KING. I ask the Senator whether he believes that if it were advantageous for the agriculturists of the United States, and our manufacturers, and the people generally, to find markets in Great Britain, or France, or Italy, we ought to refuse to deal with them, notwithstanding the advantages received, because, forsooth, they are indebted to the United States?

Mr. LEWIS. No; I take it, I say to my able friend from Utah, that it is not we who should refuse. It is quite evident to me that they, our debtors, have conceived the thought that if they will let us know that we can only deal by first removing these debts, that that will be a compulsion to us to do so, and, to substantiate that hope, they make the bold announcement that they will go in default rather than pay us anything. It is assumed that if we willingly cancel the debt as, says the spokesman for Britain, we can, having canceled them, look forward to some form of reciprocity in some of these dealings suggested by that which appears to be our legislation as passed. I say to my able friend from Utah that it is the reverse of his kind suggestion in their behalf. It is not that we would not trade with them, they being in debt to us as a reason, but it is that they, conscious of this debt, are informing us that "until you remove it, gentlemen, we will not deal with you."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield.

Mr. KING. I think the suggestion which I made, if the interrogatory may be construed as a suggestion, was rather in our own interest than in theirs. The proposition I mildly suggested was whether we should refuse to export our surplus commodities to defaulting nations, even though it would be advantageous to our producers and agriculturists, because those nations were still indebted to the United States.

Mr. LEWIS. I should have to say, in reply to that, that much would depend on the exporter. He would have to be governed by whether he felt he would get his money, and whether those to whom he was exporting seemed able to pay their obligation. Much would be determined by the feeling that the exporter would have to the buyer. I answer, as far as our Government is concerned, I trust it would not intrude itself to prevent these exploitations between the tradesmen of America and the receivers of the foreign countries merely because that foreign country is indebted to the United States.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield for another question?

Mr. LEWIS. I do.

Mr. KING. It is not pertinent to the interrogatory which I just propounded. I understood the Senator to state, as I was coming into the Chamber, that France and Great Britain and Italy and perhaps other nations indebted to the United States had defied us, or were assuming a defiant attitude. I was wondering if the Senator believed that Italy and France and Poland and other nations to whom money was loaned by Great Britain during the war, in an aggregate amount greater than that which Great Britain owes us, have defied or are now defying Great Britain because they have not paid Great Britain the several amounts which were loaned to them.

Mr. LEWIS. I am compelled to say that, busy as I have been in many quarters with the duties resting upon me, I have not noted the attitude of Poland and the lesser debtors to Britain, as to their position toward Britain. I am compelled to answer my able friend that I could not offer an opinion as to the attitude of these debtors to Great Britain, not having observed any expression from them. I sincerely trust, however, that they may be found in a spirit that may reconcile their indebtedness and continue the friendships between themselves and their creditor, as we would hope to continue that between ourselves and our debtors.

But, Mr. President, these nations that have now subtly joined together with a single object of letting us know that not a dollar will they pay, and that they will cry default, presume that by so asserting they will make more certain the result. I think the classic scholars around me recall that from one of the very ancient Latins we have an expression—

Possunt quia posse videntur—

Which, literally translated, means, "They can because they think they can."

This Virgilian maxim may be the inspiration that inflames the spirit of these eminent statesmen of our debtor lands. Here, sir, one thing must be asserted by America, namely, that she is willing to yield to generosity and to any inducement humanity may suggest, but America is not in the spirit to endure to be told by any nation that the United States has to yield either from the threat of that nation not to grant business favor to us or because of the fear on the part of our country that some debtor land would enforce a loss of any trade we expect to obtain in behalf of our people. This threatened condition again, sir, brings us back to where this Nation must assert itself and state very freely that it stands on its rights, that it expects to wrong no people, but it will not endure complacently a wrong from any people. That as to such attempt it will protest in the proper direction.

Mr. President, I then come to the question my able friend from Utah brings to me for consideration and which my eminent friend from Idaho suggests. What is the avail of our Government's proceeding to have these treaties which the eminent Senator from Rhode Island this morning in an address referred to and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] have alluded to by their interrogatories appropriately addressed, if already these nations with whom we expect reciprocity have proceeded to inform us that their attitude is one now of such combined antagonism that they will not pay a dollar of their debts—nations which announce the opposition to payment before we urge the collection? What spirit existing is there from which we may expect an agreement in such harmony of reciprocity that we may enjoy the fruits thereof? Will a character of this antagonistic nature be the kind that we must confront? When we tender a proposition looking to an exchange between them, will we meet the confronted combined opposition looking to the destruction of any rights that we have at the beginning, and refusal, sir, of any form of accommodation at the end?

What position will these United States be in to tender a proposition of reciprocity touching the matter of the tariff against American goods and reductions of import duties from nations which heretofore have let us know that they recognize no rights on our part to collect the debts they owe us? Shall we still propose to present to such spirit a proposition which we know must at that time be promptly opposed, argument instantly refuted, our demands and equities promptly ignored—all done in the same spirit of defiance tinctured by that enmity which I have brought to the attention of the Senate? How, then, shall we stand if this condition of discouragement shall continue? The result would leave us as a nation standing in a ridiculous aspect before humanity. We will make of ourselves a laughingstock of the international intelligence. We will become, sir, the writhing, squirming theme of humor on the part of world statesmen.

Therefore, before there should be an attempt on the part of this Government to carry out the policy of these mutual reciprocities to be tendered, let us find where we stand between ourselves and these honorable countries as to the indebtedness, not for money's sake, brother Senators, but that we may ascertain the spirit of the people, that we may know to whom we go, to what form and manner of nature we appeal, and what are the prospects of success in this mutual exchange of fraternity, of welfare between nations. Sirs, if we are to be flouted, if we are to endure the abasement of being humiliated, pray God we stand silent upon our rights and rest there content to enjoy the confidence of our own American people.

Mr. President, wherefore I would suggest these countries need not fear that we expect to drain their treasuries. England announces that Britain has a treasury now overflowing, bulging with the surplus which could be well applied to the debt due to the United States, and in the statement of the Morning Post, the organ of one of her parties and in a cable statement in the Evening Star, the organ of the other party concurrently, that not a dollar will be paid. Senators, our ancient and present friend France holds billions of gold in her treasury equally amenable to our debt, if she should care to pay upon it, all without loss to herself. Britain has this effulgence of a surplus of money likewise, sirs, appropriate to the payment of our debt if she were but inclined, in spirit, to contribute it. But the announcement from Britain'e statesmen is that the $180,000,000 now due will never be paid, and we might as well understand it. While France continues to chorus, "Pas un sou", and cut us out of equal treatment in French taxation.

Mr. President, I would suggest that the time has now come when we should make a proposition as the creditor. It seems to me to be appropriate to call these debtors together to suggest to them that, "Instead of taking your cash, that you may have uses for, you gentlemen of the debtors assemble and issue bonds to the amount of the full debt due the United States. Let interest on the bonds be suspended for the 2 years, the bonds to be in a small amount, that is, their denomination small of sum." These bonds in the hands of the United States may then, sirs, be transferred by the United States to its own people for consideration. These bonds would be held either for the enjoyment of heirs to the estates if these debtors are solvent, or, sirs, for the transmission as further security to the large business interests that may be interested in maintaining a financial future. This, sirs, you will observe drains nothing of their immediate cash and places the obligation on the other generation who are to enjoy the further beneficence and generosity of this, our very indulgent Nation.

If these nations cannot consider such a proposition as that, then, it were well, it seems to me, to ask them directly now, "What do you suggest?" For, Senators, we cannot continue this present drama, which is already taking on a farcical aspect. As the Senator from Idaho observed, it does not seem that we have made an effort lately to press upon these debtors the necessity of considering this situation as a business, one between honorable nations to be complied with as do honorable men in their obligation one with the other.

Now is the time when we should make the proposition to them, "If you will not take one that we tender you, that releases you from an immediate burden, what do you suggest? What will be that which you will tender us that will place you in the position of honor and righteousness with the righteousness and honor we extend to you?"

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. I am interested in the suggestion of the Senator that the debtor nations give their bonds representing their debt to us without interest; that the Government of the United States should accept such bonds and then place the bonds, I understood the Senator to say, among the people of our own country. My query is, Who would want the bond of a foreign government without interest, even though it should be guaranteed by our own Government? How would it be put in the hands of the individual citizen?

Mr. LEWIS. There is a great deal to be said in concession of the doubt that the able Senator from Ohio intimates. I answer that it would only be accepted by the relationship of these countries being disclosed, indicating their willingness to pay these bonds and their intention to do so, for, if they have not a future that could pay the bonds to our people, I would say to my able friend that they have no future that would pay the cash to our Government. If they cannot pay the cash to us at all at any time, they may not pay the bonds at any time but, upon the theory of giving them extension, we could take their bonds, pass them only to those people who, understanding the situation, were willing to take the bonds and trust the future of the debtor nations. That is all I can answer my able friend, for it must be plain if we look forward to these governments paying us in money on the theory they will be able to do so, we likewise may concede that at the same time they would pay the bonds upon the theory of their willingness to do so. I must say to my friend that it is only upon the acceptance of our own people with the knowledge of the situation that we could transfer these bonds.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. I yield again to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. I recognize there is merit in what the Senator has said, in that such bonds would represent a recognition on the part of the debtor nations that they do owe the debt. That I think would be a real contribution. On the other hand, the practicability of it, as to whether it would work, is, in my mind, somewhat doubtful. I do think it would have a value in reviving the recognition that it is a debt which they owe us. That is the thing I have always resented, namely, their effort to avoid the obligation to pay. If they say, "we cannot pay", that would be one thing, but when they say, "we do not owe it", that is an offensive statement to any Member of the Congress who was in Congress when these debts were originally contracted.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee and thank the Senator from Ohio for his observation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Our Government has that kind of a bond now.

Mr. LEWIS. The bonds, may I say to my able friend from Tennessee, that we have now are held as security but not in ownership; and that makes a difference, for we cannot transfer those bonds.

Mr. McKELLAR. We cannot transfer them, but we own them; and if they are just to be mementos, why would it not be better to keep those mementos in the Treasury rather than distribute them among private individuals?

Mr. LEWIS. I reply that considerations of international friendship prevent me from making the observation as to these very valiant and responsible countries conceding their bonds as only mementos. I must conceive the debtor bonds as responsible.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very responsible.

Mr. LEWIS. I may say, however, I would hold that the bonds we have now as they are held as security, we have no right, of course, to foreclose on them; we have no method of doing so; and we cannot appropriate them, for we have no right to do so. The other bonds, such as I suggest, could be turned over to us as property, and the able Senator is quite correct that they would remain as mementos unless the countries issuing them were behind them and had a spirit of honor intending to pay them and a capacity of credit capable of doing so.

Mr. President, I rose because I am strangely affected this morning, seriously affected, by the observations on this concurring action on the part of these governments, each of them reaching the very same text, in exactly the same words; of their readiness to defy us as against any attempt on our part to collect, and bringing it out just on the eve when it is asserted that we expect to approach them touching some matter of reciprocity in trade arrangements between our President and the heads of their governments who have the right and the authority lately conferred upon them to make such arrangements in place of legislation by their parliaments.

Mr. TYDINGS. The amount of those bonds in toto is around $11,500,000,000.

Mr. LEWIS. I mentioned the amount as $12,000,000,000, having in contemplation a portion of interest yet to be due.

Mr. TYDINGS. I understand those bonds are payable in gold.

Mr. LEWIS. On that point I must yield to the Senator's memory.

Mr. TYDINGS. There is only about $11,500,000,000 of gold in all the world, and we have about $5,000,000,000 of that. Has the Senator any suggestion to make as to how those countries might pay their debts in gold?

Mr. LEWIS. I do not go so far as to say they must load their ships with coin of gold or money of gold and transfer to us at the end of the voyage, but I concur with the Senator in his suggestion that it is an impossibility. But I feel that their securities, if they shall so fail in the payment of the debts, would pass in this country on the theory that those countries are stable and that they can secure the payment by their assets.

But I must say also that my able friend must not overlook that some of those countries have changed their standard in gold since the time they made the bonds, and I am not aware that since some of them returned to gold they have revived their contracts with gold as the medium.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. LEWIS. I am glad to yield to my able friend from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator, of course, will concede, I am sure, that there are only two ways in which the countries which owe us money can pay their debts, one being in gold and the other in goods. We start on the premise that they have not sufficient gold to pay the debts at least in full. Therefore the only other means left open is payment in goods. Of course, we will not accept the goods. Therefore if we will not accept payment in the only two mediums with which they have ability to pay, how in the world are we ever going to collect the debts?

Mr. LEWIS. My answer is that I myself could not consent to accepting goods for the payment of these debts, for they in quantity would be so many and so much that would close the factories of America for serving the uses of our country. Our manufactories would have no inducement to continue in action, and we would practically bankrupt all of our industrial undertakings.

I will say that since the debtors cannot pay that money at once—and that is conceded—the payments could proceed in the same form that our business men, our banking houses, will pay our Government money they have lately borrowed through the R.F.C., by slight degrees and continuously until the complete payments are made, not urging upon them the necessity of paying the whole sum in one complete payment.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield further to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. LEWIS. I am delighted to yield to my able friend from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think the question can be solved in the last analysis only by applying to it the practical rules of business. It so happens we are selling to each one of those countries more goods than they are selling to us. Of course the balance of trade is in our favor. Against that, certain invisible exchanges may keep the trade more or less in balance. I do not want to cancel the entire debt; but I have reached the conclusion, in view of the physical factors which are present, that the only way we can make the best of the bargain is to take a lump-sum settlement, end the question of the debts once and for all, and get out of Europe and stay out of Europe.

Mr. LEWIS. I may say to my able friend from Maryland that I have read the proposition directly made to the officers of Britain that they tender now what they call some reasonable sum to wipe out the whole transaction, and if we do not accept it, to say that they default. I greatly deprecate it should be received in such spirit.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. LEWIS. I am glad to yield to the able Senator.

Mr. BORAH. I simply wish to say that we all know the debts have been settled once. They were adjusted at about 50 cents on the dollar, and adjusted upon a basis satisfactory to the debtors. So far as any adjustment is concerned, that is a matter of history. It has been made. There is no question about the validity of the debts, the equity of the debts, the justice of the debts. That has all been settled by an adjustment made long after the war was over.

We are not asking those people to pay $11,500,000,000 at once. We are asking them to pay according to the terms of the settlement, which is a very small amount year by year. They have sufficient and ample money in gold with which to make payments according to the terms of the settlement.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield to enable me to reply to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Maryland for the purpose of taking up the conference on the subject matter with my able friend from Idaho, but I trust that I shall not be taken from the floor.

Mr. TYDINGS. It is quite true, as the Senator from Idaho said, that they do not have to make all the payments now. It is equally true that the balance of trade is in our favor, which draws from those countries large sums of gold each year in settlement. It is equally true that their own financial conditions are such that some of them are threatened with civil war. There is no reason, therefore, to believe, although the debt is just—I do not concede that it is equitable—that it will ever be paid, though we accept it in driblets. Certainly accepting it in that way would not change the basic factor that there is not gold in all the rest of the world with which to pay the debt, even in driblets. If they keep on sending these driblets from year to year, we will eventually draw out of those countries all the gold they have. They being our customers and buying more from us than they sell to us, we will loce more than we will gain.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the able Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Those nations which owe us do a vast amount of business with other countries than the United States and have their interchange and exchange with other countries. Therefore it is not necessary that the balance be limited to that between the United States and those countries.

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course not. That is true; but it so happens that the United States has a favorable trade balance with all the world, with the exception of three small countries, so that the net fact is that gold is coming to this country and not going from this country, and they cannot increase the stock of gold outside of the United States.

If the Senator from Illinois will yield further——

Mr. LEWIS. I am glad to yield to my able friend from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. What I wanted to say—and I want to say it in a little detail, though it will take not over 2 or 3 minutes—is that basically this debt is not an equitable debt. After we went into the war on April 6, 1917, for the first year we had practically no troops on the battle front. It was our war from the time we went into it. The English and French and Italians and other Allies poured out hundreds of thousands of lives on the battlefield while we were getting ready. If the war had been lost, it would have been bad for us as well as for them. Therefore, all we did at this time was to furnish supplies through the medium of credit.

I do not think the debt is equitable, because if the circumstances were reversed, and we were fighting a war in this country, with our men dying along the banks of the Mississippi by the hundreds of thousands, yea, by the millions, and if during that time France and England and Italy were our allies, but did not send us anything other than supplies, we would think they were very Shylockian indeed if, after that trouble, in the face of the unequal burden, they came in and demanded 100 cents on the dollar.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I take it that the able Senator from Maryland is of the opinion that this was our war from the beginning.

Mr. TYDINGS. From April 6, 1917, when we declared war. That is the period to which I refer.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, we loaned money prior to that time.

Mr. TYDINGS. No.

Mr. BORAH. We contracted to loan it prior to that time.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am talking about the loans that were made subsequently to our declaration of war.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator from Maryland know that the amount which France owes us now is less than the amount which we loaned France after the war was over?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; but I still go back to the original contention that the debts I am talking about are all debts which were contracted after April 6, 1917, and none of them were contracted before that.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly; but we have settled with France now for 49 cents on the dollar, and that leaves France owing us a lesser amount than the amount of money which we loaned France after the war was closed. That amount was loaned to France for the purpose of building up her internal affairs, and building up her manufactures, and taking care of her domestic concerns.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; that is true, but I say that France owes us more money than she has in her entire country in the way of monetary stocks. A nation cannot pay a debt larger than she has monetary stocks with which to pay, and it is silly to say that she can.

Mr. BORAH. Then, as has been suggested, we ought to repudiate the Liberty Bonds, for they aggregate a larger amount than our monetary stock.

Mr. TYDINGS. Our present policy is not bringing us in a dollar. My contention is that we ought to make a lump-sum settlement now, once and for all, get what we can, square the debt, and give the world a chance to recover from the effects of the war, and not drag this question back and forth through all these years of chaos and depression.

Mr. BORAH. If they do not owe us anything, if this is an inequitable debt, if it was really our debt by reason of the fact that we ought to have been in the war with soldiers instead of loaning the money, no lump sum is possible of determination that will settle it upon an equitable basis.

Mr. TYDINGS. If I had the say of the thing, I would cancel the debt. I would consider it a debt of honor, and cancel the entire debt, and gladly do so; but I know that Congress does not agree with me on that viewpoint. I am one of a very small minority. Even conceding that the other viewpoint is right, however, we are not getting anything now. We are not getting any payments. We have not gotten any for several years, and we are never going to get any, whereas under another policy we could get something.

Mr. BORAH. I agree with the Senator that it seems we are not going to get anything. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes; I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK. I desire to say to my friend from Maryland that the first statement I have ever heard him make on the subject of the debt settlements with which I was in wholehearted accord is the one he made just a while ago, in which he admitted that he was one of a very small minority in this country that holds to his views. [Laughter.]

Mr. TYDINGS. That is right. I always feel that the minority is right, and I am one of a very small minority.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I feel that the eminent Senator from Idaho and the equally eminent Senator from Maryland have contributed much illumination to my position and have done a great deal to contribute to my address that will reflect upon it something of distinction. I concede that the contributions made by both Senators have been in the form of valued information, but I am sure it will not be pleasant to my friend from Maryland to realize that the speech he has just made on the theory that this war was the war of the United States and the debts the debts of the United States is the very logic and argument made day before yesterday in the British Parliament as the reason for not paying our debt.

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator allow me to punctuate with a short observation his remark?

Mr. LEWIS. I am glad to yield to my friend for so pungent a punctuation as it will surely be.

Mr. TYDINGS. During the last four or five sessions of Congress almost all the speeches made on the floor have been in favor of collecting the war debts. In spite of almost complete unanimity of opinion that we should collect the debts we have not been collecting them, so I do not think that any words of mine will change the already unpleasant picture.

Mr. LEWIS. I read to my able friend part of the cable to which I referred, where the eminent British statesman says that—

> Since the United States finally came into the war, all other arguments are inconsequential beside the one that our financial outlay—

To wit, that of the United States—> should have been considered as a contribution to the common victory.

And then proceeding in the words of the Morning Post, supporting the gentlemen of the cabinet, it suggests that the Government—to wit, Britain—

> Should offer "a lump sum of reasonable dimensions" to the United States "in full and final settlement."

To which the Evening Star, the organ of the opposite party, roundly declares—

> Not a penny should be sent. If cancelation is not obtainable, then Britain should do as France has done—default.

I invite the attention of my able friend from Maryland, however, to a thought. I take it he assumes that if we should cancel this debt—wipe it out as it were, leave no obligation at all—it would bring these nations to a friendly attitude, one something of gratitude and appreciation, from which we should profit. I remind him, however, as the able Senator from Idaho has remarked, that we have cut down most of the debt as to one country. We have divided it in half as to another. We have relinquished all interest as to the third; and do we get any gratitude? Do we get any appreciation? We obtain only the curses of their eminent statesment in one form or the other, and their attitude toward us is one of antagonism, little less than enmity.

I am unable to see the profit, I answer again. If we were to cancel the debts, there would never be another obligation the United States could make with any country on earth, from that time on, whatever it might be, any other land becoming our debtor would claim the right to demand equal cancelation, or charge us with favoritism to the few, that is, to the large countries, while we denied it to them. To begin the policy of cancelation is the beginning of the loans that would lead in the demand for cancelation to a bankruptcy of our own Treasury.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. I am somewhat shocked to hear the statement of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. If he had been in Congress, either in this body or in the other, at the time we authorized the loans to these countries, and had heard the interrogatory, "What assurance have we, if these loans are authorized, that they will ever be paid?" and had heard the rebuke that came from the administration leaders that anyone should suggest that any sovereign government would take a loan and then repudiate it, he certainly would not have made the statement he has made here at the present hour.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. With all due respect to my good friend from Ohio, I have read those debates; and the one thing I cannot understand is that those who said that the loans would be paid, and those who believed those who said they would be paid, could have been so guillible as to believe that that would be an accomplished fact in the future.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Illinois will yield further——

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. I think anyone who believed that the loans never would be paid never would have voted to authorize them; and they were authorized by almost an overwhelming vote. I think only 52 votes in the House of Representatives were against them.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think perhaps the Senator's observation is accurate, that the Congress would not have voted the money unless they had had an understanding that it would be repaid; but may I say to the Senator that I still believe Congress would have voted the money eventually whether that premise is true or not, because I have not forgotten that after we declared war, when the Germans were driving toward Paris, and the Battle of the Marne was on, and we were actually in the war, there was practically no price which the American people would not have paid to stop the common enemy.

Mr. FESS. That is true.

Mr. TYDINGS. The situation then and the situation now are two very different situations.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. REED. The First Battle of the Marne was fought two years and a half before we got into the war.

Mr. TYDINGS. I did not say "the first Battle of the Marne." I spoke of the drive on Paris after we were in the war, when the Battle of Chateau Thierry took place, when the combined French and American troops stopped the German drive. At that time it looked as if the Germans might actually take Paris, and it was at that time that the American soldier demonstrated that he was the superior—or I should say, at least the equal, not wishing to detract from the sacrifices made by our comrades—of any soldier in Europe; and in my judgment at that time he changed certain defeat into victory. I do make the observation, however, that at that time the American people were in a humor where money was secondary to winning the war and bringing it to an end.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. I merely desire to make one observation. The Senator from Illinois is so courteous and so generous in allowing so many interruptions that of course nothing I might say could be interpreted as any criticism of him; but I desire to state to the Senate—not to the Senator from Illinois, because he has not occupied any time in the debate—that we have this important bill here. We have another important bill to follow it. The Committee on Finance has not yet had time to consider and report out what it is hopeful of reporting out, the sugar bill; and if the sugar farmers are to get any benefit from it, that bill must be passed at an early date.

I hope this foreign-debt matter may be settled in debate, at least, within a short time, and that we may proceed with the revenue bill.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I may say that I was presenting a thought that I felt, if carried out to realization, would give us complete revenue; and I may go further and say that nothing can I conceive that could give us more sugar. [Laughter.]

I, however, respond and will conclude by saying that the attitude of these debtors in the communications to which I have alluded clearly evidences that the United States must take a stand demanding her rights, but doing so with courtesy and with firmness, and recall to the attention of these governments that in the hour of peril described by the Senator from Maryland, and here may I say many of us, were as soldiers present on the same ground at the same time. We recall all that he describes as of sacrifice and glory, to be accurate—it was this country, in such an hour, which came to the rescue of these countries called "Allies"; and without our aid just such unhappy circumstances and harrowing finality might have attended them all in such result as the able Senator from Maryland prophesies as could have been the desperate end.

Mr. President, I deplore that they, our debtor nations, cannot now remember all that, and will not remember our kindnesses, the generosity of our people, who not merely opened their treasury, sustained them by avoiding the consumption of our own foodstuffs and turning them over to these nations at their demand, we sent our children to die upon distant hills, buried them in forlorn places, while in their American homes were the mothers, as Niobe, all tears, and our Nation in deep sorrow for the loss of the sons. Yet still sacrificing our all for the fulfillment of the other's call.

We gave the illustration of the text of the holy law proclaiming, "That greater love hath no man, than that he giveth his life for his friend."

Sirs, America has earned the right to stand erect upon our Nation's rights. We only ask these of our debtor nations to remember the spirit in which we advanced to them, and ask them to return some spirit of justice to us, and not erect for display on that other eminence of defiance that defies us our rights, refuses to recognize our privileges, and would hold us up to the world as being a nation lacking in intelligence to know our privileges—or being too weak to enforce justice.

Sir, we recall the expression of Cicero on a famous occasion, alluding to a similar situation in a far-off land, when he quoted his lines:

> What so kingly, so liberal, so munificent as to give assistance to the suppliant, to raise the afflicted, to bestow security, and to deliver from danger?

Such is what we contributed to these nations, our debtors. I pray Heaven that a new spirit may invest them, one that shall be of friendship, some appreciation if not gratitude, that they may return to the conceding and yielding American rights, that we may again revive the friendships of the past, and secure for the future a mutual justice between the nations of the world.

I thank the Senate.

FRAUDULENT HOME FINANCING

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senate to give me a few minutes of time so that I may put into the RECORD certain data to assist the Home Owners' Loan Corporation of the United States in the work they should be doing, and prevent a series of practices which I fear may be spread out of my home State into other States.

The practice which I am about to reveal is such an easy one to conduct, and is fraught with such fraud, and results in such gain, and is being carried on with such tremendous success in my home city that I fear that unless there is almost a universal warning given it will spread to some of the other States.

In order to assist the Home Loan authorities, I wish to put into the RECORD a statement of the details of what is being practiced down in my State, which has been testified to and is verified, and is not second hand. I do this at the present time in order to assist home owners, and the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, and in order that they may have data which will enable them to avert fraud in the other States.

We are very valiantly undertaking to break up the practice in Louisiana against tremendous odds, but because it has received such a tremendous impetus, and so much has already occurred to give it a start, we are at a disadvantage, but if other States may have notice of the practice in its incipiency in their respective Commonwealths, I am sure they can avoid the calamity with which we have been afflicted.

I hold in my hand the data relating to this matter, which can be explained in a very few words, so that the situation may be understood by Senators. I invite the Nation to take cognizance of this thing, and to take steps to prevent its spread in the various communities of the United States.

There are certain building-and-loan companies throughout this country. We have them in Louisiana. These building-and-loan companies originally sold their stocks to the public in the several communities. It was of course originally sold at par, a hundred cents on the dollar. Depressions came and that building-and-loan stock went down in some instances to as low as 60 cents on the dollar, and in some cases even to as low as 20 cents on the dollar we may say.

The building-and-loan companies in my State had loaned money to various enterprises. They had not restricted their loans entirely to home owners, but I will concern myself only with a discussion of those cases at this time, as much as I may. They loaned their money, and I will give a typical, concrete example, so that it may be understood by the world at large, and by the honorable Senate.

There would be, we will say, a concern known as the "No. 1 building-and-loan corporation." The building-and-loan company would sell its stock at par, and today it would be worth 50 cents on the dollar.

This building-and-loan company would lend to a home owner by the name of "A" $10,000 for a home; in other words, this company, in order to assist a prospective home owner, in its regular course of business would lend $10,000 in order to finance a home owner in securing a home.

Along would come the time when this company's stock had gone down to 50 cents on the dollar. Then we passed the home owners' loan bill. They set up in New Orleans a Home Owners' Loan Corporation, and similar institutions were set up throughout the country. There are put into these concerns, so far as concerns Louisiana, persons who have a pecuniary interest in exploiting the funds of the Government, in ransacking the Federal Treasury, not for the sole benefit of home owners, but for the benefit of nefarious interests which wish to draw part of the money that has been appropriated to alleviate human misery.

Mr. President, we created this corporation for the purpose of relieving human misery, and we find this coming to pass. There is a man with a $10,000 mortgage on his home. Some bright man comes to him and says that he will be able to assist him in negotiating a loan with the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. Very well. This interposing party says, "I will take your $10,000 mortgage that is in the building-and-loan association, and I will get the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to take up that mortgage, and I will get the consent of the 'Homestead' that it may be so handled." I will explain presently what the Homestead is.

Now, I will state what has been done down in my State, the spread of which through the other States I am taking steps to prevent, as well as to help stamp it out in my State.

The interposing party goes out and buys stock of this particular building-and-loan company. He buys $10,000 worth of stock, the exact amount, in dollars and cents, that has been loaned to a home owner. He pays for the $10,000 of stock $5,000, the market value at 50 cents on the dollar. Thereupon, with the $10,000 worth of stock of the building-and-loan company, for which he pays $5,000, having made his previous arrangements with the Homestead, and having already secured an appraisement by certain interests affiliated in the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, he gets an appraisement of $10,000 on the home, he takes the $10,000 worth of stock of the building-and-loan company, which cost him $5,000, and he has the home owner to deed back to the Homestead the $10,000 home for the $10,000 debt. Then he gives the $10,000 worth of stock which he acquired for $5,000 to the building-and-loan company in payment for the home which the building-and-loan company had just accepted back.

He then turns that in to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, for and on behalf of the original home owner, for $10,000, and the home owner signs a bond for the $10,000. Whereupon the $10,000 becomes the property of the interposing third party, who has acquired $10,000 worth of building-and-loan stock for $5,000. Thereupon the racketeer pockets $5,000 of money and the $5,000 besides that is used to pay for what it cost him to get the $10,000 of building-and-loan stock.

In order to have that practice succeed, in order that the racket may be completely carried out, it is necessary that everybody be in on the transaction, and help in perpetrating the fraud. That is, it is necessary, first, that the building-and-loan company protect the racket. It is necessary, second, that the interposing party protect the racket. It is necessary, third, that those in charge of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation assist in the transaction.

In order that I may warn various and sundry communities, I am explaining just how the thing has been done in my State. There is, for example, a Hibernia Homestead Association in the city of New Orleans. The Hibernia Homestead's main officers are Mr. John P. Sullivan and Mr. Frank B. Sullivan. Mr. John P. Sullivan and Mr. Frank B. Sullivan constitute in the main the Hibernia Homestead Corporation. The same two parties, Mr. John P. Sullivan and Mr. Frank B. Sullivan, are the chief officers in what is known as the "Navillus Realty Corporation".

According to the data which have been compiled for me, and which have been verified under oath, the first thing they have done, for a number of years, has been to buy property with the funds of the Hibernia Homestead, which they organized by selling their stock to the public. They have gone out and marketed their stock to the public at a hundred cents on the dollar. Then they have used the funds which the public contributed to the Hibernia Building and Loan Co. in making loans to what they called their Navillus Corporation, and with the funds loaned by the Hibernia to the Navillus Corporation they have acquired certain properties. So they wind up with having assumed an indebtedness for the Navillus Corporation to the Hibernia Homestead Corporation of some $55,000.

They desired to reduce that indebtedness, which they did on July 15, 1931, by refinancing the proposition, and in the refinancing the Navillus Realty Co. turned in to the Hibernia Homestead Association $14,500 worth of the stock of the Hibernia Homestead Association which at that time was selling at 60 cents on the dollar, for the full sum of $14,500.

Therefore, Mr. President, they did what amounted to wiping off an indebtedness of $5,800, representing the difference between the value of the stock on the market and the value at which they turned it in to the Hibernia Homestead Corporation.

They thereupon, Mr. President, in turning in $14,500 worth of their stock for 100 cents on the dollar the same as took $6,000 off of that loan and put it in their pockets.

But, did that end the fraud? Not on your life! There was, Mr. President, in that transaction, in this surrender back to the Hibernia Homestead Association, a piece of property that had been purchased for $10,000, that had been mortgaged for $10,000, but instead of having that piece of property that had been bought with $10,000 of Hibernia Homestead funds turned into the general mortgage it was covering, or instead of having that piece that had been bought for $10,000 secured by the same mortgage of $10,000, that piece of property, Mr. President, was turned in in such shape that it lay there mortgaged only for the sum of $2,600, or thereby leaving the property mortgaged for $2,600 instead of being mortgaged for the $10,000, or $7,400 diminishing item in that transaction.

Mr. President, they wound up by taking out $6,000 in the one item and $7,400 in another item, meaning that they took out $13,400. And then in order to add to the matter, I do not say unjustly, in addition to that immense sum of $7,400 and $6,000 or $13,400, they charged a further sum of $1,798 against that item as attorneys' fees and for other services of the attorney, Mr. John P. Sullivan, who ran both corporations, running that item up from $13,400 to $15,100 taken out of that.

So, Mr. President, after having run that item up to $15,100, through the exchanges of stock of these corporations that the public had contributed, and attorneys' fees, was that all? Oh, no! It was found that the remaining property was not sufficient to discharge the mortgage, so thereupon the Navillus Corporation, composed of John P. Sullivan and Frank B. Sullivan, turned back the property that was left to the Hibernia Homestead Corporation, and discharged themselves from all indebtedness altogether, retaining $15,100 that they had taken out of the property in the meantime.

But that was not all. The end was only the beginning. So, then, along about this time, Mr. President, having their organization set up for this kind of business—and I will offer the document that has been given to me by the banking department of the State of Louisiana explaining these items in detail to be printed in the RECORD in just a moment—and this is a similar means and method as the handling of many other associations affiliated in the matters that I am now trying to detail to the Senate—so that, Mr. President, coincident with this along came the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to relieve the people from their misery. I cannot give a range of all of these concerns; I must confine myself to the ones that seemed most experienced in the lines. There came along the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

We read in the newspapers that there has been named a gentleman as the general manager for the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in Louisiana who, the newspapers said, had been designated by Col. John P. Sullivan. We are told on the witness stand that this splendid citizen that they recommend him to be was recommended by Col. John P. Sullivan and two other persons, one of whom has his nephew as the main attorney in charge of making a lot of these loans, as the lawyer in the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in New Orleans.

Then we come along with this governmental concern. What did they do? They took out of this Hibernia Homestead and out of the Navillus Co., owned by the same two parties, and out of the law office of Mr. John P. Sullivan, himself, certain persons. They put a gentleman by the name of Ford, who was a lawyer practicing law in the office of Mr. Sullivan, and they made him the chief abstracter in the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. They took a gentleman by the name of Leon Verges, who was one of the directors of the Hibernia Homestead, wherein they fomented this kind of transactions, and they made him the chief appraiser of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. And then they took a gentleman by the name of Hayman, I believe his name is, from the race track that Mr. Sullivan has been running, and they put him in the Internal Revenue Department, and after some months of sacrifice and service that Mr. Hayman had given in that job, he was transferred over to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, where he could do better work, and then they started the whole thing on a broad and expansive scale.

What did they do, Mr. President? Why, they became what probably others will become, unless we warn the public throughout the United States and clip this kind of fraud in the budding; they began, Mr. President, a series of things. As I told you, Mr. Paul B. Habans, according to the testimony of Mr. John M. Parker and of Mr. E. R. Rightor—Mr. Paul B. Habans, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation manager, was appointed on the recommendation of John P. Sullivan, Mr. Edward Rightor, and Ex-Governor John M. Parker. Ex-Governor Parker's secretary, as he testified on the stand, or someone testified for him, was Mr. Stanley W. Ray.

As was testified on the stand this morning, the chief counsel placed in the Home Owners' Loan Corporation was a nephew of Mr. Rightor, by the name of Ed. Showalter, and the chief appraiser and the chief abstracter placed in the Home Owners' Loan Corporation was first a lawyer named Ford, who came out of the Sullivan office, and a man named Leon Verges for chief appraiser, who came out of the Hibernia Homestead office.

So, with that set-up, Mr. President, they set up this practice in the State of Louisiana, and I have here only a very small amount of the cases.

I have, Mr. President, only 65 cases here for proof. I hope that I will not be criticized by the Senate for the lack of proof that I am furnishing on this occasion. I had stated that there were hundreds of cases, but it was difficult, Mr. President, to trace down, with the limited amount of time we had and the limited finances and the help at our disposal, having to go from the mortgage office in the one case and to the Home Loan in the other case and to the building and loan company in another case and the private place again, perhaps in another case, and in many of those instances I was told by the members of the banking department that they found the offices shut down; they would tell them the record had disappeared; they would say it was over here, and they would have no index for it, and they tell me that it was the most difficult task they had ever tried to do to trace these things from one place to the other.

But it will be shown, as I have shown, Mr. President, here that it was all one transaction. When the man turns over the stock for the $10,000, that he has bought for $5,000, and gets $10,000 of Home Owners' Loan Corporation stock, it is all done at the same time. They sign the instrument by which the home owner deeds back the home to the building and loan company for the deed, and they sign the other instrument by which the building-and-loan company turns the home over to the man who bought the $10,000 worth of stock for $5,000, and they sign the instrument by which it is turned into the building and loan company, so that the home owner gets the place and assumes $10,000 worth of debt, and the man that bought the $10,000 of stock for $5,000 gets the $10,000 of Home Owners' Loan Corporation stock at the same hour. So that all that it amounts to, Mr. President, is that a man takes $5,000 and buys $10,000 worth of building and loan stock, and turns right around and gets $10,000 of Home Owners' Loan Corporation stock, and puts it on the market and gets 97 cents on the dollar for it, or 98 cents, and so that on the $10,000 transaction $4,700 to $5,000 of the Government's money goes into the pocket of the racket. And it might be all right if the racket were not one, Mr. President, which is so closely identified with the Government.

I am not going to take the time to explain who these people are at this time, because we have a very important bill under consideration, and I am anxious that no delay shall occur, but I will take up the case of Governor Parker's secretary, Mr. Stanley W. Ray, and give you his first, because this is a patriotic undertaking of my friend Governor Parker.

The governor and I have not been the kind of friends that I would like us to have been. But that is not his fault, Mr. President. He is not only a good man, but a public-spirited man. He gave up his time, Mr. President, to the assistance of the public, and I want to state that there was not any question on his part so far as his own testimony can be judged, that is, if you take what he says to be true—and I would not ask anything else—that he is trying to do a service to the public in this work. I have had some of these gentlemen paraded as the high-minded aristocracy of my State, while I have been described as coming from the lower ranks, and I want to see that they are placed in their proper, high place in the sun.

Here is the transaction of Stanley W. Ray. Mrs. M. D. Salazer, in which he bought the stock of the home loan for 39½ and took the Home Owners Loan Corporation bonds that sold at 81¾.

And take the case of Claude St. Amant, in which he turned in the homestead stock at 42¾ a share, with handling of the appraisement through the appraisers and the attorney's opinion and their machinations, and got the Home Owners stock for 83½ that he received. That is he sold the home owners own stock. You will note that where 39½ cents went to the home owners, that more than that amount went into the pockets of this interposing party.

In the third case, the case of J. P. Albeanease, he got a total amount of $3,300. The market quotation of the building and loan stock that was turned in for it was 39 cents, for which an equal amount of Home Owners stock that was sold that day for 84 cents was received.

The next case is that of Walter J. Wolfe. I could go on down the list, but I will skip and get to the bottom of it. Finally we come to the case of Mr. M. B. Lamarie. The stock that was turned in for his home had been bought for 41 cents for which an equal amount of Home Owners' Loan Corporation stock was sold that day, for 98⅛.

The next case is that of Mr. Joseph E. Mercier, the transaction occurring on the 22d day of March last. They gave building and loan stock which was quoted on the market at 41¾ cents, for which they received an equal amount of Home Owners' stock that sold on the same day for 98⅛ cents.

I give another case, that of Mr. H. F. W. Rasmussen, whose property was purchased with stock of a market value of 41 cents, which was on the same day given in exchange for Home Owners' Corporation stock at 98⅛.

In deference to the friendship which I hope I feel for my friend Governor Parker, who represents this corporation and in the kindness of my heart, I send to the desk, in order that it may be copied into the RECORD, the entire transactions that are shown there under the account of Mr. Stanley W. Ray, and ask that they may be marked exhibit 1.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. RUSSELL in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. LONG. In order that I may be fair about the matter—it is not fair to give Mr. Parker and Mr. Ray publicity in this matter without showing that they have others who are with them—I send to the desk in order that it may be incorporated in the RECORD another one. Before sending it, however, I will make a slight explanation. Here are the names of other purchasers. They interposed a man by the name of Briant; they interposed a man by the name of Prieto; they interposed Mrs. Virginia P. Leaman; and they interposed the Dumaine Realty Co. It will be found that these concerns are affiliated in many instances with the appraisers and lawyers who have been placed there in charge of making loans for the Home Owners' Loan Corporation or as appraisers. Mr. President, as to the Dumaine Realty Co., I cite the case on the 23d day of March 1934, when they negotiated a transaction that shows on its face as much fraud as you can find in any other place. The Dumaine Realty Co. is the concern of Mr. Meyer Eiseman, I understand, who has been made one of the appraisers of the United States Government's Home Owners' Loan Corporation. I send this document to the desk and ask that it may be printed as exhibit 2, in order that similar frauds of this kind may be prevented throughout the balance of the United States.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. LONG. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WALSH. I have followed with a good deal of interest and approval the operations of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in my State. I should like to inquire from the Senator whether or not he is pointing out any violations of the law which limit loans to be made upon homesteads to not more than $20,000?

Mr. LONG. I hope the Senator will not ask me to comment on it. I only want to state facts; I do not want to make personal comment.

Mr. WALSH. The limitations on the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in making loans are, first, that there is a distressed financial condition on the part of the home owner, and, secondly, that the amount shall not exceed $20,000. Is the Senator alleging that they have loaned money in Louisiana where there is not a distressed condition upon the part of the home owner and where the amount of the loan is in excess of $20,000?

Mr. LONG. Let me inquire, Was the Senator here when I began my address?

Mr. WALSH. I was not, but I heard the Senator in the committee this morning, in part.

Mr. LONG. I want to state again, so that the Senator will understand what I am speaking of. They have started out down in Louisiana to do this: They will have a man go and buy stock of a building-and-loan company that is selling at, say 50 cents or less on the dollar. That man will buy, we will say, $10,000 worth of the building and loan stock on the market for $4,100; then he will take that $4,100 for his homestead—perhaps he is interested in this particular building-and-loan company—and he will go out to a home owner by the name of A who has a mortgage for $10,000 which the building and loan company sold and have him turn the place over to the building and loan company for the $10,000 as a payment of the debt. Then he will take the $10,000 worth of stock that he has bought for $4,100 and exchange that with the building-and-loan company, that he is either owning or controlling or has an understanding with, for the home that was originally mortgaged for $10,000. So he paid $4,100 for the $10,000. Then he turns the home over to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation for the original owner and gets $10,000 worth of H.O.L.C. bonds, which have cost him $4,100. Therefore, he gets $5,900 of the $10,000 that the Government put out and $4,100 goes to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

Mr. WALSH. I think I understand the Senator.

Mr. LONG. That is all done as one transaction; it is all signed up at one sitting. There is some lawyer there, we will say——

Mr. WALSH. The Home Owners' Loan Corporation must know two things: That there is a home owner in distress and that he has a mortgage that may be transferred to that Corporation.

Mr. LONG. That is all they ought to know.

Mr. WALSH. That is all the Home Owners' Loan Corporation knows.

Mr. LONG. That is all they ought to know; but in this case, as I have illustrated to the Senator, the party who was practically in charge of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in New Orleans, one of them, has put his chief appraiser and his lawyer in there, one as chief appraiser for the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and the other as chief abstracter for them, and the other one has put an employee in there as attorney, and the other one's secretary becomes the man on the outside operating the connection to bring in the stock that is to be transferred for 41 cents and get a dollar. As a result of that, fraud has developed the like of which I know if it were existing in the State of Massachusetts the Senator from Massachusetts would not have been as negligent as I have been, but he would have informed the country of it long before this information reached me.

Mr. WALSH. I may say to the Senator in conclusion that the Chairman of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation Board is Mr. John H. Fahey, who is a highly esteemed citizen of my State, and a very honest, conscientious, and efficient public servant. If the Senator has any evidence that the Home Owners' Loan Corporation has been imposed upon by home owners and that they have violated the law, I want to say that I am sure he will find that Mr. Fahey will take prompt steps to rectify such conditions.

Mr. LONG. I am glad to concur with the Senator in that statement, and for that reason I am sending to the desk the evidence that has been prepared for me. I have already offered two voluminous sheets, and now I am going to send to the desk, Mr. President, and ask to have put in the RECORD as part of my remarks sheet no. 3, showing the estimated profits and the various and sundry items of transfer, and showing that they bought stock for 48 that they cashed for 84 with the Government and stock for 51 that they cashed at the hands of the Government for 98, realizing a profit of $213 in one case and $478 in another; but it was getting a little bit low, apparently; this man was not one of the best.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the exhibit will be printed in the RECORD.

(See exhibit 3.)

Mr. WALSH. If what the Senator says is true, of course, he is making a serious charge against the employees of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. Not against the employees. I would not limit it to the poor employees. I am one of the men who understands the capacity of a poor employee who is taken out of the Sullivan office and placed in the Home Owners' Loan Corporation or out of some other lawyer's office. I know in my heart and from my experience that those men are doing what they are told to do. I would not punish the employees.

Mr. WALSH. It takes the connivance of the managers, of the chief conveyancer, of the appraiser——

Mr. LONG. And of the building-and-loan company.

Mr. WALSH. And of the heads of the departments of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation office.

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir; it takes the connivance of them all. I do not want to pick out some little men who are drawing $175 a month; I am not making my charges against them, because they are the least culpable. I send to the desk——

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. LONG. I yield to my friend from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am wondering if the Senator is limiting his charges against the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to Louisiana?

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir; I am.

Mr. McKELLAR. My own experience with that Commission is that it is composed of men of perfectly splendid character and attainments; they are trying their best to perform a great work, and, in my humble judgment, they are performing a most beneficent work in a most businesslike way—a work that means more to the people of this country perhaps than that undertaken by any other Commission connected with the Government. I want to say further that, in my judgment, if the Commission is a failure in Louisiana it is the only State where it is a failure. From all parts of the country we find being paid the most glowing tribute to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and the magnificent work which that corporation is doing.

Mr. LONG. I want to say to my friend from Tennessee that I am encouraged and inspired to have his advice. I do not believe that there is any such thing as this happening in any other State except Louisiana, and in New Orleans, so far as I know, in that State. I do not believe from what my friend from Massachusetts told me that it is in any respect knowingly consented to in his State, and I would be the last to charge it was consented to by any one here.

I ask that I be sent back that sheet, so that I may show my friend from Tennessee an example and so that he may see just how this thing is being done.

Mr. President, they take building and loan stock that is bought in at 58 cents on the curb, and get an equal amount of stock of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation at 98¼.

In other words, as the Senator from Tennessee knows—and he is my good friend—if he had known of a thing like this occurring in Tennessee he would never have been so lacking in his diligence to have it corrected as I have been. I apologize to the Senate that I have not brought this information here before. I say to my friends that I have brought it here in time, I hope, so that the good and worthy means that were intended to surround the workings of this corporation may be perpetuated in other States which this practice has not yet reached.

I have previously sent to the desk several of these sheets, and I now send the fourth one, asking that they may be inserted in the RECORD at the end of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 4.)

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I wish we could have a committee appointed, with someone like my friend from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] on it, to go down to Louisiana and investigate this matter, to see that it shall be forbidden in the future. I voted for the measure creating the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. I was one of the first men in the Senate to support this kind of legislation. Even when the former President, under whom I first served in the Senate, had some kind of a bill looking to this end, I supported it, though with some misgivings.

Here is what they have done—and I want my friend from Tennessee to pay attention to this, because he is a southerner like I am, and an honest man, and he would not stand for this kind of business if he could possibly prevent it. It has got so bad down in my section of the country that they even mimeograph the letter.

In other words, it is going so fast that they cannot take time to write a letter to each person. In order to make the difference between 40 cents and 98 cents and take it out of the Government, they do not even go to the trouble to write letters. If I was making a fee like that I would not call in a stenographer and dictate a letter, nor would I even go to the trouble and expense of having the letter mimeographed. I would be willing to write a letter by hand if I could make that kind of a fee.

Here is the letter:

GREATER N. O. HOMESTEAD ASSOCIATION,
740 Poydras Street, New Orleans, La.

MR. SAMUEL A. COCHRAN,
Special Representative, Home Owners' Loan Corporation, New Orleans, La.

In re: File No._____
Application of_____ Address_____

They leave all of that blank so all they have to do is to stick in the number and name and address and go out and get the money and spend it.

DEAR SIR: This is to advise you that this association has entered into an agreement with Mr. Irwin S. Gautier to sell him the above premises and will convey title to him thereunder in due course.

This property was, will be—

They fix it that way so they can strike out "was" or "will be" according to the circumstances of the case.

This property was, will be, acquired by this association by foreclosure, assignment, under date of _____.

They have it so they can strike out "foreclosure" or "assignment", as the case may be, and then fill in the date.

We understand that the owner of this property is desirous of having the Home Owners' Loan Corporation redeem this property under section 4 (g) of the Home Owners' Loan Act, and we are writing this to you to certify to you that Mr. Irwin S. Gautier has a contingent interest in the above premises—

They have to put that in there because they have had him deed the property back for the amount of his debt, and they have to put in the statement that they have a contingent interest because under the law of Louisiana we do not recognize a claim to property unless it is evidenced in writing—has a contingent interest in the above premises and that it will be in order for you to accept mortgagee's consent form from him.

Yours very truly,

_____,
Secretary.

Mr. President, I send to the desk the original document from which I was quoting, entitled "Hibernia Homestead Association, New Orleans, La. History of loans granted by Hibernia Homestead Association to Navillus Company, Inc.", and ask that it may be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 5.)

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, in order to take up as little time of the Senate as is necessary, I shall not add a single word to what has been said nor shall I make a charge against anyone other than as has been shown in the sworn affidavits and exhibits handed to me under authority of the bank examining officials of the State who are here ready to testify.

Mr. President, it is a horrible thing to inflict our State with the menace which we are told does not exist in other States. I am sure that those understanding the situation will exculpate the two Members sitting in this body from Louisiana from any participation in the selection of the persons who are in any respect connected with these transactions. I am sure that those who have sat with the Senate Finance Committee will do me the honor and the credit to exonerate me and to exonerate my colleague in this body [Mr. OVERTON] from having had a chance to be a party to the selection of those conducting this kind of an enterprise or carrying out the transactions in any of their detail.

Mr. President, none the less I apologize for having to bring this matter before the Senate. I do not bring it for Louisiana alone, because I am sure that having explained these matters here the effect will be such as to get a proper recognition of them—perhaps not so quickly as other matters are recognized, but probably in some course. But at least I hope the publication of these matters in the RECORD will be such as to place all on notice that this practice cannot spread to the other States.

Mr. President, I am not going to protect fraud in my own party, and I am not going to protect fraud outside of my party. If, under the administration of our own party, these sacred funds, intended to put the bone and marrow and sinew of the helpless man, who needs a home, in a position that will give him shelter, if these sacred funds are being diverted from the uses for which they are contributed by this Government and those uses are being perverted, it should be known. If this money is going into the pockets of those who have such little feeling for destitute and needy humanity that they would take for themselves these sacred funds which are intended to relieve the misery and suffering of the weak and fallen and helpless, then what could we expect to happen in the future and what respect could we expect to be given to this sacred body and other institutions of the Government even by those who, of necessity, have to depend upon the Government at this time? God save our fair State of Louisiana! God save America!

Two lots of ground together with all buildings and improvements thereon, situated in the first district of the city of New Orleans in square bounded by Julia, Girod, Carondelet, and Baronne Streets. Said lots adjoin each other and measure each 30-foot front on Julia Street (French measure) by depth of 100 feet (American measure), which two lots are a portion of lot designated by no. 102 on a plan of Joseph Pilie, city surveyor.

Also a certain portion of ground together with all the buildings and improvements situated in the first district of the city of New Orleans in square bounded by Carondelet, Julia, Girod, and Baronne Streets.

NOTE.—In the refinance of the two loans of $40,000 and $2,600, respectively, it is seen that the property secured under the old loan of $10,000 now secures the $2,600 note, which was paid in full and the security released, whereby the $40,000 note only, was deeded back to the association.

The loan of $40,000 granted to the Navillus Realty Co., Inc., on July 15, 1931, was deeded back to the association on a dation en paiement on December 23, 1932, property being described as 7161–65 Carondelet Street, 711–13–15 Julia Street and a vacant lot "A" on Julia Street (act passed by David Sessler).

Record shows no payment in interest or principal from the date of loan through the date of repossession.

The loan made in the amount of $2,600, as above described, was repaid in cash by installment payments, closing out October 21, 1932.

[NOTE.—Letter in files of association showing appraisement as of June 29, 1931, on these properties of $50,000, by Latter & Blum.]

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 7835) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I think we have almost forgotten the amendment I have offered, known as the "depletion amendment." It has not been before the Senate at least for 3 hours. We are now ready to continue its consideration, and I hope we may have a vote on it very shortly. I am going to take only a few moments to explain the amendment a little more fully.

Mr. President, we have in this country the remarkable spectacle of nearly 500,000 corporations, 221,000 of them making tax returns and paying some income taxes, while 241,000 corporations are earning dividends and paying dividends and making returns, but paying no income taxes to the General Government.

Our system of income taxation is such that we grant such large allowances to certain of our corporations that while they have ample money to declare dividends, yet they have no money with which to pay the Federal Government an income tax.

I find there are 241,000 of these corporations making returns. They paid out, in the year for which we have the record, $1,500,000,000 in dividends to their stockholders, but not one cent of income tax to their Government. One billion two hundred million dollars of these dividends were paid in cash, and three hundred millions in stock dividends. Among these companies are the oil companies; and that brings us to the immediate amendment.

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] earlier today stated that the oil industry paid to the Federal Government $12,000,000 in income taxes. I find that the Senator is wholly mistaken. In the year 1931 the last estimate we have shows that coal, copper, iron, silver, gold, lead, zinc, gas, and oil paid altogether $7,300,000—altogether! I find, from a break-down of that amount, that the oil and gas people together paid a little more than $2,000,000 to the Federal Government in income taxes. Why? Because they not only get all the deductions that other corporations get, but they get these depletion allowances, which are one half their annual income, whatever it may be.

Why should we virtually exempt oil and gas corporations from taxation? That is what we do.

I desire to call attention to the testimony of the Secretary of the Treasury before the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives, and what he recommended, and how he characterized this situation. Listen to Mr. Morgenthau:

> The discovery depletion provisions enable a taxpayer who had paid $10,000 for a piece of property, and has later discovered a mine (other than a metal, coal, or sulphur mine) upon it worth $1,000,000, to deduct depletion on the mine as if he had paid $1,000,000 therefor. The taxpayer is thereby permitted to receive tax free $990,000 of income on which, by any equitable standards, he should pay the tax. To exempt the income of mine owners or of any other class, necessitates simply that the amount be made up by other taxpayers. The Treasury knows of no reason why a limited class of mine owners should be granted a subsidy as compared to other taxpayers. It is therefore recommended that the provisions for discovery depletion be eliminated.
> Our experience shows that the percentage depletion rates set up in the law do not represent reasonable depletion rates in the case of the designated properties, but are much higher than the true depletion to which the taxpayer is fairly entitled. Moreover, these provisions enable a taxpayer to obtain annual depletion deductions, notwithstanding the fact that he has already recovered the full cost of the property. The deduction is, therefore, a pure subsidy to a special class of taxpayers. For this reason the Treasury recommends that these provisions be eliminated in order to put all taxpayers upon the same footing.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I will yield to my friend in just a moment.

Senators, why should we give this subsidy from the Treasury? After that unqualified endorsement of a change in the depletion law by our own Secretary of the Treasury, when he calls this depletion a mere matter of subsidy, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee, how it is that the committee did not report in favor of at least reducing the subsidy to this class of corporations.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Tennessee that the question of depletion has been before the committee in the drafting of every revenue bill in the form of percentage, and so forth.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course.

Mr. HARRISON. It is a matter that the committee considered very carefully. The experts were at variance about it. Senators on the committee were at variance as to the exact amount; and of course, the Senator understands that the gentlemen who came from the mining sections of the country, and from States where oil is found, wanted what they thought was reasonable. They contended that this was reasonable, and that is why it is in the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Treasury Department certainly knows what the tax returns are. Congress does not know. Senators are not permitted to know. Senators are not permitted to look at the tax returns; but the tax returns are in the possession of the Secretary of the Treasury and his experts, and naturally he knows whether or not these companies are paying taxes as other citizens are paying them. He comes before the committee and makes the statement that these particular corporations are not paying taxes like other corporations. He makes the statement in this evidence that what we are paying is a subsidy to this favored class of corporations. I think it is indefensible unless there is some proof that we are not paying them a subsidy.

The Secretary of the Treasury knows what the facts are. We find that these corporations are paying just a trifle over $2,000,000 in taxes. This is perhaps the fifth greatest industry in our country. The companies engaged in it claim that it is the fifth greatest industry in the country. They are paying about $2,000,000 of Federal taxes.

My good friend, the Senator from Oklahoma, today gave as a reason why we ought not to tax these corporations any more the fact that they paid $747,000,000 of taxes to State, county, and city governments. If they pay a tax of that amount to the State, county, and city governments, surely they might pay at least a ratable tax to the Federal Government. It ought not to be all given back to them.

Now, I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, the Senator understands, of course, that the comments of the Secretary in regard to discovery depletion do not apply to oil and gas, nor to coal, nor to sulphur, nor to metal mines. Discovery depletion has been abrogated with respect to those mines years since. It applies only to such mines as salt, asphaltum, building stone, gravel, and mining products of that sort. The Senators representing those States may have reason to know why the discovery depletion should not be abolished with reference to those mines as it has been with reference to oil and the other classes of mines I have mentioned.

Mr. McKELLAR. All I know is what the Secretary says. He says that the depletion allowance carried in this bill is a subsidy to these concerns. The fact is, they pay almost nothing. When we look at the facts regarding the $12,000,000 for 1931 that the Senator spoke about, we find that the actual figure is $7,306,390; but when we break it down—to use an expression that has come into vogue in late years—we find that oil and gas pay just about $2,000,000 instead of $12,000,000, as the Senator stated earlier in the day. About $2,000,000 is all the tax that the Federal Government gets.

It is unfair and unjust that this depletion allowance should be made. The Secretary of the Treasury, in my judgment, ought to be upheld by the Congress when he wants to have taxes fairly and justly imposed upon the people.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I desire to say in this connection that I was mistaken earlier today both as to the highest and as to the lowest figures. The lowest figure, I believe, has just been stated by the Senator from Tennessee. The highest figure I suggested today was $77,000,000. I believe it was actually $81,000,000. I had only glanced over those figures several years ago, and they slipped my memory.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is quite immaterial. As a matter of fact, here is the fifth largest industry in this country, as it claims, paying only $2,000,000 in taxes to the American Government. Here is our Secretary of the Treasury; and while I have not the honor of knowing the present Secretary of the Treasury—I think I met him once, but he does not know me from Adam's off ox, and I am not absolutely sure that I would know him—he has the tax returns. His Department has them. He knows them; and when he comes and says that it is unfair and unjust to let these concerns out of taxes as we are doing, giving them a pure subsidy, as he says, it seems to me we might follow the Secretary of the Treasury in equalizing the burdens of taxation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I really intended to have the Senate take up the coconut-oil proposition next, but some Senators have requested that I do not make that request. The Senator from Pennsylvania has a couple of amendments he desires to offer, and is anxious to get away.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk, and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 212, after line 15, it is proposed to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 517. Liability of fiduciary: (a) Section 3467 of the Revised Statutes (U.S.C., title 31, ch. 6, sec. 192) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3467. Every executor, administrator, or assignee, or other person, who pays, in whole or in part, any debt due by the person or estate for whom or for which he acts before he satisfies and pays the debts due to the United States from such person or estate, shall become answerable in his own person and estate to the extent of such payments for the debts so due to the United States, or for so much thereof as may remain due and unpaid."

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall be applicable in the case of payments made after June 6, 1932.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, this was agreed to by the committee.

Mr. REED. And agreed to by the Treasury Department.

Mr. McNARY. Did the committee unanimously recommend this proposal?

Mr. REED. The committee was unanimous, and the Treasury Department is satisfied.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. I have another amendment to offer, to come in on page 190.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 190, in line 21, after the word "company" and within the parentheses, it is proposed to insert the words "or surety company."

Mr. HARRISON. That relates to the surety companies in the personal holding company provision?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. I have no objection to that amendment going to conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. I have another amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 193, after line 3, it is proposed to insert the following:

(e) Payment of surtax on distributive shares: The tax imposed by this section, and by section 102 of this act, shall not apply if all the shareholders of the corporation include (at the time of filing their returns) in their gross income their entire distributive shares, whether distributed or not, of the adjusted net income of the corporation for such year. Any amount so included in the gross income of a shareholder shall be treated as a dividend received. Any subsequent distribution made by the corporation out of earnings or profits for such taxable year shall, if distributed to any shareholder who has so included in his gross income his distributive share, be exempt from tax in the amount of the share so included.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, is the Senator going to insist upon that amendment?

Mr. REED. I will make just a brief explanation. This provision is already in the law, I believe.

The purpose of these proposed sections is to prevent the escape of surtaxes by incorporations. This amendment provides that if the individual shareholder shall account for his proportion of the earnings and pay surtaxes on it, he may do so. The Senator understands that this amendment would subject the earnings to surtaxes and not exempt them. It would allow an individual in one of these small holding companies to report his full share of the earnings.

Mr. HARRISON. I may say to the Senator that I am advised by the experts that it might operate just the other way, and I hope the Senator will withhold his amendment at least until we may look into it.

Mr. REED. I am very glad to do that. If the Senate will permit, then I withdraw the amendment at this time until we shall have had a chance to discuss it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is temporarily withdrawn.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Utah has an amendment to offer to the personal holding company provision that we should like to clear up now, if he will offer it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, on page 191, line 22, I move to strike out "10" and to insert in lieu thereof "20."

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator from Utah explain the amendment. When we agreed in the committee, we thought we were very liberal in this matter.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I did not happen to be present when this provision was agreed upon. I do not agree with the Senator that it is liberal. I think it is very illiberal.

Many of the small businesses in a number of the States, particularly in the Western States, are conducted by personal holding companies, family corporations. Those organizations have been effected, not for the purpose of evading taxes, but quite the reverse, for the purpose of conserving the incomes, and making proper utilization of them in industries small in character, which are highly advantageous not only to the stockholders, but to the people generally. It seemed to me that 10 percent was entirely too low to allow them by way of exemption. I hope the Senator will allow the amendment to be agreed to and go to conference.

Mr. COUZENS. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk, which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 19, line 15, after the word "rendered", it is proposed to insert the following:

but no allowance for salary or compensation in excess of $25,000 per annum shall be considered reasonable or allowed, and allowances for other salaries or compensation of said corporation shall be credited in accordance with this maximum in fixing the amount of deductions on account of salaries or compensation.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will withhold that amendment. The Senator from Oklahoma is very much interested in another amendment, and I told him that I would notify him when we took it up. I hope the Senator will withhold this amendment and offer it later on.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I see the Senator from Oklahoma in the Chamber at this time, and I should like to have my amendment laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee, on page 19, line 15.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not think the committee amendment relating to personal holding companies has been agreed to as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the committee amendment, as amended, has not as yet been agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to offer an amendment on page 190, merely perfecting the committee amendment. I ask that the amendment to the amendment be adopted, and thereafter that the amendment as amended be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The perfecting amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 190, line 25, after the word "dealers", it is proposed to strike out "its" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "in".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I have a request to make of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to section 44 a new paragraph, to be numbered (3), and to read as follows:

(3) Any taxpayer holding on December 31, 1933, installment obligations on capital transactions reported under section 44 (b) originally maturing in the years prior to January 1, 1934, but which were extended or renewed so that they thereafter matured in 1934 or subsequent years, shall have the option of paying a tax on such installments when paid or otherwise disposed of at the capital gain rate in effect in the year of original maturity.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Texas.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the amendment proposed by me was rejected be reconsidered, so that I may say a word about the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none and the vote is reconsidered.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I very much hope this amendment may go to conference. I desire very briefly to outline its purpose.

Under section 44 of the revenue act, as heretofore enacted, individuals who sold any kind of capital assets, not for cash but on installments, were required to pay on those installments in the year in which they were due, according to the regular schedule of rates. What I have in mind is a few isolated cases of persons who, during the depression, when such installments became due, did not insist on pressing their debtors and making them pay at that time, because to have done so would probably have wrecked their business, and they deferred the payments until this year or next year.

The purpose of this amendment is to permit such persons to pay their taxes at the same rate, as to the deferred installments, that they would have paid had collection been forced. That seems to me fair and just. In other words, if we do not adopt this amendment, we penalize a man for being tolerant with his debtor. We are putting an added burden upon him because he did not play the Shylock and grind the blood out of the poor, helpless devil who could not pay at the time the payment was due. The Government would receive the same amount of revenue it would have gotten had he forced collection, and been paid the rate provided when the installments were due. The amendment would not exempt a single installment that has not yet become due, and which was not deferred. It would simply permit the taxpayer to pay just as he would have paid had he squeezed the last drop of blood out of some industry or some business, and probably in doing so have wrecked it. That is all this amendment would do.

I have submitted the amendment to the experts. They say that it would not materially affect the revenue, but unless it shall be adopted there will be a great injustice and a great hardship to a few people who occupy the position which I have detailed in these remarks.

I hope the Senate will adopt the amendment and let it go to conference. I hope the committee will accept the amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. I will say to the Senator that I personally have no objection to the amendment going to conference, if the Senator wants to send it there.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, this amendment is not in the exact form of the amendment which was considered and rejected by the Senate Committee on Finance. I certainly hope that the Senate will adopt this amendment. It is humane, and not to adopt it, it seems to me, would be inhuman.

Take the instance cited by the Senator from Texas. An installment payment fell due last year. If the creditor played the Shylock, refused to grant an exception, took the pound of flesh nearest the heart, collected his debt, he escapes with a 12½-percent tax, or may do so. But take the creditor who was lenient, who had the milk of human kindness in his heart, who granted an extension in this storm to his distressed debtor, and the installment comes over to the current year. He will be penalized for his leniency, he will be punished not because he was a Shylock, he will be punished because he was not a Shylock.

Mr. President, the Senate has twice passed amendments which I had the honor to offer to create boards of conciliation to bring about an adjustment of debts between creditors and debtors. It is to the credit of the Senate that we passed those amendments. They died in that omnivorous cemetery known as the "conference committee", situated somewhere between the House and the Senate, but the Senate has expressed its views and its convictions on those amendments, and those amendments were in harmony with the pending amendment. It is in the interest of humanity, of leniency, and of reasonable attitude toward benevolent creditors, who "temper the wind to the shorn lamb." I hope it will pass.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. KING. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, and ask that it be read and that its consideration may go over until tomorrow.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the amendment, and that it be printed in the RECORD for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KING's amendment is as follows:

On page 8, line 5, strike out "4 percent" and insert "5 percent".

On page 8, strike out beginning in line 17 down through line 3 on page 13, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Upon a surtax net income of $4,000 there shall be no surtax; upon surtax net incomes of $4,000 and not in excess of $6,000, 4 percent in addition of such excess.

"$80 upon surtax net incomes of $6,000; and upon surtax net incomes in excess of $6,000 and not in excess of $8,000, 5 percent in addition of such excess.

"$7,880 upon surtax net incomes of $50,000; and upon surtax net incomes in excess of $50,000 and not in excess of $56,000, 31 percent in addition of such excess.

"$11,840 upon surtax net incomes of $62,000; and upon surtax net incomes in excess of $62,000 and not in excess of $70,000, 40 percent in addition of such excess.

"$15,040 upon surtax net incomes of $70,000; and upon surtax net incomes in excess of $70,000 and not in excess of $80,000, 45 percent in addition of such excess.

"$19,540 upon surtax net incomes of $80,000; and upon surtax net incomes in excess of $80,000 and not in excess of $90,000, 50 percent in addition of such excess.

"$270,040 upon surtax net incomes of $500,000; and upon surtax net incomes in excess of $500,000, 65 percent in addition of such excess."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the amendment seeks to increase the normal tax from 4 percent to 5 percent and the surtaxes in most of the brackets. If the amendment is agreed to it will raise between forty and fifty million dollars. I shall be very glad if Senators during the recess and before tomorrow morning will examine the proposed amendment so that when the Senate convenes action may be promptly taken on the same.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, is my understanding correct that the Senator from Utah does not expect a vote on his amendment today?

Mr. KING. No, Mr. President; I do not expect a vote on my amendment today.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator from Utah point out where the amendment comes in the bill?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I should like to have the Senator from Utah explain the difference between the taxes proposed by his amendment and those recommended by the committee.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, at this late hour I should trespass upon the patience of the Senate if I should attempt to make a detailed explanation of the amendment and the differences between it and the text of the pending bill.

The House bill provides a normal tax of 4 percent on net incomes, but does not continue the 8-percent normal tax found in the 1932 act upon incomes in excess of $8,000. My amendment fixes the normal tax at 5 percent upon net incomes. It contains fewer brackets for surtax purposes than the 1932 act or the House bill now before us. As stated, it increases the surtaxes in most of the brackets; and the increased normal tax, together with the increases in the surtax brackets, will yield more than $40,000,000 over the House bill. My amendment provides for 4-percent surtax upon incomes between four and five thousand dollars, and the bill before us provides a surtax of 5 percent. The pending bill fixes the surtax on incomes between eight and ten thousand dollars at 8 percent, whereas my amendment calls for but 6 percent.

If Senators will pardon me, I shall mention but a few more of the brackets and the changes between the pending bill and my amendment. For instance, on net incomes between thirty-two and thirty-eight thousand dollars the surtaxes imposed in the pending bill are 21 percent, and in my amendment 22 percent. Between forty-four and fifty thousand dollars net income the pending bill imposes 27-percent surtax and the amendment 28 percent. The surtax upon net incomes between eighty and ninety thousand dollars is 45 percent in the pending bill and 50 percent in my amendment. The surtaxes in the pending bill from the bracket last mentioned increase by 1 percent in each bracket until the bracket is reached where the net income amounts to more than $1,000,000, at which point the surtax is 59 percent, and in my amendment it is 65 percent. With a 5-percent normal tax and a 65-percent surtax my amendment would impose a tax of 70 percent upon incomes over $1,000,000.

I believe that the amendment provides a gradual, and, if I may use the expression, a uniform rise in the surtax rates. The upward curve representing the increases in the surtaxes is substantially uniform. It does not present the irregularities not infrequently found in income-tax measures.

Mr. President, I have a statement showing the surtax rates appearing in the pending bill and in my amendment. I ask that it be inserted in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As the Chair understands the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah is to go over until tomorrow.

Mr. KING. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, has the depletion section now been finished so far as agreeing to amendments is concerned?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask that the committee amendment in that section may be stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed on page 83 to strike out lines 11 to 22, both inclusive, as follows:

A taxpayer making his first return under this title in respect of a property shall state whether he elects to have the depletion allowance for such property for the taxable year for which the return is made computed with or without regard to percentage depletion, and the depletion allowance in respect of such property for such year and all succeeding taxable years shall be computed according to the election thus made. If the taxpayer fails to make such statement in the return, the depletion allowance for such property for all taxable years shall be computed without reference to percentage depletion.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

A taxpayer making his first return under this title in respect of a property shall state whether he elects to have the depletion allowance for such property for the taxable year for which the return is made computed with or without regard to percentage depletion, and the depletion allowance in respect of such property for such year shall be computed according to the election thus made. If the taxpayer fails to make such statement in the return, the depletion allowance for such property for such year shall be computed without reference to percentage depletion. The method, determined as above, of computing the depletion allowance shall be applied in the case of the property for all taxable years in which it is in the hands of such taxpayer, or of any other person if the basis of the property (for determining gain) in his hands is, under section 113, determined by reference to the basis in the hands of such taxpayer, either directly or through one or more substituted bases, as defined in that section.

So as to make the paragraph read:

(4) Percentage depletion for coal and metal mines and sulphur: The allowance for depletion under section 23 (m) shall be, in the case of coal mines, 5 percent, in the case of metal mines, 15 percent, and in the case of sulphur mines or deposits, 23 percent, of the gross income from the property during the taxable year, excluding from such gross income an amount equal to any rents or royalties paid or incurred by the taxpayer in respect of the property. Such allowance shall not exceed 50 percent of the net income of the taxpayer (computed without allowance for depletion) from the property. A taxpayer making his first return under this title in respect of a property shall state whether he elects to have the depletion allowance for such property for the taxable year for which the return is made computed with or without regard to percentage depletion, and the depletion allowance in respect of such property for such year shall be computed according to the election thus made. If the taxpayer fails to make such statement in the return, the depletion allowance for such property for such year shall be computed without reference to percentage depletion. The method, determined as above, of computing the depletion allowance shall be applied in the case of the property for all taxable years in which it is in the hands of such taxpayer, or of any other person if the basis of the property (for determining gain) in his hands is, under section 113, determined by reference to the basis in the hands of such taxpayer, either directly or through one or more substituted bases, as defined in that section.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert at the proper place in the bill the following:

In the case of any person regularly engaged in the business of buying at reduced rates admissions for the purpose of resale, the tax shall be 1 cent for every 10 cents or fraction thereof of the amount actually paid by such person for such admissions; and if such admission be resold at a price in excess of that previously paid therefor, there shall in addition be collected by the seller and paid a tax equivalent to 10 percent of the amount of such excess.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, under the tax law as interpreted by the Internal Revenue Bureau, all theater tickets are taxed in accordance with the admission price printed on the ticket. As a matter of fact, a great many theaters are kept open by placing through various agencies tickets which are sold at reduced prices. Many a theater in New York has failed to popularize a play. In order to give it vogue, an audience has been sought by selling tickets at reduced rates; for example, a $3 ticket is sold for $1. Concerns or agencies are operating which take thousands of tickets, or from one theater, for example, hundreds of tickets, in order that the audiences may be attracted.

It is hardly fair that such tickets should be taxed on the basis of the price printed on the face of the tickets. A $3 ticket, for example, would be taxed 30 cents. Where a ticket is sold for the price of $1 the seller absorbs the tax, but where as much as 20 or 30 cents tax is added, it means that the ticket is not sold.

I think it is unfair. I think it was intended that the interpretation should be placed upon the law as I have indicated. That was not our thought when we debated it at considerable length during the discussion of the revenue bill which eventually became the law of 1932. I hope the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] will be willing to take the amendment to conference and see if it will be acceptable to the House.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the matter was presented very forcefully to the committee by one of the gentlemen who himself is engaged in the business and also by an attorney of some repute, but the committee acted unfavorably upon it. I do not feel that I can accept it in view of those circumstances.

Mr. COPELAND. Then may I say, Mr. President, that the acceptance of the amendment would mean that many theaters would be lighted and used which now will be darkened? It will mean employment for actors, stage hands, and all concerned, if we permit this amendment to be adopted. I hope that the Senate may see fit to accept it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 19, line 15, after the word "rendered" to insert the following:

But no allowance for salary or compensation in excess of $50,000 per annum shall be considered reasonable or allowed, and allowances for other salaries or compensation of said corporation shall be credited in accordance with this maximum in fixing the amount of deductions on account of salaries or compensation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, this is the same amendment that was offered and voted on awhile ago, with the exception that I have increased the amount of the allowance to $50,000.

We know that there have been innumerable scandals about the high salaries paid corporation officers. Some of them have been paid as much as a million dollars while others were given bonuses in excess of a million dollars. Here we are allowing corporations to manipulate their funds in that way so as to escape taxation entirely.

I invite the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that in the year 1930 the enormous sum of $3,138,000,000 was paid out by the corporations of the country in salaries. Salaries of $1,000,000, salaries of $500,000, salaries of $125,000, all kinds of big salaries were paid. Take a corporation that was formed for the purpose of avoiding the individual income tax: Enormous salaries are paid to its officers for the purpose of escaping taxation. Surely there ought to be a limit put on the allowances for that purpose. What is proposed in this amendment is that an allowance to the extent of $50,000 may be asked. If a corporation desires to pay its officers more there is no reason why it cannot pay more, but it will have to pay a tax.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. McKELLAR. I am glad to yield.

Mr. BAILEY. Is the Senator seriously contending that the Congress of the United States can regulate salaries by way of the taxing power?

Mr. McKELLAR. Not at all. If the Senator had listened to the amendment he would know that it does not undertake to regulate salaries in any way.

Mr. BAILEY. I was listening to the Senator's argument. I was not reading the amendment, but I was listening to his argument.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator cannot have listened to it, because, under this amendment, a corporation can pay its officers any salary it pleases to pay, but the allowance for taxation purposes of money paid officers shall be limited to $50,000.

Mr. BAILEY. Is not that precisely the same thing? It is proposed to use the taxing power to determine the salary.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; the corporations can pay what they please, but when they pay more than $50,000 they must pay a tax on the excess. Here we are giving them exemption from taxes to a certain extent.

Mr. BAILEY. Again the Senator tells me indirectly what he might tell me directly—that the object of the amendment is so to use the taxing power of the Congress as either to put a penalty upon certain high salaries or to put a reward upon low ones.

Mr. McKELLAR. Not at all. Incomes are taxed by this bill. Certain allowances are made for salaries paid. We find that in 1933, $1,138,000,000 were allowed for salaries. The very purpose of those allowances is to avoid the income-tax laws. This amendment does not fix any limit upon salaries. A corporation can pay its officials any salaries it pleases; but if it pays one of them over $50,000, it must pay a tax on the excess. Now, surely if we are granting exemptions——

Mr. BAILEY. Take the words just uttered by the Senator. If the corporation pays over $50,000 in salary to one of its officers, then there is an additional tax.

Mr. McKELLAR. There is an additional tax.

Mr. BAILEY. So the Senator proposes to use the taxing power of the Congress to limit or to put a penalty upon salaries.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I think the Senators misunderstand each other. If the salary is over $50,000, under the amendment there is not an additional tax, but in that case the corporation is prevented from taking a deduction.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is prevented from taking a deduction. That is all the amendment does. That is what I have tried to explain. The corporation cannot take a deduction of more than $50,000 under those circumstances. At present we allow every corporation to deduct any salaries that it sees fit to pay its officers. We are not now dealing with taxes. We are dealing with deductions. We are dealing with allowances. We are dealing with gifts back to the corporation, exempting them from taxation. So while we are making these exemptions, all that this amendment proposes is to say to a corporation, "You cannot deduct more than $50,000 for any one salary."

Mr. BAILEY. Then the effect of the amendment is to use the taxing power to compel or induce a corporation not to pay any salary in excess of $50,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. We do not say that.

Mr. BAILEY. I know we do not say it, but what difference does it make what we say? If we do not say it, but that is what we intend, I want the statement to appear in the RECORD that that is what is intended.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is not what I intend. What I intend, and what will happen if the amendment shall be adopted, is that the deduction allowed for salaries shall be limited to a certain sum.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It is notorious that some combinations have sought methods of increasing their expenditures in order to avoid the payment of fair income taxes. It seems to me it is perfectly proper to define the amount of salary that may be used as a deduction in the ascertainment of income taxes.

Suppose, for instance, that in order to avoid the payment of a tax a corporation should pay a salary of half a million dollars, or a salary of a million dollars, and thus defeat the Government's collection of a tax. I think manifestly that would be unfair. It does not seem to me it is a wrongful exercise of jurisdiction for the Congress to say what is a fair deduction; and certainly it is liberal to say that a salary of $50,000 may be deducted.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Arkansas is entirely right. In my judgment, he has expressed the matter absolutely accurately. It is not a case of using the taxing power, but merely of saying what shall be a reasonable compensation. Here is what the bill says, on page 19, may be deducted:

Including a reasonable allowance for salaries.

That is the wording of this bill, "including a reasonable allowance for salaries." The tax authorities—the Secretary of the Treasury, or those under him—fix what is a reasonable allowance for salaries. Surely the Congress, in passing the law, can fix what shall be a reasonable allowance for salaries; and this amendment says that $50,000 shall be a maximum reasonable allowance for salaries.

Mr. BAILEY. And the amendment permits deductions for salaries up to that point. It will not permit the deduction of more. Is that the point?

Mr. McKELLAR. That is the point.

Mr. BAILEY. And the amendment determines, by way of a revenue measure, what the Congress conceives to be a fair salary for a corporate officer, and places a penalty upon the payment of more by the corporation. Is not that the fact?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; the amendment does not place a penalty upon the payment of more.

Mr. BAILEY. The intention is to induce the corporation to limit its salaries to $50,000?

Mr. McKELLAR. The purpose of the amendment is to show that the Congress believes that a reasonable allowance for salary is $50,000.

Mr. BAILEY. Not only to show that it believes it, but to put a penalty upon the payment of more.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; it puts a limitation on the deduction that is to be allowed.

Mr. BAILEY. And a tax upon anything over and above $50,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Suppose that provision were not put in the bill at all. The corporations would be obliged to pay the tax on the entire $3,138,000,000, because that would be included in their returns, and they would have no allowance for salaries. This amendment limits the allowance for salaries, and nothing else.

Mr. BAILEY. I understand that. I think the Senator has sufficiently informed the Senate that the purpose, after all, is to limit salaries by way of imposing a penalty in the form of taxation upon the corporation—that is, by way of not giving it credit for salaries beyond $50,000, and taxing the difference between $50,000 and more than $50,000 at the rate of 13¾ percent. That answers my question.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. I think the Senator from Tennessee has a perfectly legitimate object in mind, but I think the adoption of this amendment would defeat its purpose so far as revenue to the Government is concerned. In other words, the Senator from Tennessee does not like to have these high salaries deducted from corporate incomes and whatever is paid in excess of $50,000, as the Senator from North Carolina says, would be taxed at 13¾ percent. Assuming that the corporation, in order not to have to pay 13¾ percent on the excess, cuts the salaries down to $50,000, then the Government loses the surtaxes on the high salaries.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The surtaxes that the individuals would pay?

Mr. COUZENS. Yes; and the Government would lose.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes. As a matter of fact, if an enormous salary were paid to an individual by a corporation, while the corporation would escape tax through the deduction, the individual to whom it was paid would pay still more.

Mr. McKELLAR. Provided the Government collected it. My recollection is that the most famous, or infamous, of all the salary allowances was to one Mitchell. I do not remember his first name. I will call him Mr. Mitchell, as the jury acquitted him. The Government has a suit against Mr. Mitchell in which I understand he has offered 10 percent of the amount claimed as his just income tax.

I believe that if we limit the amount of salaries, we will thwart efforts to get around the income tax law. I hope the chairman of the committee will take the amendment to conference and work it out.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, the opportunity for evasion in a case like the Mitchell case has been taken away by the provisions of the pending bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. In what way?

Mr. COUZENS. In the Mitchell case, his large salary was offset by deducting capital losses. We have eliminated the right of deduction for capital losses.

Mr. McKELLAR. Most of it.

Mr. COUZENS. So that they cannot deduct capital losses from normal income. Let me illustrate. If the Senator's amendment should bring a corporation to the view that it must cut a million-dollar salary down to $50,000, then the corporation itself would pay a 13¾-percent tax on the difference, but if we permit them to go ahead and pay the million-dollar salary, the individual recipient pays $570,000 to the Government. So the Senator would be defeating his object of getting revenue for the Government if his amendment should be agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan means that if the provision eliminating the privilege of deducting capital losses as it has been incorporated in the bill should be enacted and go into effect, the evil would be cured?

Mr. COUZENS. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. But under the old conditions there was much evasion?

Mr. COUZENS. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think there is much evasion now. I hope the Senator from Mississippi will accept the amendment and let it go to conference.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, if the individual officer does not receive his $1,000,000 salary by reason of the reduction to $50,000, is it not a fair assumption that the difference will be declared in dividends, and that taxes will be paid on those dividends in the hands of the individual recipients?

Mr. COUZENS. The point as to that is that it would depend upon the individual recipient's bracket. If he were in the lower bracket, the Government would get a small return, but if he were in the larger bracket it would receive a larger amount.

Mr. MURPHY. A tax would be paid?

Mr. COUZENS. Oh, yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. It would depend on how small the dividend was. If the dividends were divided among a great number there might be no return at all. It would depend on whether or not the recipient had enough of an income to be taxable.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, does the Senator's amendment contemplate any tax on bonuses?

Mr. McKELLAR. On any bonus payment or compensation of any kind.

Mr. MURPHY. The amendment provides that bonuses and salaries shall not exceed $50,000?

Mr. McKELLAR. That is correct.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, this matter received consideration in the committee, and so that Senators may be informed that it received consideration at the hands of the subcommittee of the Committee on Ways and Means, I desire to read from the report of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, as follows:

> Your subcommittee debated at length the advisability of limiting the amount of the deduction allowed to a corporation on account of salary or other compensation received by any officer of the corporation. The numerous examples of excessive officers' salaries brought to light during the past year were not overlooked.
> It appears that, while some desirable purpose might be accomplished from the limitation mentioned, no gain in revenue could be expected. On the contrary, if lower officers' salaries were actually paid, a loss in revenue would result. This comes about because high salaries bear not only the normal tax but heavy surtaxes, while distributions in dividends would bear no normal tax and on account of the spread of the amount distributed among all the stockholders would bear less surtax in the aggregate.
> In view of the above, your subcommittee refrains from making a recommendation on this subject.

This carries out the suggestion just made by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, it seems to me that the trouble about that is that money would be divided up in the hands of individuals and we would not get the taxes. All we have to do is to look at the individual income-tax returns in order to see that the Government does not get these individual taxes.

Mr. MURPHY. As I understand, the Senator is seeking to accomplish a social end through an amendment to a tax measure.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; I am undertaking to prevent men from evading income-tax payments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I know just how the Senator from Tennessee feels, but we always have a sense of righteousness when we have done the best we can to accomplish an end.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not think the Senate wants the Government to obtain any really substantial return from income taxes.

Mr. COPELAND. We have to bear in mind that virtue is its own reward.

I desire to ask the chairman of the committee whether he will accept with any degree of kindliness an amendment to strike from the tax on jewelry the particular charge made against marine glasses, field glasses, and binoculars.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not offer the amendment now because there are some other important committee amendments to be acted on. While there are one or two cases in the jewelry section which appeal to me greatly, of which this is one, I hope the Senator's amendment will not be offered at this particular time.

Mr. COPELAND. Let me say, Mr. President, that if there is the slightest hope that this amendment may ultimately be favorably acted upon, I shall refrain from offering it now.

Mr. HARRISON. I hope that we may take a recess at this time.

DISPOSITION OF INDIAN LANDS

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. RUSSELL in the chair) laid before the Senate a message of the House of Representatives returning to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (S. 1135) to amend section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide for determining the heirs of deceased Indians, for the disposition and sale of allotments of deceased Indians, for the leasing of allotments, and for other purposes", approved June 25, 1910, as amended.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, a few days ago I asked unanimous consent to have returned from the House, Senate bill 1135. The Senate bill had passed the Senate and was sent to the House. In the meantime an identical House bill had been passed by the House and was later passed by the Senate. The Senate bill has been returned to the Senate, in compliance with my request. I now ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill 1135 was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the votes are reconsidered.

Mr. FRAZIER. I now move that the Senate bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

RELIEF AND WELFARE OF INDIANS

" State ", to insert " or Territory ", and on page 2, after line 20, to insert, "Sec. 5. That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the State of Oklahoma."

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, while I do not understand the reason for the last amendment, and while I should prefer that it should not have been inserted in the bill, nevertheless, I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

BENEFITS EXTENDED TO THE WHALING INDUSTRY

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S.J.Res. 15) extending to the whaling industry certain benefits granted under section 11 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, which were to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That in the administration of section 11 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, as amended (U.S.C., supp. VII, title 46, sec. 870), the Secretary of Commerce is authorized to extend to citizens of the United States engaged in the whaling and/or fishing industries the same benefits that are authorized by such section, as amended, to be extended to persons citizens of the United States for the construction, outfitting, equipment, reconditioning, remodeling, and improvement of certain vessels. All loans made under authority of this resolution from the construction loan fund created by such section, as amended, shall be on the same terms and subject to the same conditions, limitations, and restrictions as are provided therein, except that such loans shall bear interest at the rate of not less than 5¼ percent per annum, payable annually.

SEC. 2. Any construction, outfitting, equipment, reconditioning, remodeling, or improvement of vessels under authority of this resolution shall be only of vessels of a type and kind suitable for use as naval auxiliaries, and shall be in accordance with plans and specifications first approved by the Secretary of the Navy with particular reference to the economical conversion of such vessels into auxiliary naval vessels.

SEC. 3. The term " citizens of the United States ", as used in this resolution, includes a corporation, partnership, or association only if it is a citizen of the United States within the meaning of section 2 of the Shpping Act, 1916, as amended (U.S.C., title 46, sec. 802).

And to amend the title so as to read: "Joint resolution extending to the whaling and fishing industries certain benefits granted under section 11 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, as amended."

Mr. McNARY. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2545) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River at or near Astoria, Oreg., which was, on page 1, line 9, after " 1934 ", to insert ", and said act is hereby amended by striking out the words 'J. C. Tenbrook, as mayor of Astoria, Oreg.', wherever they appear in said act and by inserting in lieu thereof the following: 'The County Court of Clatsop County, Oreg.': Provided, That the Rivers Improvement Corporation (an Oregon corporation), assignee of the right to build such bridge under such act, and organized solely to construct such bridge for the public, shall contract to transfer such bridge upon the liquidation of all costs or obligations with respect to the construction thereof to the county of Clatsop (Oreg.), city of Astoria (Oreg.), and/or Pacific County (Wash.) as may be agreed among them, without profit to said Rivers Improvement Corporation and without cost to such public bodies, in such manner as will not involve such public bodies as the holder or owner of any stock in any association, joint-stock company, or corporation."

Mr. McNARY. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, APRIL 9, 1934

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal and ever-merciful God, we are not safe in our own wisdom, in our own virtues, nor in any power in us but in Thy guardianship and in the plenitude of Thy love and mercy. We confess Thy sovereignty and invoke Thy presence. Heavenly Father, open the doors of our understanding and give light and direction to the highest forms of our moral sense. Help us to see the luster of those graces that will bring us into fellowship with Thee. Hear us, gracious God; discharge any malign elements that may be in our thought, subdue the old nature, and bring into ascendancy the new man. O mold our characters by the invisible touches. Holy Spirit, incite us, equip us, and make us eager to go forward and to follow on to know Thy will and serve our country. In quiet submission to Thee, let there come to each of us a sweet calm, which bears in its bosom a new life, a new hope, and a new strength for this day. In the holy name of our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, April 5, 1934, was read and approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following date the President approved and signed bills of the House of the following titles:

On April 7, 1934:

H.R. 7478. An act to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act so as to include cattle and other products as basic agricultural commodities, and for other purposes; and

H.R. 7513. An act making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 326) entitled "An act referring the claims of the Turtle Mountain Band or Bands of Chippewa Indians of North Dakota to the Court of Claims for adjudication and settlement", requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. ASHURST, Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, and Mr. FRAZIER to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2999) entitled "An act to guarantee the bonds of the Home Owners' Corporation, to amend the Home Owners' Loan Act, and for other purposes", requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. BULKLEY, Mr. BARKLEY, and Mr. TOWNSEND to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 8617. An act making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes.

OGEECHEE RIVER FLOOD CONTROL

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill introduced by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PARKER], H.R. 7793, authorizing a preliminary examination of the Ogeechee River in the State of Georgia, with a view to controlling of floods, which was no. 94 on the Consent Calendar on April 5 last, and to which three objections were interposed on that day, be restored to the Consent Calendar as of date April 5, 1934, with but one objection interposed thereto, made on March 5, 1934.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this sets a new precedent in the House, and I shall be forced to object. This is the first time that has ever been requested to be done.

H.R. 6533

Mr. SWANK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the bill H.R. 6533, and to insert recommendations that have been made in connection therewith.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SWANK. Mr. Speaker, on January 8, 1934, I introduced H.R. 6533, a bill to promote education, relieve unemployment and economic distress, and for other purposes. I also spoke in support of the bill in the House and before the Committee on Education. Briefly, this bill provides that the public schools are a proper subject for Federal aid and that the Government should protect its public-school system and the teachers thereof by providing appropriations to assist such schools to maintain their regular school terms.

The bill also provides that all teachers' salary warrants regularly issued, between July 1, 1932, and July 1, 1934, for services actually rendered by teachers in teaching in the public schools, shall be eligible for loans by the Government at their full face value at not to exceed 1-percent interest per annum.

Since the introduction of this and similar bills the amount of Federal funds allocated to Oklahoma for public-school work has been increased, and we are going to keep up the work for the assistance of public education.

THE WAY OF TRUTH, THE WAY OF INDEPENDENCE

Mr. GUEVARA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a statement issued by my colleague the Resident Commissioner from the Philippine Islands, Mr. OSIAS.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from the Philippine Islands?

There was no objection.

Mr. GUEVARA. Mr. Speaker, under permission granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the statement issued by my colleague, the Resident Commissioner from the Philippines [Mr. OSIAS] upon his arrival in Manila on March 5 of this year.

To the Filipino people to whom I owe my first loyalty and have pledged my best service, I, as your public servant, hereby express my greetings at once respectful and cordial.

As the supreme arbiters in a matter affecting our national fate and liberty, the sovereign people are entitled to know the truth regarding the status of our struggle for independence at the Washington sector. It is my purpose to present the facts and the truth.

The American Government and people are informed of our passionate desire and substantial unity as a people on the fundamental issue that the early grant of independence to the Philippines is the proper solution of American-Filipino relations. They are likewise informed that on the Hare-Hawes-Cutting law there are two camps of thought in our country: one, composed of those who decided to decline to accept the law and work for amendments to the congressional enactment or for a new independence legislation; the other, consisting of those who favor the acceptance of the independence act without thereby relinquishing the people's right subsequently to petition for desirable modification or improvement.

It is my duty to report to the people that in Washington the temper of Congress and of the administration is not favorable to new independence legislation at this present session of Congress, but it is favorable to the extension of time by 9 months or a revival of the Hare-Hawes-Cutting law.

Let the following facts suffice for the present to prove this statement.

On January 23, 1934, the Senate Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs met and after discussion and deliberation announced their decision plainly and unequivocally in the following terms:

"1. That there will be no new Philippine legislation in reference to ultimate independence at this session of Congress. However, it was the sense of the committee that the Hawes-Cutting bill would be amended in one particular only, and that is to extend the time of the bill, which was January 17, 1934, when the Philippine Legislature must move to carry out its provisions to October 17, 1934, and that no other changes in the Hawes-Cutting bill will be considered.

"2. Under the Hawes-Cutting bill passed last year the Philippine Legislature was required if it desired independence to take action prior to January 17, 1934. This the legislature refused to do one way or the other, and consequently the Philippine people have had no opportunity to accept or reject the Hawes-Cutting bill.

"3. As the elections to the Philippine Legislature are to be held this coming June, and as the last legislature did not act on the Hawes-Cutting bill at all, it was the sense of the committee that an extension of time to give the new legislature a chance on it was fair and the only action the committee would take to alter or consider alterations to the general subject matter.

"4. Therefore, it is the committee's desire to give the Filipinos one more chance to accept or reject the Hawes-Cutting bill; if after the new elections the legislature again fails to take action or acts adversely upon the provisions of the Hawes-Cutting bill, it will be notice to Congress that the people of the Philippines do not desire independence and desire to continue with their present status.

"5. It is the overwhelming opinion of Congress that the Hawes-Cutting bill is the fairest bill to both nations which can be passed; and if the Filipino people do not want it, no better bill can be written and passed.

"6. It should be recalled that President Roosevelt in his last campaign, on two occasions, stated he favored the Hawes-Cutting bill and that this statement of the President makes the above observations complete as far as the two branches of Congress dealing with it have to do."

Senator TYDINGS said the committee's action was final, and that it placed determination of their destiny squarely before the Philippine people.

"Congress retains an open mind about modification of the Hawes-Cutting bill at some future period."

He declared:

"However, we must first know if the Filipinos want independence. Perhaps in a few years it will be found some of the provisions of the bill are unfair either to the Philippines or to the United States; in that case Congress would have no objection to consider the objections, with a possibility of modifying the measure if it be deemed advisable."

Mr. TYDINGS, in announcing the committee's action, said it emphatically represented his personal views as well.

This committee decision bears repeating because certain comments previously made on it were obviously based upon a lack of full knowledge of the entire statement and the really friendly sentiment that prompted its issuance.

I say the decision was reached out of friendliness to the Philippine people both from my personal knowledge of and contact with members of the committee and from the nature of the decision itself. The people will please note that in this decision the Senate committee seeks to give the Filipino people another opportunity to decide for themselves their independence and destiny and the assurance once the law is accepted that Congress would be open-minded for the consideration of such objections as may appear reasonable and just.

It is well to bear in mind that in the Senate Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs under the chairmanship of Senator MILLARD E. TYDINGS, of Maryland, there are Senators well known to Filipinos, including the minority leader, Senator CHARLES L. MCNARY, of Oregon, the Senate President pro tempore, Senator KEY PATMAN, of Nevada, and the majority leader, Senator JOSEPH T. ROBINSON, of Arkansas. Senators like those in the committee now and in the future have to be reckoned with in all important Philippine legislation.

So much for the Senate attitude. In the House of Representatives I can testify that the sentiment is favorable to the extension of the time limit and unfavorable to the consideration of new independence legislation. Representative MCDUFFIE, Chairman of the House Committee on Insular Affairs, favors time extension of the law deeming it perfectly reasonable for the Filipino people to have a referendum on the law.

Another extremely weighty consideration is that the executive branch of the American Government itself is not favorable to new legislation, but sympathetically disposed to reviving the Hare-Hawes-Cutting Law. Of course, I cannot and will not quote what the President of the United States told me at our conference, but it is perfectly proper for me to quote a public statement of Secretary of War Dern following the conference which was held at the White House on February 1, 1934, among President Roosevelt, Secretary Dern, and myself. Secretary Dern said, "I don't think the President is disposed to press any new legislation", adding that "the President would be willing to have the Hawes-Cutting Law revived."

Other evidences as to the temper of Congress and in Washington with respect to new Philippine independence legislation could be adduced, but just one more, the following self-explanatory letter of Speaker RAINEY, should be all that is necessary.

THE SPEAKER'S ROOMS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C. February 5, 1934.

Hon. CAMILO OSIAS,
Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR COMMISSIONER: I am sorry you are leaving, but I wish you every success.

Personally I was in favor of a shorter period, but as a practical proposition tell your people they better take the Hare-Hawes-Cutting law or they will not get another one. There will be no new independence legislation at this session of Congress.

After you have accepted the law passed by Congress you can come with a delegation for amendments and be assured of sympathetic consideration.

Very truly yours,

HENRY T. RAINEY.

The foregoing evidence should be more than sufficient not only to show the present temper of the Congress and the administration but to convince the Filipino people of the critical seriousness of our struggle for independence at Washington. That the revival of the Hare-Hawes-Cutting law or the extension of time is the way out of the present dilemma ought to be perfectly clear to all.

I present the truth and the facts in obedience to my consciousness of duty and my sense of responsibility. It must be the desire of every one that we as a people shall not in this crucial hour be led to take a step that shall alienate valued support in the Government at Washington and antagonize proven friends of independence in America who at present do and, for several years to come, will exercise not only a great influence but a determining influence on Philippine independence legislation.

It was in the face of the situation herein depicted that, with full knowledge of the consequences, I advocated extending the time limit by 9 months in the Congress of the United States. This I did on January 15, January 23, and again on January 31, 1934. I assume full responsibility for what I have said and done. I appear before the people to submit an account of my stewardship.

My solemn appeal to the Filipino people in the crucial day of decision is: Face the truth serenely and, with knowledge of the facts, act wisely and with decision.

I have faith in the people. I believe independence will yet be ours. But let us never forget: The way of deception is the way to slavery. The way of truth is the way to liberty.

REMOVAL OF FLEET FROM PACIFIC TO ATLANTIC WATERS

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute to discuss the removal of the fleet from the Pacific waters to the Atlantic waters at this time and its portent upon the history of this country.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Mr. Speaker, April 9 in the year of grace 1934 marks a date that may have great significance to the naturally peace-loving people of America. On this date both the combined Battle and Scouting Forces of our Navy will weigh anchor from the ports of San Diego, Los Angeles, the Golden Gate, Bremerton, Wash., and wherever any portion of that fleet is now located in the Pacific, and, joining together in one great fleet, will sail southward to the Panama Canal, through it, and into the Atlantic to spend, so we are told, the spring, summer, and early fall months on the Atlantic coast. If this were the end of the story, I might not protest what on the surface of things appears to be not only a pleasant but no doubt an instructive maneuver of our great fleet and its personnel. But there lurks in my mind, not the fear of immediate warfare, but a more than possible chance that, if not all, at least a great portion of this fleet might remain in the Atlantic waters, say, for the sake of argument, that segment of the fleet known as the "Scouting Force", or perhaps the Battle Force, in which event I have great misgivings for the present cordial relations of our country with Japan.

On January 23 of this year, during the consideration of the naval appropriation bill, I spoke briefly in protest of the removal at that time of our fleet from the Pacific waters.

Frequently there appear in the press statements emanating from Japan and her spokesmen that the peaceful Japanese resent the presence of our entire fleet in Pacific waters and that this situation is a source of great irritation to them. Of course, we should know at the outset that whatever sentiment has been built up in this regard is inspired by those in complete power and control in the Japanese body politic, because, as in most foreign countries, the press of Japan is carefully censored and supervised by its Government. Among the many compelling reasons why we should not undertake to remove our fleet at this time is the untoward state of international affairs confronting the diplomatic world. I pause for a moment to recount some of these recent events: Witness the invasion of Manchuria by Japanese forces; and even before the setting up of the puppet state of Manchukuo on February 24, 1933, the League of Nations Assembly adopted the report of the Committee of Nineteen, commonly known as the "Lytton report", which, of course, condemned the Japanese conflict in Manchuria, and thereupon the Japanese Imperial Government formally withdrew its membership from the League of Nations. If the nations of the world, particularly members of the League of Nations, are consistent in their attitude to the Sino-Japanese War and are guided by the Lytton report, we cannot hope for international friendly relationships with this new puppet state, and only after some face-saving formula will it be begrudgingly accepted in the family of nations.

It appears to me that the diplomatic tangle created by the Japanese invasion of Manchuria presents one of the world's most difficult international problems to solve. We must note besides that Japan gave notice of retirement from membership in the League of Nations, but at the same time retained those islands in the Pacific waters over which she was given a mandate by the League of Nations, and as the result of the treaty which parceled out to the various allied powers the German possessions in China and the Pacific Ocean.

It seems to me that while other countries possess some tangible international policy, the United States does not seem to have any such definite policy, with the exception of the Monroe Doctrine. Our policy is one of destiny, and we attempt to cope with international situations from time to time as they appear on the scene of action. It seems as though America, through the years since Admiral Perry first invited the Japanese to participate in friendly interchanges, and in exchanges of commerce as a member of the family of nations, has persistently done those things which by the Japanese mind are regarded as adverse to Japan's interests. The Japanese have not forgotten that President Theodore Roosevelt intervened during the Japanese-Russian War, resulting at Portsmouth in a treaty which they feel deprived them of some of the fruits which should have accrued to them as the result of their victory over Russia.

Again, at the time the Hawaiian group was annexed to the United States, the Japanese Government protested this move, and again we appeared to stand in opposition to their interests. When along the Pacific slopes of our country the States of the Pacific coast variously passed exclusion acts preventing the immigration of Japanese and forbidding such immigrants to possess the lands of those States, the Japanese were again offended by us. Even in recent years the Japanese have, through their diplomatic agencies, requested the State Department to lift the ban on Japanese immigrants to at least a quota basis. The circumstances surrounding these events and our course of conduct were clear and above reproach or condemnation, and underneath our actions in these matters that I refer to was the compelling motive of permanent peace.

It is very strange that the Washington Treaty, the Treaty of London, the so-called "10-power pact", the Kellogg-Briand agreement, all designed for fashioning a peaceful way of the Nation, should, so far as our policy in the Pacific waters is concerned, have proved quite otherwise. All these things seem to me to place us in opposition to Japanese political and economic thought. It will be more than difficult for us to understand the reasons for the Japanese invasion of Manchuria, now Manchukuo, bringing under Japanese control a country as vast and perhaps as rich as the 48 States in these United States. We will never understand the Japanese landing their forces at the port of Shanghai and by dint of superior armies massacring tens of thousands of Chinese people, partly because China boycotted Japanese products.

At the time of my protest in the House of the removal of our fleet from Pacific waters, the House and Senate had not as yet passed the Philippine independence bill, which has now become a law, and so in the course of years we shall relinquish the Philippine Islands, as well as our naval and Army bases there, and return to the Philippine people their entire independence. Of course, there is no certainty of such independence, because these people, to my way of thinking, will fall naturally under the spell of influence of a great power and more particularly for commercial reasons. We have already begun in Congress to discriminate against the Philippine Islands in the matter of tariff quotas and excise taxes against their particular products, which naturally must be offensive to a people that we have nurtured so long; and as a consequence we must expect them to seek their markets in other quarters of the hemisphere, and the natural market for their products must be Japan.

What I have said so far must demonstrate beyond a reasonable doubt that inherently it will be difficult for Japan from her point of view to ever look complacently upon any move, no matter how well intended, the United States might make in the Pacific Ocean. The presence of our entire fleet has irked her. Our recognition of Russia has given her people some disquietude. Our recent passage of the Vinson Navy program bill has disappointed her. Our continual refusal to lift the immigration laws in her respect has chagrined her Government. We are certainly living in very ticklish times, and yet who would agree that we are not perfectly within our rights on the score of all these points that seem to be irritable to Japan? We certainly should be permitted to build our fleet up to treaty strength, as she has. We certainly have a right to see who should enter our confines as immigrants, as she has. We certainly have a right to permit any part of or all our fleet to ride upon the waves on the Pacific coast, as she has.

But unfortunately, destiny seems determined that all these things work against the friendly diplomatic relationship of Japan with us. How much better it would have been to have permitted our fleet to remain in status quo on the Pacific coast, as many of these other problems I have mentioned will remain in status quo, say until after the London Naval Conference, scheduled for December 1936, in which conference it will be expected that Japan will make additional demands of parity in tonnage, because, of course, she has now additional territory in Manchuria that must be defended and its integrity must be maintained, and then a fresh and new friendly understanding may be hoped for.

Approaching the nub of the situation, once our fleet is in Atlantic waters, the Japanese diplomat would be unmindful of his duty if he did not make overtures to our State Department, requesting that the entire fleet should not be returned to the Pacific waters; and, if not the entire fleet, that it should be divided, and perhaps the scouting force should remain in Atlantic waters, returning only the battle force to the Pacific coast, or vice versa.

Let us continue to lead the way to international peace and harmony; and I am certain that the best agent for this international peace and harmony is the maintenance of a treaty strength navy, and that such a navy should be located at the sensitive points on this globe, where all writers agree that destiny is directing toward a possible conflict, which God forbid; for if an adequate navy is the medicine for sustained peace, the doctor would advise to spread the salve at the sore place. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present.

Mr. BYRNS. Will the gentleman withhold that until I make a request?

Mr. BLANTON. I will withhold the point of order.

PRIVATE CALENDAR

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the close of the session on Wednesday it may be in order for the House to take a recess until 7:30 p.m. for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar unobjected to, beginning, of course, at the star.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS]?

Mr. TRUAX. Reserving the right to object, the last night session we had to consider the Private Calendar, there were some twenty-odd Members on the floor when we started. There are some of us who should like to attend the night session and we cannot be present on Wednesday night. I ask our distinguished leader, the gentleman from Tennessee, that he make his request for either Tuesday or Thursday night.

Mr. BYRNS. There is objection to Tuesday night because there are a number of Members who, I understand, will probably not be here until Wednesday. Those with whom I have talked seemed to think that Wednesday night would probably be most suitable. I was hoping possibly, that, if we proceeded with some dispatch on Wednesday night, we could meet on Thursday night also. I think we ought to get rid of that Private Calendar.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not see why we should not meet on both Wednesday and Thursday nights. I hope the gentleman will modify his request to ask that we first take up bills on the calendar unobjected to, which there is a chance to pass finally.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. How are we going to segregate them?

Mr. BLANTON. Bridge bills, for instance, and bills to refer matters to the Court of Claims.

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman from Texas understood my request applied to the Private Calendar and not to the Consent Calendar?

Mr. BLANTON. I thought with two night sessions we could take them both up.

Mr. BYRNS. I trust the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX] will permit this request to be granted, because I agree with the gentleman from Texas that if the House is willing we ought to have a session on Thursday night also, because we are drawing near the close of this session.

Mr. BLANTON. There are a number of jurisdictional bills on the calendar, which seek to send matters to the Court of Claims for hearing and adjudication.

There has never been much objection to that procedure, giving parties a chance to be heard in court. Unless a bill contained some outrageous proposal, I have never objected to a bill permitting people to go to the Court of Claims. Why could we not take up those bills first and dispose of them?

Mr. BYRNS. I am perfectly willing to do that, but there are gentlemen who have bills on this Private Calendar who do not like to have their bills dislodged.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman tell us whether he has a full program for each day of this week?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes; it is expected that today will probably be consumed by the District Committee; that on tomorrow we will take up the rule making in order the bill relative to the use of public lands in the West for grazing purposes. Then it is expected that the District of Columbia appropriation bill will be reported tomorrow; and the hope is to take that bill up as soon as this other bill is disposed of. That will probably consume most of the week, depending entirely, of course, upon the amount of general debate there may be.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

There was no objection.

HEIRS OF DECEASED INDIANS

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following request from the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 1135) to amend section 1 of the act entitled 'An act to provide for determining the heirs of deceased Indians, for the disposition and sale of allotments of deceased Indians, for the leasing of allotments, and for other purposes', approved June 25, 1910, as amended."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request will be granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, there was one bill on the District Calendar today about which there was a good deal of controversy. An agreement has been reached about this bill and the time it is to come up; so I withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what was the bill; will the gentleman tell the House?

Mr. BLANTON. The matter has been disposed of by amicable agreement with the committee.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The matter has not been disposed of; nobody has made a request yet.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, everything in which I was interested has been disposed of by an understanding with the committee.

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WOOD] is recognized for 30 minutes.

NATIONAL RECOVERY ACT

Mr. WOOD of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, as we are now nearing the first anniversary of the National Recovery Act, I think it is well for us to take stock of the happenings and the attitude of various groups and organizations with respect to cooperating with the President and the administration in the attempt to carry out successfully the purpose and intent of the National Recovery Act and of the recovery program in general.

It is well remembered by the Members of this House that when the National Recovery Act was before this Congress the Manufacturers' Association, who represent the 1 percent of the population which owns 60 percent of the wealth of this Nation, exerted their every influence to defeat that legislation. So concerned were they about the defeat of the National Recovery Act that they called a convention, or a conference, which was held in Washington a few weeks prior to the time the bill came back from the Senate after it had passed the House.

There has never been a measure presented to this House that received more combined opposition from the organized employers than the National Recovery Act, but when the act was finally adopted and made effective these groups were the first to take advantage of sections 3, 4, 5, and 6, having to do with codes of fair competition and the protection of the trade associations. Section 3 (c) directs and empowers the United States Attorney General to proceed against any group or any individual member of an industry which seeks to violate the codes of fair competition as set up by the National Recovery Act, to prevent them through restraint from violating the provisions of sections 3, 4, 5, and 6.

Section 7 (a) of title I of the act has to do with the right of men and women to join organizations of their own choosing. This provision was embodied in the act to insure that the workers of this Nation would be protected in their right to join organizations of their own choosing.

Since the operation of the law—and I am sure since its very inception—there has been a deep-laid plot to forestall the success of the National Recovery Act, especially with respect to section 7 (a) of title I, by these organized employers, who have protection under the law in sections 3, 4, 5, and 6, which relax the Sherman antitrust law and make it possible for them to enter into agreements and codes of fair competition. They have, indeed, been protected from ruinous competition, from the sweatshop competition with which they were beset for the past 4 or 5 years.

When it comes to the protection of the wage earner in the way of an organization of their own choosing, the law has not been enforced as it should have been. There has been some insidious propaganda widely circulated in past months by certain vested interests which not only seek to prevent the successful operation of the National Recovery Act but seek also to leave a vicious impression with the general public as to the make-up of the great labor movement of this Nation. The steel barons and automotive barons have come to this Capitol by the hundreds. They and their sharp, keen, astute corporation lawyers are seeking to brand the labor movement as disloyal, as a group of radical, un-American citizens, and as a group of Reds. In a hearing the other day before the Senate Labor Committee, when that committee had up for consideration the Wagner-Connery bill, there appeared representatives of the United States Steel Corporation and their subsidiary, the Weirton Steel Co. Along with them came one of their pets, one of these upstanding free-born American citizens, who said he represented the company union of the Weirton Steel Co. In his testimony before the Labor Committee, he sought to leave the impression that all representatives sent by the National Labor Board to adjudicate the difficulty or attempt to adjudicate it were Reds and radicals. The metropolitan press were quick to headline this in the following manner: "Labor Board radicalism charged." I do not think anyone will ever charge the Code Authority of the National Recovery Act or the Labor Board with redicalism.

In an issue of the Washington Herald of April 7 there is carried a reprint from the Saturday Evening Post which attacks not only the National Recovery Act but almost every act of the present administration and of the President himself in the attempt that has been made toward national recovery. They are pleading and crying for free press. They are complaining that the press is being hampered.

These same journals and periodicals, as we all know, have been the recipients of from sixty to eighty million dollars annually from the Postal Department in the form of subsidies. Yes; I say they are in favor of free speech as long as the Government gives their periodicals free transportation upon the railroads. In other words, this Government has carried the newspapers and periodicals of this Nation for sixty to eighty million dollars less annually than the cost of transportation.

Recent statements made by Members on the floor of this House would naturally lead some to believe, if the people were to believe what the gentlemen have said, that labor is unappreciative, that it is unpatriotic, and that it has no concern for anyone else but itself. We would be led to believe by the assertions of some gentlemen that labor is a selfish group, concerned with no one except itself. A great deal has been said upon the floor of this House about communism. A great many Members of the House are very much exercised about communism. It was charged the other day by a "Moses" of Gary, Ind., Dr. Wirt, that there were radicals in the so-called "brain trust", the men who are the advisers of President Roosevelt. Dr. Wirt would lead us to believe that they are fomenting the red fires of revolution, that it was their design to turn this Government over to a soviet system of government.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Missouri. Just for a moment.

Mr. RICH. We are having an investigation of that matter tomorrow. Probably it might throw a little light on the subject to which the gentleman is referring.

Mr. WOOD of Missouri. This Congress has appointed a committee, and I voted for the appointment of the committee, to investigate these charges. I, as one Member of the Congress, want to run down all such irresponsible statements that might be made by anyone, and I hope that the committee will sift this thing to its very depths. I believe that when they do, they will find that such utterances as have been made by Dr. Wirt are fostered by the 1 percent of the population of this Nation who own 60 percent of the wealth. [Applause.] They want to lead the people to believe that this present administration is honeycombed with radicalism. They are the first ones to accept any benefits that may flow from the deliberations of this Congress, and they have always been the first to oppose any type of substantial legislation which had for its purpose the benefit and protection of the great mass of the people. They are now opposing the Wagner-Connery amendment to the National Recovery Act. They are opposing the stock-exchange bill, the so-called "Fletcher-Rayburn bill." They have their bloodhounds in the Senate opposing any raise in income taxes, excess-profits taxes, or inheritance taxes.

There are two ways that the people of this Nation must be fed. One way is through the pay envelop, and the other is through taxation. I have a prepared speech which I do not think I will have time to make. I want to hurry on just as rapidly as I can, because of the fact that some assertions on the floor of the House, not many, have been misleading, and it would seem as though some would lay the failure in wage settlements or the adjustment of the codes with references to wages, hours, and working conditions at the door, absolutely, of the organized labor movement.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] made certain unfounded charges against the American Federation of Labor on the floor of this House, March 20. I was not present at the time; but in a perusal of his remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I find that he accused the American Federation of Labor of a deliberate attempt to involve the Nation in a strike by criminally attempting to persuade and influence 250,000 auto workers to leave their jobs and stir up strife and animosity, and branded the American Federation of Labor as a selfish group which seeks to ignore and disregard the Nation's welfare.

For the past 15 years the gentleman from Texas has made similar unfounded assertions in the onslaughts he has made upon the American Federation of Labor from time to time upon the floor of this House whenever he felt so inspired or ordained. His unwarranted attacks have had little, if any, effect upon the regular, normal progress of the labor movement.

The great threatened strike which the gentleman from Texas was so exercised about is now a matter of history, as the settlement has been made, and this settlement was largely due to the fine spirit of cooperation and patriotism of the American Federation of Labor and the intelligent, calm, and deliberate judgment of Mr. William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, and the committee of 15 loyal American citizens who represented the auto workers' union, which made that settlement possible.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield, since he has mentioned me by name?

Mr. WOOD of Missouri. Yes; I yield for a moment.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman spoke of the gentleman from Texas having been here 15 years. He is here by the grace of the votes of workers. If I did not get a large percent of the vote of the workers in my district, I could not be here; and if the American Federation of Labor had pulled off this strike just now, does not the gentleman think they would have been guilty of disloyalty to the country?

Mr. WOOD of Missouri. If the gentleman can lead the people in his district to think it is best to send him to Congress, that is all right.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, they are pretty intelligent people. The district is full of colleges and universities.

Mr. WOOD of Missouri. In view of the unprecedented crisis through which our Nation is passing, it is well to pause for a few moments and partially analyze just what part the American Federation of Labor has taken, since its inception, in every crisis through which our Nation has passed. Of course, time will not permit a thorough analyzation of all of its patriotic acts in the various stages of stress through which our Nation has passed. I desire, however, to touch a few high points in passing.

No better test can be shown which revealed the patriotism of the membership of the American labor movement and their undying devotion to the cause of American institutions than when our country entered the great world conflagration in 1917. The great labor movement of this Nation responded to a man. Woodrow Wilson, then President of the United States, called into conference for council and advice Samuel Gompers, then president of the American Federation of Labor, and William Green, who was then secretary of the United Mine Workers of America, and other leaders of the labor movement.

So well did the leaders of the American labor movement and its members perform their duty as patriotic citizens that when the war closed President Wilson appeared in person before the convention of the American Federation of Labor and expressed his personal and the Nation's gratitude to the delegates for their splendid and patriotic cooperation and devotion to the cause of the Nation.

In 1915, when the American Federation of Labor Building, which stands upon Ninth Street and Massachusetts Avenue N.W., was dedicated, President Woodrow Wilson personally participated in the dedication ceremonies of this magnificent structure.

There stands a monument in Triangular Park, Massachusetts Avenue and Tenth Street NW., in the very shadows of the dome of this Capitol Building, which was erected to the memory of that great statesman, Samuel Gompers, founder of the American Federation of Labor, and who as its president guided the destinies of that organization for nearly a half century. In the unveiling ceremonies of this memorial monument, which occurred on October 7, 1933, the President of the United States, the Honorable Franklin D. Roosevelt, appeared in person and delivered a glowing tribute to the lifetime of patriotic service to the cause of humanity, to the statesmanship and patriotism of the immortal Samuel Gompers.

I challenge any Member of this House to visit the beautiful memorial on Massachusetts Avenue and Tenth Street NW., erected by the friends and citizens of this Nation to the memory of Samuel Gompers, and after reading the inscriptions thereon—words spoken by this great leader and statesman—return to the floor of this House and say that the American Federation of Labor desires to drive this Nation with a mailed fist. Those words of Gompers were selected from his many utterances of wisdom as exemplifying the spirit of the great American labor movement.

This is the man whose patriotism and motives have on so many occasions been questioned by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

The gentleman from Texas still seems to be seeing things as he did some 14 years ago—in 1920—when our Nation was yet in the throes of war hysteria and the great corporate interests, which he is trying to protect, were trying to destroy the labor movement by taking advantage of a condition where many people were easily moved to believe there was a hidden enemy within our midst that was awaiting an opportunity, through seditious acts, to destroy our American institutions.

These same corporate interests, who are today waging a desperate battle to deprive the workers of their right to organize into a union of their own choosing, caused to be introduced into the Congress a dozen or more antisedition bills which, if they had been enacted into law, would have declared the participation in a strike, which was termed an uprising, as an act of disloyalty and sedition.

Samuel Gompers, the former president of the American Federation of Labor, whom he persistently attacked from the floor of this House, has passed to his reward, and the gentleman from Texas still seems to be in the best of health, and it is my fervent hope that the Almighty, in His infinite wisdom, will decree that he will live long enough to clear the cobwebs from his vision that he may fully realize what a great, unselfish, humanitarian movement is the American Federation of Labor, headed by that fearless leader and statesman, President William Green.

While the many thousands of our boys were across the waters making the supreme sacrifice, some of these selfsame powerful motor and steel corporations were on this side of the briny deep safely protected by the American flag and were nervously engaged in garnering millions and billions in profits and dividends at the expense of the energy, toil, and sacrifice of the families of the wage earners who were enrolled in service in the great World War and at the expense of the very lifeblood of the flower of the manhood of the Nation who were left under the sod of France.

When the war was over the several million wage earners came back home with nothing of the world's goods, carrying the scars of battle and the devastating effects of poison gas and the empty promises of a job given them by many of these greedy corporation dollar-a-year patriots. Many thousands of these very veterans and their children who are employed by the automotive and steel corporations were a party to the recent controversy which emanated solely from a flat refusal by the executives of these powerful automotive corporations to allow their employees to join an organization of their own choosing, and their flat refusal to deal with their employees in collective bargaining through their chosen representatives, in accordance with the provisions of section 7a of the National Recovery Act—the law of the land.

It is certain that whatever of strike or turmoil that might have emanated from a failure to reach an agreement in the automotive controversy, the burden of blame for its consequences would be upon the shoulders of the managers of these great automotive corporations whose policies have always been a dictatorial refusal to allow their employees any vestige of the right of organization.

The gentleman from Texas says he believes that workers who do not want to join a union have the inherent right not to join. There is no disagreement between us on this sound principle of free government. These powerful automotive corporations, against whom the gentleman has no criticism, have been compelling their workers to join company unions whether they wanted to or not, by penalizing them with the loss of their job if they refused to join these company-owned and company-managed unions, which are nothing more or less than mutual admiration societies and a pawn in the hand of the employer to prevent freedom of action among the workers and their right to join a union of their own choosing.

Among the more than 300 codes of fair competition that have been approved, there have been thousands of violations on the part of employers, both large and small.

An army of code authority officials are now busily engaged from morning until night each and every day hearing the grievances of many thousands of wage earners who are covered by a permanent code in their industry and who are being deprived of their right of organization through the violation by their employers of section 7 (a) of the National Recovery Act. There are incidents in my own State where certain industries who have been dealing through collective bargaining with a number of their employees for 25 or more years, and who are now refusing to deal in any manner through collective bargaining with other of their employees who have recently formed bona fide labor organizations. Also hundreds of incidents can be cited where representatives of the employer and employee were called in to Washington and after a hearing of their difficulties, have agreed with the National Labor Board, over their signatures, to go back home and enter into negotiations through collective bargaining, when it was found that after arriving home the employers have immediately violated their agreement which was signed under direction of the National Labor Board.

Betrayal after betrayal on the part of the employers has piled up to a staggering figure, and it is indeed remarkable that the continuance of betrayals and antagonism to the provisions of section 7 (a) of the National Recovery Act has not elicited thousands of strikes throughout the United States, and it is an everlasting tribute to the intelligent leadership of the American labor movement and the splendid discipline, loyalty, and devotion of the wage earners to the President of the United States in his heroic effort to bring about order and peace out of chaos through the administration of the National Recovery Act that the number of strikes has been vastly below normal.

During the crisis of 1931 and 1932, when our country was smoldering with unrest, with 15,000,000 of wage earners permanently unemployed, 30,000,000 people—men, women, and defenseless little children—were without the means of a livelihood, except from the hand of charity, and when 30,000,000 farmers were in bankruptcy, due to the fact that they were unable to secure a sufficient price for their products to cover even the bare cost of production, and when intense misery, suffering, starvation, and despair were stalking the Nation, it was the American Federation of Labor that kept the old Ship of State in a steady, normal course, and by their organization activities and fine discipline were largely responsible for the unorganized of the Nation standing up under the terrific strain. How far, oh, how far, does the gentleman from Texas want us to go?

The gentleman from Texas seems to want to leave the erroneous impression that the American Federation of Labor is attempting to force wage earners to join a union of the American Federation of Labor. The principle involved, upon which all of the labor controversies and threatened strikes are now based is whether men will be accorded the free and unhampered right to join a labor union of their own choosing and not be compelled, through threats, intimidation, or coercion to remain a member of a company union.

The best evidence of the truthfulness of this statement is a copy of a letter I hold in my hand that was sent to every member of the company union of the Missouri Pacific Railroad, known as the "Missouri Pacific Mechanical Department Association", by the accredited system representatives of this company union, which has been in existence since the loss of the strike of the railway shopmen's organizations upon that system in 1922, which I now desire the privilege of reading, as follows:

[From the Labor Herald, Kansas City, Mo., Friday, Mar. 23, 1934]

THEY SEE THEIR MISTAKE—THE MISSOURI PACIFIC SHOPMEN PART COMPANY WITH THE COMPANY UNION—THIS FORM OF ORGANIZATION CONDEMNED AS BEING INIMICABLE TO HARMONIOUS RELATIONS BETWEEN THE EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE

The officers of the Missouri Pacific Mechanical Department Association, with headquarters at St. Louis—more familiarly known as "company union"—have sent out the following letter to the mechanical department employees of the Missouri Pacific system:

For many months great numbers of employees in the mechanical department of the Missouri Pacific Railroad have evidenced a desire to merge the Missouri Pacific Mechanical Department Association into standard labor unions affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, and since the trustees in bankruptcy, Mr. Baldwin and Mr. Thompson, issued the order that employees were free to do as they please, there has been a virtual stampede of mechanical department employees into the standard labor organizations.

The law gives employees the right to join the labor organization of their choice. During the past 10 days we have covered the system and our check-up discloses that a vast majority of shopcraft employees are now members of the standard American Federation of Labor organizations and on every hand we have been asked for advice and urged to cooperate in changing the form of our organization into A. F. of L. standard labor organizations.

At most of the main shops more than 95 percent of the employees who were members of the Missouri Pacific Mechanical Department Association are now members of the A. F. of L. organization. Under these circumstances the Missouri Pacific Mechanical Department Association is wholly impotent to represent or to protect the rights of the individual employee.

We believe that the day of the company union of American railroads has passed. The President of the United States, the Congress of the United States, the Federal Coordinator of Transportation, the Director of National Industrial Recovery, and many other right-thinking men and women have condemned the company union as being inimicable to harmonious relations between employer and employee.

Bills now pending in the Congress of the United States will, if enacted into law, completely destroy the last vestige of company unions. You can no longer maintain the Missouri Pacific Mechanical Department Association in the face of such opposition. We have given careful study to the entire situation and must take our stand on the side of labor.

We therefore recommend that all members and former members of the Missouri Pacific Mechanical Department Association immediately file their application for membership in their respective shop-craft standard American Federation of Labor labor unions. This is your legal right and under present conditions your moral duty. It is the essential step to the maintenance of peace and harmony on the system—the protection of our contractual arrangements with our employer, the orderly transfer of our activities to the Nation-wide labor organizations, and to promote and maintain proper relations between the employers and employees, as well as to promote the best interest of the Missouri Pacific Railroad Co.

With these matters in mind, we have joined with the great majority of the mechanical department employees and are now members of our standard craft of American Federation of Labor organizations.

We feel that this was the proper step for us to take as complying with the expressed desire of the vast majority of the membership and we are promulgating this statement in order that all mechanical department employees may be fully advised.

Sincerely yours,

A. B. JORDAN,
General Chairman System Board.
R. E. CLINE,
General Secretary-Treasurer.
J. H. SMITH,
General Chairman Boilermakers.
J. C. DAMRILL,
General Chairman Sheet Metal Workers,
Acting General Chairman Blacksmiths.
J. J. BYRNE,
General Chairman Carmen.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 10 additional minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I shall not object, but since the gentleman has mentioned me I shall ask for 5 minutes, when the gentleman concludes, in order to reply to him.

Mr. WOOD of Missouri. I shall be glad for the gentleman to have the time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. If the gentleman will permit, I should like to ask him if the letter the gentleman just read is signed by Mr. Baldwin.

Mr. WOOD of Missouri. It is not signed by Mr. Baldwin. He signed the order which was posted on the property and which permitted the men to join the union of their choice, and this letter is signed by the system representatives of this company union, A. B. Jordan, general chairman system board; R. E. Cline, general secretary-treasurer, and so forth.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I may say for the benefit of Members who do not know him that Mr. Baldwin is considered one of the ablest railway executives in the United States.

Mr. WOOD of Missouri. He certainly is. The gentleman is quite right.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. And he has certainly written a most remarkable letter in favor of the right of the employees of that system to select an organization of their own choosing, and every Member of Congress ought to read this letter written by such a railway executive as Mr. Baldwin.

Mr. WOOD of Missouri. The letter was not signed by Mr. Baldwin. It emanated from an order issued by Mr. Baldwin and Mr. Thompson, receivers. It is evident that Mr. Baldwin is one of the many railway executives who seem to be inclined to follow the law of the land, and he has notified his employees that they have the right to join a labor organization.

There is contained in this letter a real and frank admission on the part of the officials of this company union on the Missouri Pacific Railway system that company unions are not only impotent to represent the best interests of its members but it also reveals the fact that at the very first inkling the wage earners who are members of company unions had that they could transfer their membership from the company union to a bona fide labor organization under the American Federation of Labor without fear of the loss of their jobs, there was a veritable stampede into the bona fide recognized organizations of the American Federation of Labor, even before the officials of the organization realized that there was such a wholesale pulling away from the company union.

The prompt action of these members of the Missouri Pacific company union to join a bona fide labor union at the first opportunity is symbolic of what will happen to every other company-owned and company-managed union when the members thereof are sure that they will be protected in freedom of action to join a union of their own choosing, free of intimidation and coercion on the part of their employer.

The bank moratorium, one of the first official acts of President Franklin D. Roosevelt, was nothing more nor less in its effect than a strike, which caused the complete closing down of an entire Nation-wide industry and paralyzed for the moment the medium of exchange of the Nation in order that a new and more permanent and substantial financial structure could be established.

The gentleman from Texas or any other right-thinking man surely does not criticize the President and the Congress for this move, which was so essential to the revamping of our financial structure. Our Nation was faced with an emergency, and drastic action was absolutely necessary, and we were indeed fortunate to have a man in the White House who had the courage to assume the responsibility of the bank moratorium, although it was a shock to the Nation which never before has been experienced in our history.

No one can question the high motives or wisdom of the people of the great State of Texas for striking against Mexico and joining up with a more progressive and democratic Nation after they had become organized and were dissatisfied and rebelled against the despotic rule.

The splendid settlement of the automotive controversy was secured because the people of our Nation cherished freedom of the right to quit their jobs either singly or in concert.

I grant to the gentleman from Texas that he knows something about what the cotton growers want because he comes from that section. I voted with the gentleman for the Bankhead bill, although I questioned seriously its advisability. But if the farmers in Texas desire a law that will compel them to serve a prison sentence for working and raising more cotton than the acreage they are allotted, that is the business of the cotton growers and I am willing for them to have exactly what they want, or at least what they think they want, that will best protect them.

There is now a petition upon the Speaker's desk which provides for discharge of the committee from consideration of the Frazier-Lemke bill. I signed that petition early in the session because the farmers' organizations throughout the Nation want this legislation, and if given the opportunity I will vote for the Frazier-Lemke bill not only because I believe it is right and will give the farmers real farm relief, but because the farmers of the Nation are demanding it, and they, better than any other, know what is best for them, and I am willing to do my part to see that they get it at the hands of this Congress.

While I grant that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] probably knows what the cotton growers want, as I also grant that the farmers of this Nation likewise know what they want in the way of real farm relief, in view of my 30 years' active service in the labor movement, which has afforded me intimate knowledge of the problems, loyalty, and patriotism of not only the organized but the unorganized, I hope the gentleman will also grant that I know something about the trials, tribulations, and struggles of the great labor movement as represented by the American Federation of Labor, and its hopes, desires, and aspirations.

Never has there been a more unselfish, humane, and Christian movement than that represented by William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor.

The amicable settlement of the automotive controversy and threatened strike again reveals the loyalty, patriotism, and devotion of the 5,000,000 members of the American Federation of Labor and the peerless leadership of William Green, its president.

The American Federation of Labor is not at all alarmed or concerned about the periodic mouthings of the gentleman from Texas, but it will continue onward and upward in the even tenor of its own way, spreading whatever light, enjoyment, and freedom that is within its power to the toiling millions of this Nation, and it will continue to give its undivided cooperation and loyal and patriotic support to the greatest statesman and humanitarian in all history, the Honorable Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States, in his courageous and heroic effort for national recovery. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes to reply to the gentleman from Missouri.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the speech we have just listened to clearly exemplifies the fact that labor leaders do become intolerant and full of bias and prejudice, and are absolutely unable to view public problems from the standpoint of the whole people. For 20 years our good friend from Missouri served as President of the Missouri State Federation of Labor, during which time he attended every session of the Missouri General Assembly, sponsoring labor legislation. He has been the national legislative representative of the United Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees and sponsored legislation in the interest of railway employees during the World War. His mind has been specially trained in certain grooves to protect the interests of a certain class. He speaks for the organized worker. I speak not only for the worker who is organized, but also for the worker who is unorganized, and in the interest of the whole 120,000,000 American people.

I am as old as our friend from Missouri in fighting for the rights of men who toil for their daily bread. But I fight for them only when they are right. Be they right or wrong our friend from Missouri fights for them. I am for them only when their cause is just. Our friend from Missouri is for them regardless.

Because I have had the courage to stand on this floor and criticize certain improper demands of certain autocratic labor leaders during my service in this House, my friend from Missouri is so intolerant as to refer to same as "periodic mouthings" and then make the unfounded charge that same was in the interest of organized capital.

I have never in my whole life represented organized capital in any capacity. As a lawyer I did not represent corporation. I always represented the "under dog." I represented the citizen. My life's fight has been against combines and monopolies. I have never had any patience with domineering, dictatorial, autocratic, strong-arm combines that attempt to control business, or legislatures, or the Government. And when professional labor leaders indulge in their periodic mouthings, I have never hesitated to answer them.

So that what I said may not be misinterpreted, I quote it verbatim from the RECORD, page 4931, of March 20, 1934, to wit:

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I feel that somebody should denounce the deliberate attempt on the part of the American Federation of Labor to involve this Nation in a strike that is inexcusable, is unpatriotic, and is unthinkable. It is almost criminal to persuade and influence 250,000 well-paid, well-cared-for, satisfied heads of families to leave their jobs, stir up strife and animosity, and bring suffering on their wives and little children.

This is no time for strikes. This is no time for trouble makers. This is no time for agitators and walking delegates. This is no time for selfish groups to ignore and disregard the Nation's welfare and the best interests of the American people as a whole.

The President of the United States has done much for labor. In the interest of men who work, our President has disorganized every business in the United States and taken same from the private conduct and control of owners and reorganized same along national lines to benefit labor. Every business in the United States has made sacrifices. These sacrifices were to benefit labor. It was a costly change for business. Labor was the beneficiary. Has it no gratitude? Does not labor appreciate what the President has done for it? Does it now want to harass the President? Is the American Federation of Labor willing to throw monkey wrenches into the Nation's machinery? Is it willing to clog everything up? Is it willing to be disloyal?

This Congress has appropriated billions of dollars to help labor. It has fed the unemployed. Congress has housed millions of laborers without jobs. Congress has clothed the wives and children of laborers who could not find work. Congress has created work that laborers should not be idle.

Is not the American Federation of Labor grateful? Has not it any appreciation? Does it not realize that it owes something to society? Is it altogether selfish? Just why is it not willing to go along with the President and lend him a helping hand?

The press this morning brings us the almost unbelievable information that all of these 250,000 workers are well paid, with their wages increased more than 50 percent during the last year, and in many cases higher than they were in 1929; that their hours have been shortened to an annual average of 36 hours per week; and that practically all of these 250,000 workers are well satisfied, yet that the American Federation of Labor is seeking to make a card from one of its unions the sole condition of employment and insisting that it shall receive about $6,000,000 in union dues taken out of the employees' salaries and paid direct to unions by employers.

I believe in organization. I believe that every worker has the right to join a union. I believe that union workers have the right of collective bargaining. I am sympathetic with all of the trials and troubles of men who labor. I want to see their conditions bettered in every possible way.

At the same time, I believe that workers who do not want to join a union have the inherent right not to join. And I believe that an American business man has the right to run his business ununionized if he wants to, and to employ men who are not unionized, if he can find them, and if they are satisfied to work for him. And I do not believe that the American Federation of Labor has any right whatever to interfere and to break up a friendly business relation existing between employer and employees, when all are perfectly satisfied and content.

Stirring up strife and trouble now is disloyal to the President. It is disloyal to the Nation. It is putting the selfishness of a group above the interest of the Nation. It is letting the tail wag the dog. It is saying that less than 5,000,000 organized into a group are more important than the unorganized 115,000,000 people of the United States.

It is the duty of the American Federation of Labor to work in harmony with the President. It is its duty to show some gratitude. It is its duty to show some appreciation. It is its duty to put country above group. It is its duty to abandon greed and selfishness. It is its duty to go along with the Government in its efforts to bring about a recovery and bring about better conditions, and I am not in sympathy with this selfish stand taken by the American Federation of Labor.

The American Federation of Labor ought to call off this strike. They ought to admonish these men that this is no time to strike; that this is no time to take men out of good employment and put them on the streets. This is a time to uplift rather than break down; this is a time to back the President; this is a time to back the Congress; this is a time to stand firm for the Government and show loyalty to the Commander in Chief of this Nation. [Applause.]

Our friend from Missouri calls the above "mouthings." I will leave it to the American people if what I said does not constitute good American philosophy and good Democratic doctrine. I want the American people to point out any sentence in what I said that is un-American. I repeat that this is no time for strikes. This is no time for trouble makers. This is no time for agitators and walking delegates. This is no time for selfish groups to ignore and disregard the Nation's welfare and the best interests of the American people as a whole.

Following my speech on March 20, 1934, as quoted above, I received several hundred letters from workers in motor plants endorsing every word I said, and asserting that they were well paid, and were perfectly satisfied, but that the American Federation of Labor was trying to force them and their employers to agree to its dictation against their will, and to require dues to the extent of about $6,000,000 to be taken out of their wages and paid by their employers direct to the unions affiliated with the said American Federation of Labor.

Of course, every professional labor leader firmly believes that the American Federation of Labor has the right to make the demands that it has been making, and that all employers who will not bow down and accept its will are void of conscience and should be compelled to allow the American Federation of Labor to run their businesses.

No man in this Congress is more sympathetic than I am toward organized labor, when it is right, or more appreciative of the splendid work accomplished for labor by Samuel Gompers during his lifetime. I have fought for decent wages. I have fought for decent hours. I have fought for decent working conditions. I have fought for decent living conditions. I have fought for American standard of living. But when organized labor has made unjust demands I have not hesitated to oppose same.

The gentleman from Missouri spoke of some of the fights I have made from this floor on labor matters, and called them "periodic mouthings." Let me mention some of them. When John B. Densmore was Director General of Employment, and was spending money like water out in California trying to manufacture testimony for the noted anarchist and bomb thrower, Tom Mooney, and burglarized the office of District Attorney Fickert, and criminally installed in it a secret dictaphone, and tried to frame court officials in the interests of said murderous anarchist, and then tried to get from this Congress an additional $10,000,000 to use in such nefarious undertaking, I stopped him. By making proper points of order, and waging a fight from this floor against his $10,000,000 proposed appropriation, I defeated same on three different occasions, and kept him from wasting this $10,000,000. Was my action un-American? Was not I acting for the best interests of the American people? By passing a resolution of inquiry I forced the Secretary of Labor to furnish the secret report made to him by John B. Densmore, and caused the same to be published in a House document, copies of which are still available in the House document room, if the supply there has not been exhausted. I have my copy in my office and will show it to any colleague interested.

I did wage an uncompromising fight here to get the American Federation of Labor to rid itself of such anarchists as William Z. Foster, whose infamous red book on syndicalism I read from this floor, and I showed conclusively that William Z. Foster was not only trying to undermine the Government but was also boring from within, and was trying to undermine and destroy the American Federation of Labor. At that time William Z. Foster was an honored official of the American Federation of Labor and high up in its councils, and because I denounced his methods I was then designated as unfriendly to labor, and put on labor's blacklist, when just the opposite was true, and history which has since transpired has proven that I was a loyal friend to labor when I denounced William Z. Foster, for within a few years thereafter the American Federation of Labor expelled him from its membership, and has at all times since refused to affiliate with or to have anything to do with William Z. Foster.

Mr. DINGELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry that I cannot. I regret that I have not the time. Otherwise I would gladly yield. I must reply fully to the speech made by our good friend from Missouri.

Mr. Speaker, although I differed with him on some occasions, and did not hesitate to oppose him when he was wrong, though in doing so I knew that I was taking my political life in my hands, I had great admiration for the many fine qualities possessed by Samuel Gompers. He was a great labor leader. He had a wonderful insight in human nature. He was absolutely fearless. He was a magnificent organizer. There will never be another Samuel Gompers.

Once, Mr. Speaker, when he came to my office and demanded that I change my position on a bill and threatened me with defeat if I did not, I told him to "go to h—", and in the succeeding primary he demonstrated his political influence, for he almost defeated me. He published whole-page advertisements over his own signature against me in the newspapers of my district. And I always will believe that after he failed in his efforts to defeat me he had much greater respect for me thereafter, for he seemed more friendly than ever. To dislike him was impossible. His nature and personality commanded the esteem of everyone who knew him well.

During the World War there were 6,000 strikes by organized labor against the Government. Men who were getting $30 a day in shipyards struck against the Government. Railroad employees forced Director McAdoo to give them increases of $764,000,000 and date it back 6 months. I warned them then that the time would come when they would see train after train without a passenger on it, with railroad business wrecked, and no demand for their services, and there would be thousands of them losing their jobs. That day has come.

It is true that when President Wilson sent for some of us and said, "Strikes are ruining the Government; they are giving comfort and aid to the German Kaiser; I cannot carry on this war with these strikes", he asked us to pass what he then designated as the "work-or-fight" amendment.

Mr. WOOD of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment. I shall be glad to yield.

When they had exempted many thousands of workers from the draft and had granted to the worker the right not to fight, but to stay here at home and work and had exempted him from the draft, they refused to work, and strike after strike occurred, until some workers were receiving $30 per day. There were 6,000 strikes against the Government. The work-or-fight amendment provided that if he did not work, they could take his exemption away from him and make him fight. At the instance of the President, our Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, I took this floor one day and made a speech against these repeated strikes and in behalf of his work-or-fight amendment. I spoke for it, and I helped to pass it in this House, but it was finally killed.

Was not that a proper amendment to the Draft Act? When our country was engaged in deadly conflict across the seas, and there was an act drafting every able-bodied man between certain ages to don uniforms and fight, and certain workers, aided and backed by the American Federation of Labor, got exempted and excused from the draft in order to work, and notwithstanding they were receiving many times what the soldiers in France received, they engaged in strike after strike against the Government, was it not right and proper that their exemptions should be taken away from them and they should be made to fight?

Yet, after said "work-or-fight amendment" had been passed by this House, organized labor, backed by the American Federation of Labor, threatened to march on this Capitol and on the White House, and through such threats finally prevented such amendment from being passed into law. And in the succeeding election Senator Thomas, who introduced such amendment, was defeated by organized labor, the American Federation of Labor waging a special fight against him.

Is my friend from Missouri in favor of that amendment—men who have been exempted from fighting in order to work, and who will not work, make them fight? Is the gentleman in favor of it? President Wilson asked for it, and I helped him to pass it here in this House.

Mr. WOOD of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I will yield in a few minutes. Then during the war when the international telegraphers threatened to strike and to tie up every means of communication, President Wilson sent word to us here that it would absolutely ruin him in winning the war. They threatened to tie up every cable, every telegraph, every telephone, and every radio, and the President said if that strike came off he could not win the war.

I took the floor and I said that if the telegraphers pulled off that international strike that they would be traitors to their country, for they would be lending aid and comfort to our foreign enemies, and I received through the mails every kind of threat imaginable.

Mr. WOOD of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. WOOD of Missouri. Does the gentleman believe that President Wilson would have appeared after the war before the American Federation of Labor and thanked them for their loyalty and devotion during the war if there had been anything done by the labor movement to prevent the winning of the war?

Mr. BLANTON. That was in behalf of the great labor movement nationally. Many members of organized labor refused to strike.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have 1 minute more in order that I may ask him a question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Does the gentleman realize that during the war employers and corporations charged the Government 300- and 400-percent profit on their contracts?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; and I fought them then, and have been fighting them every since trying to drive them out of the country into the deep blue sea for all of such practices.

Mr. WOOD of Missouri. I should like to ask the gentleman from Texas what men were getting $30 a day?

Mr. BLANTON. Experts and skilled mechanics in shipyards and other works. I know a few men from my district, who had never gotten more than $2.50 a day theretofore, were getting $30 a day when some of these strikes were pulled off.

Mr. WOOD of Missouri. Not members of the American Federation of Labor.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes; they were forced to be unionized whether they liked it or not; and when the strike order came they had to obey it. They told me all about it after the war and said they did not want to strike and were perfectly satisfied, but they were forced to strike.

In conclusion, in order to keep the record straight and to let the American people know just what this strike is all about, I want to quote from what United States Senator LOGAN, of Kentucky, published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on March 24, 1934; and I quote same from page 5300, as follows, to wit:

The process of recovery has so far taken place because of the cooperation of both capital and labor to that end. So long as a balance was kept by give-and-take, mutual sacrifice, and mutual cooperation, this has continued.

Now the American Federation of Labor attempts to leap into the saddle forcibly with a demand for complete union control of the Nation's busiest industry. The alternative is a strike of vast proportions that would tie up the one business that has led the way toward recovery in the last 4 months.

Hundreds of thousands of satisfied workmen, who desire only to be left alone to support their families, do their work, and enjoy life, would thus be thrown out of employment. The effects of the strike would be felt by millions of people employed in dozens of industries. This includes steel, the continued production of which is so vital to recovery here in Ashland.

The point at issue is not one of hours, nor of wages, but of ultimate control of the industry itself. The American Federation of Labor insists upon complete unionization of the automobile business, with a general strike as the alternative. The automobile manufacturers refuse to yield control of the business which they have built and developed to paid union executives who did not build nor develop it.

On the top of this danger is the threat of the Wagner bill in the Senate, which would make unionization imperative in all American industry. This would be done by legislative mandate and would force the country's 40,000,000 workers into union membership whether they desired it or not.

Just at a time when recovery seemed to be an accomplished fact the leaders of the American Federation of Labor decide to get all the workers of the Nation into their paying membership, or to tear down the whole fabric of recovery with general strikes if their demands are not met. Further to cinch their absolute rule over the Nation's industry, they seek to force through Congress the Wagner bill, which would legalize and perpetuate their control.

The Nation has gone along with the new deal and accepted and adopted with zeal many principles and formulas emanating from the halls of Columbia University and totally foreign to American ideals of freedom without question or quibble. But unless the swing to communism is halted somewhere within the range of reasonable ideas of justice and liberty the Nation itself will balk. We are not ready for a dictatorship or radical and self-seeking walking delegates any more than we were willing to stand for a dictatorship of the power of wealth and entrenched privilege, such as brought us to our fall 4 years ago.

Fair hours to admit a maximum of employment, fair compensation for labor to give all a living wage with something over, the right of workers to bargain collectively, the elimination of cutthroat competition, all these are worthy ends, at least partially achieved. Complete dictatorship over privately owned industry by the American Federation of Labor is another thing entirely. Its leaders did not build it and are not equipped to rule it, either by training or by ability.

I have just received the information that the Hudson Motor Co. has been forced to shut down its plant because of strikes, letting 18,000 employees out of work, and that 5,600 employees of the Motor Products Co. had been called out on strike. And here is what has just come over the wire:

The fuse burned short on the motor industry's explosive labor situation today as the two major unions of automobile workers both repudiated President Roosevelt's automotive arbitration board.

The mutually hostile unions—the American Federation of Labor and the Mechanics Educational Society—joined in denouncing the arbitration board appointed by President Roosevelt when he averted a strike 2 weeks ago.

It will be a sad day for the American Federation of Labor if it permits these strikes at this time and cripples industry and takes these heads of families from gainful employment and put them on the streets. The American people are patient and long-suffering. But they will not have any sympathy for any strike in this crisis. William Green and his American Federation of Labor must not undo all that was accomplished for labor by Samuel Gompers.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H.R. 8471, the War Department appropriation bill for 1935, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Is that agreeable to the other members of the committee?

Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi. Entirely.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi, Mr. PARKS, Mr. BLANTON, Mr. BOLTON, and Mr. POWERS.

VETERANS' REGULATIONS (H.DOC. NO. 299)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, and ordered printed.

To the Congress of the United States:

Pursuant to the provisions of section 20, title I, of the act entitled "An act to maintain the credit of the United States Government", approved March 20, 1933, I am transmitting herewith copies of Executive Orders No. 6668, Veterans' Regulation No. 1 (e), and No. 6669, Veterans' Regulation No. 12 (b), approved by me April 6, 1934.

These veterans' regulations have been issued in accordance with the terms of title 1, Public, No. 2, Seventy-third Congress. Executive Order No. 6661, Veterans' Regulation No. 1 (d), and Executive Order No. 6662, Veterans' Regulation No. 12 (a), contained provisions carrying out the purpose as expressed in my message of March 27, 1934, to the House of Representatives, returning without my approval H.R. 6663, entitled "An act making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes." The provisions of Public, No. 141, Seventy-third Congress, March 28, 1934, have gone far beyond the intent of these regulations. The regulations transmitted herewith are, therefore, for the purpose of canceling them.

CIVIL-SERVICE RETIREMENT ACT (H.DOC. NO. 298)

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments and ordered printed:

To the Congress:

Pursuant to the provisions of section 16 of the act of March 3, 1933 (ch. 212, 47 Stat. 1517), as amended by title III of the act of March 20, 1933 (ch. 3, 48 Stat. 16), I am herewith transmitting an Executive order transferring to the United States Civil Service Commission the duties, powers, and functions now vested in the Veterans' Administration pertaining to the administration of the Civil Service Retirement Act and the Canal Zone Retirement Act.

The administration of laws governing the retirement of civil employees of the Government is logically and properly a function of the Civil Service Commission, and the transfer effected by this order will permit a more efficient administration of the activities involved. The Director of the Bureau of the Budget has informed me that the transfer will result in an annual saving of approximately $45,000.

PASSAMAQUODDY FISHERIES COMMISSION (H.DOC. NO. 300)

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith the report made by the International Passamaquoddy Fisheries Commission, the American members of which were appointed according to an act of Congress approved June 9, 1930. The act authorized appropriations for an investigation jointly by the United States and Canada of the probable effects of proposed international developments to generate electric power from the movement of the tides in Passamaquoddy and Cobscook Bays on the fisheries of that region.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and empowered to sell and convey to the highest bidder, at public or private sale and at such time as in their opinion may be most advantageous to the District of Columbia, the old Potomac School property, known as lot 802 in square 327, containing 5,837 square feet of land, more or less, and the proceeds from such sale shall be deposited in the United States Treasury to the credit of the District of Columbia.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to give the District Commissioners authority to sell what is known as the old Potomac School property, situated in the wholesale market area of southwest Washington, which is no longer needed for school purposes. An identical bill was introduced in the Seventy-second Congress and passed the House and was favorably reported by the Senate District Committee. At that time hearings were held. There appeared to be no opposition to the bill.

I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BOUNDARIES OF WHITEHAVEN PARKWAY, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The SPEAKER. The gentlewoman from New Jersey calls up the bill S. 2509, which the Clerk will report.

SEC. 2. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to use for street and alley purposes the area comprised within the parcels designated "B", as shown on map filed in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia and numbered as map 1817; and the Director of National Parks, Buildings, and Reservations is authorized to make the necessary transfer of said land to the District of Columbia, same to be under the jurisdiction of the said Commissioners for street and alley purposes.

as provided herein, the land contained in said parcel shall be subject to assessment and taxation the same in all respects as other private property in the District of Columbia.

SEC. 4. That the surveyor of the District of Columbia is hereby authorized to prepare the necessary plat or plats showing the parcels of land to be transferred and dedicated in accordance with the provisions of this act, with certificates affixed thereon to be signed by the parties in interest making the necessary transfers and dedication, which plat or plats, after being signed by the various interested parties and officials, and approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, upon recommendation of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, shall be recorded upon order of said Commissioners in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia, and said plat or plats and certificates when so recorded shall constitute a legal dedication and legal transfers of the property described for the purposes designated according to the provisions of this act.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to make an exchange of lands between the National Capital parks and private individuals at Huidekoper Place and Whitehaven Parkway, to close a portion of this particular place and dedicate certain areas. This has the unanimous support of the District Commissioners and the Capital Park and Planning Commission.

ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGE CONTROL ACT

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H.R. 8854) to amend the District of Columbia Alcoholic Beverage Control Act by amending sections 11, 22, 23, and 24.

The SPEAKER. The gentlewoman from New Jersey calls up the bill H.R. 8854, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object for the purpose of asking the gentlewoman a question. This bill was sent to the committee by the District Commissioners?

Mrs. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And is approved by the District Commissioners?

Mrs. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And by the corporation counsel's office?

Mrs. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. PALMISANO. The only change in the law in this case is that it requires the placing of a stamp to make sure that the Commissioners will get the revenue.

Mr. BLANTON. Does this have the unanimous report of the Committee on the District of Columbia?

Mrs. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] does not raise any objection to this bill?

Mr. PATMAN. No.

Mr. BLANTON. I withdraw the reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 11, subsection (c), of the District of Columbia Alcoholic Beverage Control Act is amended by adding at the end of the first paragraph thereof the following: "It shall not authorize the sale of beverages to any other person except as may be provided by regulations promulgated by the Commissioners under this act."

SEC. 2. That section 22 of the said Alcoholic Beverage Control Act be amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph, to read as follows:

"(c) The Commissioners may at any time suspend or revoke in whole or in part the requirements of this section."

SEC. 3. That section 23 of the said Alcoholic Beverage Control Act is amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 23. (a) There shall be levied, collected, and paid on all of the following-named beverages manufactured by a holder of a manufacturer's license, and on all of the said beverages imported or brought into the District of Columbia by a holder of a wholesaler's or retailer's license, a tax at the following rates, to be paid by the licensee in the manner hereinafter provided:

"(c) Said taxes shall be collected and paid by the affixture of a stamp or stamps secured from the Collector of Taxes of the District of Columbia, denoting the payment of the amount of the tax imposed by this act, upon such beverage, such affixture to be upon the immediate container of the beverage, unless the Commissioners shall by regulation permit otherwise.

"(d) The Collector of Taxes of the District of Columbia shall furnish suitable stamps, to be prescribed by the Commissioners, denoting the payment of the taxes imposed by this act, and shall by the sale of such stamps at the amounts indicated on the faces thereof cause the said taxes to be collected.

"(e) Upon beverages manufactured in the District of Columbia by a manufacturer licensed under this act, the stamps required by this act shall be affixed before the removal of the beverage from the place of business or warehouse of the said manufacturer for delivery to a purchaser. Upon beverages except taxable light wines, imported or brought into the District of Columbia by any wholesaler licensed under this act, the stamps required by this act shall be affixed before the removal of the beverage from the place of business or warehouse of the said wholesaler for delivery to a purchaser; upon taxable light wines imported or brought into the District of Columbia by any wholesaler licensed under this act, the said stamps shall be affixed within 24 hours (excluding Sunday from the count) after the wines are received at the licensed premises of the wholesaler. Upon beverages purchased outside the District of Columbia by any retailer licensed under this act, the stamps required by this act shall be affixed within 24 hours (excluding Sunday from the count) after the beverage is received at the licensed premises of said retailer.

"(f) No person shall use or cause to be used for the payment of any tax imposed by this act a stamp or stamps already theretofore used for the payment of any such tax.

"(g) No tax shall be levied and collected on any alcohol exempt from tax under the laws of the United States, or on any alcohol sold for nonbeverage purposes by the holder of a manufacturer's or wholesaler's license, in accordance with the regulations promulgated by the Commissioners.

"(h) If any act of Congress shall hereafter prescribe for a Federal volume tax on alcoholic beverages under which a portion of said tax shall be returned to the District of Columbia, the taxes levied under this section shall not be collected after the effective date of said act.

"(i) The possession by any licensee of any beverage after its removal from the licensed premises of a manufacturer or wholesaler within the District of Columbia or after 24 hours (Sundays being excluded from the count) after its receipt from outside the District of Columbia, upon which the tax required has not been paid, shall render such beverage liable to seizure wherever found, and to forfeiture by the District of Columbia. And the absence of the proper stamps from any container (or wrapper if such be permitted) after the time at which the affixture of the stamp is required by this act shall be notice to all persons that the tax has not been paid thereon and shall be prima facie evidence of the nonpayment thereof. Such beverage so liable to forfeiture shall be proceeded against in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia by the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia, and, if condemned, the said beverage shall be disposed of by destruction or delivered for medicinal, mechanical, or scientific uses to any department or agency of the United States Government or the District of Columbia government or any hospital or other charitable institution in the District of Columbia, or sold at public auction, as the court may direct. The proceedings of such libel cases shall conform, as near as may be, to the proceedings in admiralty, and all such proceedings shall be at the suit of and in the name of the District of Columbia.

"(j) Any person who shall counterfeit or forge any stamp required by this act shall, upon conviction, be subject to a fine not exceeding $5,000 or to imprisonment for a period of not more than 2 years, or to both such fine and imprisonment."

SEC. 4. That section 24 of said Alcoholic Beverage Control Act is amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 24. (a) Every licensed manufacturer, wholesaler, and retailer under this act shall furnish the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia on the day this act becomes effective a statement under oath, on a form to be prescribed by the Commissioners, showing the amount and kind of taxable beverages held and possessed by him on the day this act becomes effective, and shall state the number and denomination of stamps necessary for the stamping of such beverages so held and possessed on said date, as required by this act.

"(b) All beverages held or possessed by any licensed manufacturer, wholesaler, and retailer under this act on the effective date of this act shall have the stamps affixed thereto as required by this act, but such stamps shall be furnished free and without cost to such licensee by the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia upon receipt by him of the statement under oath required by paragraph (a) of this section: Provided, however, That such licensee shall on or before the 10th day of the calendar month first occurring after the effective date of this act, file with the Board the statement under oath required under section 22, paragraphs (a) and (b) of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act for the District of Columbia as originally enacted and approved, and shall on or before the 15th day of the calendar month first occurring after the effective date of this act pay to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia all taxes imposed by section 23 of said act, as originally enacted and approved, on the beverages so reported as herein required."

SEC. 5. This act shall become effective on the 1st day of the calendar month first occurring after 30 days from the approval thereof.

Page 4, line 15, after the word "retailer", insert "and before said beverage is sold by such retailer."

The committee amendments were agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGE CONTROL ACT

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H.R. 8525) to amend the District of Columbia Alcoholic Beverage Control Act to permit the issuance of retailers' licenses of classes A and B in residential districts, and I ask unanimous consent that the same be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the lady from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first paragraph of section 15 of the District of Columbia Alcoholic Beverage Control Act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 15. No retailer's licenses except of classes A, B, or E shall be issued for any business conducted in a residential-use district as defined in the zoning regulations and shown in the official atlases of the Zoning Commission, except for a restaurant or tavern conducted in a hotel, apartment house, or club, and then only when the entrance to such restaurant or tavern is entirely inside of the hotel, apartment house, or club and no sign or display is visible from the outside of the building."

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the lady yield?

Mrs. NORTON. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I understand this bill permits drug stores license E?

Mrs. NORTON. No. This is the residential zone bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR. There was some question in the opinion of the District Commissioners whether or not there could be drug-store license E, retailer's license E, in these residential districts. I had some correspondence with the Commissioners. This bill clears up any question as to that. I have been in favor of drug stores, organized in residential districts, which have existed for some time, having retail license E, which permits them to sell liquor on prescriptions. This bill clears up any question about that matter?

Mrs. NORTON. The gentleman is quite right.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGE CONTROL ACT

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H.R. 8519) to amend sections 5, 9, and 12 and repeal section 36 of the District of Columbia Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, and I ask unanimous consent that the same be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the lady from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5 of the District of Columbia Alcoholic Beverage Control Act is amended by striking out the words "dealing, manufacturing, transporting, or storing" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "dealing in or manufacturing."

SEC. 2. Section 9 of such act is amended by striking out the word "individual" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "solicitor."

SEC. 3. Section 12 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 12. The holder of a manufacturer's or wholesaler's license issued hereunder shall not be entitled to hold any other class of license. No retailer's license class A or class B shall be issued or remain in force in respect of any premises for which a retailer's license class C or class D has been issued. A person, not licensed hereunder, owning an establishment for the manufacture of beverages located outside of the District of Columbia may hold one wholesale license and shall not be entitled to hold any other license."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 12, insert "Provided, That this section shall become effective 90 days after the approval of this act."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, this bill does two things which should not be permitted to be done. In the first place, it permits drug stores to sell liquor not only on prescription—which this House determined as the extent of their privilege, as it thought it did—in accordance of the formula of the United States Pharmacopœia, but this bill would permit them also to have another license, which would permit them to sell liquor for consumption off the premises. In other words, that is, they could sell any kind of liquor, and not only bonded liquor or liquor aged in wood. The bill permits them to sell any kind of liquor, whether it is good for public consumption or not.

It is with some reluctance that I discuss these liquor bills, but I assure you I do it in a noninterested sense, my only purpose being to protect the people of the District of Columbia, the consumers of the liquor. I never represented and never shall represent the makers or sellers of the stuff.

When the bill was passed, if you will recall, I offered an amendment on the floor that drug stores could sell only liquors which answered the prescription of the United States Pharmacopœia. That meant liquors aged in wood at least 4 years, because the doctors say any of this blended liquor is not fit for human consumption, especially when it is fed to infants or to people of advanced age; that it might even cause death.

It was found out, after the District bill passed, that the drug stores could have both a drug store's license and a retailer's license to sell liquor, whisky, and so forth, for consumption off the premises. I took up the matter with the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and pointed out to them that I believed that it was the intent of Congress that drug stores should be confined to selling liquor only on prescription, and the corporation counsel replied to me that we had overlooked one provision of the law, which permitted druggists to get both kinds of licenses.

This being the case, I should like an opportunity to offer an amendment on page 2, in line 7, in the sentence which reads:

No retailer's license class A or class B shall be issued or remain in force in respect of any premises for which a retailer's license class C or class D has been issued.

I should like to add the words "or class E", which is the drug-store license. I do not believe Congress wants drug stores selling all kinds of liquor for consumption off the premises. I do not believe you want to make rum shops out of drug stores.

I do not believe you want someone to go in with a prescription to a drug store and have the "doctor" say, "Why don't you buy this blended stuff"—rotten—"at half the price at which you could get the bonded stuff?" I do not believe you want that done in the District. I wish I could be permitted to offer an amendment on page 2, line 7, after the words "class D" to insert the words "or class E." The effect of that would be that the drug stores could only have one kind of a license, namely, to sell liquor on prescription within the definition of "liquor", under the United States Pharmacopœia.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Does this bill provide that liquor can be sold on the premises, and that it may be blended whisky?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. This is the camel's nose getting under the tent for further enlargement?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Surely.

Mr. BLANTON. My friend from New York knows that there is a certain effort being made in the District now to issue licenses to sell liquors in chain stores and in various other kind of stores.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Well, I am for that. I will tell the gentleman why I am for the chain stores selling liquor, because they will help to break the Whisky Trust. The only way you will break the Whisky Trust is to have the A. & P. stores and the other chain stores establish their own distilleries and sell the products, either at a loss or a profit.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. I am thinking particularly of the family that goes to the chain store on Saturday night with only $3 to spend. Instead of buying potatoes, rice, bread, butter, and milk, might they not spend that money some other way?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I hope they do not, and I hope nobody lets them spend it for the things they do not need.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Certainly.

Mrs. NORTON. The gentleman said he was in favor of chain stores selling liquor. Why discriminate against drug stores?

Mr. O'CONNOR. A drug store should be a drug store and not a rum shop.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. SEARS. A druggist took it up with me because I worked for 7 years in a drug store. They are now required to pay a druggist's license; they are required to pay a District license which permits them to sell any kind of liquor and display it. Am I to understand they are possibly to be called upon to pay another license? I am not clear on the matter.

Mr. O'CONNOR. It was never intended that they should have any license except a druggist's license.

Mr. SEARS. I agree with the gentleman that the drug stores should be exempt and that they should sell it for medicinal purposes only on a doctor's prescription, which they do now.

Mr. O'CONNOR. They do not have to do that now. This bill should be amended by inserting the clause "class E." This will confine the druggists to the sale of liquor on prescription, liquor which meets the standards of the United States Pharmacopœia.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The gentleman said that a drug store should be a drug store. The gentleman must realize that the modern drug store sells everything from lawn mowers to baseball bats.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That may be, but they have not yet been turned into rum shops.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. TRUAX. Does the gentleman mean to say—and I am asking this for information—that the drug stores are the only stores that are selling blended liquor today?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Oh, no. Another thing, this bill would permit the selling of blended liquor without stating the contents on the label.

Mr. TRUAX. But I should like to have my question answered.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Oh, no; most stores are selling blended liquor, I am sorry to say. I would prohibit it altogether.

Mr. TRUAX. All of them?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes. The drug stores are selling blended liquor on prescription in violation of law. The matter to which the gentleman refers will be taken care of in a later bill introduced by the gentleman from Peoria, Ill. [Mr. DIRKSEN], the representative of the greatest blended distilleries in America, who want the drug-store people to sell blended whisky on prescription, whisky that may kill infants and old people. We should defeat that bill.

Mr. TRUAX. Then is it the purpose of the gentleman by his amendment merely to eliminate the sale of blended liquor by drug stores?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes; but that comes up more specifically in a later bill.

I should like to see this bill amended so that a drug store can sell liquor only on prescription and that that liquor must conform to United States Pharmacopœia standards. That is what we thought we were doing when we passed the District of Columbia liquor control bill.

Mr. TRUAX. Does the gentleman mean to infer that the Peoria district produces nothing but blended whisky?

Mr. O'CONNOR. They produce nothing but blended whisky. They bring in wonderful bonded whisky from Canada, but they cut it 10, 12, or 20 times. They will not sell it bonded or aged in the wood. It is too precious to sell, so they cut it, as the bootleggers did.

Mr. TRUAX. Then, they must be counterfeiting their labels, because I saw a fifth the other night which was labeled "Straight bourbon whisky. Bottled in Peoria." Notice, if you please, I said, "I saw it."

Mr. O'CONNOR. But I would advise the gentleman against drinking it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The gentleman spoke of the Whisky Trust. Does not the gentleman think the best way to break the Whisky Trust would be to admit liquor from foreign countries free of duty?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am for that, and have consistently fought for it. I hope our Ways and Means Committee speedily brings in a bill repealing the tariff on whiskies.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will permit, I may say that I think the gentleman from New York is becoming a most valuable watchman on the tower.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I have been fighting a long time as hard as lies within my power to protect the public against rotten liquor, and against the breweries and the Whisky Trust. The gentleman from Texas and I do not differ much when it comes down to brass tacks. We are faced with the situation where the prohibition amendment has been repealed and we must protect the American people against the possible bad results of repeal.

Now, there are two things I should like to see done in this bill. I have talked about the first. The first is whether the committee will accept an amendment in line 7 adding the words "or class E." This would restrict drug stores to selling liquor on prescription.

I should like to know whether the committee feels so inclined. I do not think it was the intent of Congress to give to drug stores the right to sell all kinds of liquor promiscuously, and display it on their shelves. Here is what will happen: They will have blended liquors on their shelves; a person will come in with a prescription; by reason of the difference in price between bonded whisky and blended whisky they will try to influence that person to buy the blended whisky instead of the whisky they should get under the prescription. It is not right.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. With respect to this influence of which he speaks, may I ask the gentleman how many times he has been influenced by persuasive salesmen of drug stores to change from spiritous frumenti to blended whisky?

Mr. O'CONNOR. None, because I have never bought whisky, blended or straight, in a drug store. I think that's sneaky.

Mr. DIRKSEN. And how many instances are there like that?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. If the committee will not accept this amendment I think they will be acting contrary to the intent and purpose of Congress when it passed the District of Columbia liquor-control bill.

When I learned that drug stores were to get a license in addition to the ordinary druggists' license, I wrote the Commissioners on January 30 of this year as follows:

JANUARY 30, 1934.

COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
District Building, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIRS: It has been brought to my attention that some druggists in the District are proceeding on what they call an "interpretation" by someone allegedly representing your board, that druggists are eligible to receive retailer's licenses, class "A" and/or "B", under subsections (2) and (f) of section 11 of the District of Columbia Liquor Bill in addition to retailer's license, class "E" under subsection (i) of that section. In other words, their understanding is that not only may they receive a license to sell "beverages for medicinal purposes", and under the conditions prescribed in subsection (i) but they may also sell the beverages "for consumption off the premises" without prescription.

Permit me to point out respectfully to you that such was never the intent of Congress as evidenced by the debate in the House of Representatives during the consideration of the bill. By reason of the amendment offered by me to the effect that druggists could fill prescriptions for liquors only under the definitions of the U.S.P., and by the other debates, it was the clear understanding that druggists would be restricted to filling prescriptions within the limit of subsection (i). It was never intended that a drug store be turned into a liquor store where liquors might be sold for beverage purposes in addition to medicinal purposes—nor is there any need for the issuance of such licenses. The public will be able to get all the liquor it needs for beverage purposes from the liquor stores.

If you or your Board feel there is any doubt about the question which might compel you to issue these additional licenses to druggists, permit me to suggest that you propose certain amendments to clarify the act in addition to the amendments suggested in the report of the Attorney General under date of January 22, 1934.

Incidentally, if it be true that section 15 of the bill excludes all stores, including drug stores, from obtaining any retail licenses in any residential district, it should be changed so that drug stores in such a district may obtain a license under subsection (i), and possibly established grocery stores should be permitted to obtain a license under subsections (e) and (f).

Respectfully yours,

The acting corporation counsel answered me, and he agreed that what I said appeared to be the intent of Congress; but he pointed out that Congress overlooked a little provision in the law that licensees under sections (a), (b), (e), or (i) could also get licenses under another section. There was so much confusion about the numbers of the sections that we never noticed it at the time.

Mrs. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentlewoman from New Jersey.

Mrs. NORTON. May I say to the gentleman that we had the corporation counsel present when this bill was reported out of the committee, and it was entirely with his approval.

Mr. O'CONNOR. This particular bill?

Mrs. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That does not influence me at all. I am sorry the committee will not accept this amendment.

Here is the other vicious thing about the bill. This House by deliberate action and after thorough consideration practically unanimously compelled the labeling of all blended liquors. The amendment was introduced by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WEIDEMAN]. This present bill in its last provision now repeals section 36 of that act, the labeling provision. May I say, and I say this advisedly, that there is less law enforcement in the District of Columbia than in any community of the same proportions in the United States of America? We passed that law, and the authorities have never enforced it, and they do not intend to enforce the law. You cannot get Mr. Campbell, of the Pure Food and Drug Administration to enforce anything. For 6 months I have been trying to get him to enforce this law. Here is a provision, unanimously adopted by the House, that the bottle shall be labeled as to what is in it, and yet the last line of this bill repeals section 36 of that act. What can we do? If we cannot amend the bill, the only thing to do is to vote down the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. But the gentleman may offer an amendment.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I cannot offer an amendment without the permission of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman can do that now. He has the floor.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I did not get the floor for the purpose of offering an amendment, and I do not propose to take advantage of the courtesy of the lady.

Mr. BLANTON. Any Member here can offer an amendment to the bill. I am sure the gentlewoman from New Jersey would not have her bill wrecked by preventing the gentleman from New York offering these two salutary amendments, and I think they are salutary. I believe the House will back the gentleman from New York in this matter.

Mrs. NORTON. Does the gentleman know that section 36 was repealed at the express wish of the Attorney General? That such recommendation was contained in a communication from the President to the Congress?

Mr. O'CONNOR. No. I know what the gentlewoman means. Mr. Joseph H. Choate recommended it, not the President or the Attorney General.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended 5 minutes.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object. While I do not like to object, it is a fact that we have lost a considerable part of our day. We have a great many bills on the calendar and while I shall not object to this particular 5 minutes, I may protest against granting extensions of time during the rest of the afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Joseph H. Choate, head of the Federal Alcohol Board, now extinct, stated to the President that he was going to adopt some sort of a uniform label law. This has not been done, but will have to be done in each jurisdiction, State, or district of the United States. Striking out the labeling provision, in my opinion, permits the sale of blended liquor to people who are sick. One-year-old children are prescribed whisky in pneumonia cases. Ninety-nine-year-old people, I am told by doctors, will be killed if the whisky prescribed them is not aged in wood 4 years. There is no request from the Attorney General against the labeling provision. The President of the United States merely transmitted to Congress what Mr. Choate, a lawyer in New York, said, but Mr. Choate does not know one tenth as much about the whisky business as the gentleman from Illinois, who represents the greatest whisky district in the world.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The gentleman is an expert on liquor?

Mr. O'CONNOR. In some respects, I know about it, but in no respect am I an expert.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Would the gentleman consider a concoction composed of 45 percent alcohol and 55 percent distilled water a blended whisky?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I know nothing about the manufacture of whisky.

Mr. O'MALLEY. They are still selling that in the District without a label.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from New York has an erroneous impression about his rights in connection with such a bill as this. This is a bill considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. The gentleman has a right to move to strike out the last word, the last two words, the last paragraph, or the enacting clause and to offer any amendment he desires to offer. The Chairman or no one else can keep him from doing that.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I thank the gentleman for his parliamentary advice.

Mr. BLANTON. We want to vote with the gentleman on both of his amendments.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I realize I can defeat a committee amendment, but I do not think I can secure the enactment of either of these two amendments except by permission of the committee or by filibuster methods, which I would not indulge in and have never indulged in.

I think the committee should permit these two amendments in order to keep the drug stores as they should be and to make them label bottles in a manner that we will know what is in them.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BLACK. What is the gentleman's understanding as to the exact situation in regard to the uniform labeling idea?

Mr. O'CONNOR. It is just a lot of talk. It has not been put into effect.

Mr. BLACK. Nothing going on at all?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Nothing. Mr. Choate's board is not in existence. If you want to protect the people of the District of Columbia from false labels, section 36 of the act should not be repealed.

Mr. TRUAX. It is not only the effect on the people of the District of Columbia, but also our constituents who come in here from all over the country.

Mr. O'CONNOR. They need more protection than the people living in the District.

Mr. TRUAX. The gentleman spoke about the effect of blended whisky on babies and old people. What about those in between?

Mr. O'CONNOR. After a period of 60 years it may be harmful.

Mr. TRUAX. Does not the gentleman think he ought to waive some of this past procedure and offer his amendment?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I hope the committee will accept these amendments.

Mr. BLACK. I think the committee might be inclined to accept the second amendment, but we cannot accept the first one.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Why not restrict the drug store to selling liquor on prescription?

Mr. BLACK. I will tell the gentleman why. This bill comes in as a result of the President's message when he announced his signature to the District of Columbia liquor bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The President's message does not say anything about drug stores being rum shops. I have his message before me now.

Mr. BLACK. This bill was drawn primarily as a result of the President's message, and I am far from being a Presidential spokesman. As between the gentleman who now has the floor and myself, I have no standing as a Presidential spokesman.

Mr. GOSS. I understand the committee has accepted one amendment?

Mr. BLACK. We will accept the amendment as to labeling, but we cannot accept the other amendment or we will have no bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Of course, you will have a bill, and you will have just as good a bill. The primary purpose of this bill is expressed by section 2 to take care of the solicitor, and the next purpose is to provide that no distiller and no brewer can hold a retail license. All I ask you to do is to go one step further and say that no drug store can hold a retail license in order to prevent the sale of this blended stuff. What could be the objection to this? I have not heard any objection to it.

Mr. BLACK. There is no good reason why he should not sell it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes; I have pointed out the danger. A person goes into one of these drug stores with a prescription from a doctor and he tries to sell this blended stuff that he has on his shelf under his retail license, out of which he gets more money. He should not be in the liquor business.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I insist that the bill be read under the 5-minute rule for amendment.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, the committee will accept the amendment.

Mr. BLACK. The committee will accept both amendments. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment. Page 2, line 7, add the words "or class E."

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Let me say that it is not necessary to be unduly disturbed about the eloquence of the gentleman from New York on this matter, for, after all, the essence of the thing is simply this: This does not make it mandatory upon any drug store to sell blended liquor to anybody. It does not make it mandatory to sell blended liquor upon a prescription. It simply says, in effect, that they shall have the same privilege that is being exercised by a liquor store. Under existing law, a prescription calling for blended liquor cannot be filled at a drug store.

Now, the fact is that if a prescription calling for blended liquor got into the hands of anyone——

Mr. PALMISANO. If the gentleman will yield, I think the gentleman is in error. I believe the gentleman is discussing now his own bill.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am alluding to the general danger pointed out by the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman is laying the foundation for his attack.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Exactly. Where can there be any danger in conferring upon them the same privileges that are now exercised by the liquor stores? You go to a doctor to get a prescription and if he writes on that prescription "blended liquor" you can go to a liquor store, under the present bill, but you cannot go to a drug store and get that prescription for blended liquor filled.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Can the gentleman imagine that any physician of repute would violate the formula in the United States Pharmacopœia and prescribe a blended liquor?

Mr. DIRKSEN. The gentleman from New York proceeds on the theory that blended liquor is poisonous and harmful. I venture to say that 90 percent of all the liquor that is being consumed now is blended liquor and that it is not harmful except that it will cause intoxication. Have you heard of any deaths from poison liquor since we have had blended liquor on the market?

Mr. KRAMER. How does the gentleman from Illinois know it is not poison? Does the gentleman ever drink any of it?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Do I drink any of it?

Mr. KRAMER. Yes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is a very personal question, but I may say to the gentleman from California that I have tasted it. You see it is no longer felonious to take a drink.

Mr. KRAMER. Then how does the gentleman know it is blended, outside of the label?

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman is still alive.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I admit the impeachment.

Mr. KRAMER. In other words, the gentleman is a good judge of good liquor.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Is the gentleman in favor of having the Liquor Trust that sold a case of liquor formerly for $35 now charging $70 for the same liquor?

Mr. DIRKSEN. You can still get liquor for $30 per case. I do not know a thing about the Liquor Trust, although I have heard these allegations about a whisky trust quite often. Maybe there is a whisky trust, but if there is it has not come to my attention.

Before my time expires I want to get back to the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] and simply say with respect to this bill that drug stores have a heavy capital investment and are you going to let these mushroom liquor stores in the District come along and take away a good share of the business that is so necessary at the present time to sustain the heavy investment that these men have made? So far as the danger is concerned that is mere talk. The druggist can have blended liquor or he can have spiritus fermenti on the shelf to meet the purse and the requirements of all. I doubt if there is ever going to be any insidious persuasion on the part of a drug clerk to make somebody accept blended liquor in place of spiritus fermenti. You are simply conferring upon the drug stores the same rights that are being enjoyed now by all the liquor stores in the District of Columbia, and in view of the fact they have such an investment, why not give them a chance to make out on their investment, the same as anybody else? I think this emphatically disposes of the danger that has been brought up by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Do any of the business establishments receive doctors' prescriptions except the drug stores?

Mr. DIRKSEN. The gentleman means, do they take prescriptions to some other place?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I mean do they go into some other kind of liquor store? As I understand it, people do not go with prescriptions to a liquor store.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Perhaps not, and yet the difference in price between blended liquor and spiritus frumenti may persuade the man of slender means to purchase liquor at a liquor store when he should go to a drug store, and under existing law he cannot do so now.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Would it not be safer if they could not have any of the blended liquor?

Mr. DIRKSEN. The discussion on this matter has been a most futile business. We bring in a bill amending the District liquor law to permit drug stores to sell blended liquor on a physician's prescription where the prescription calls for liquor. It simply confers a right. It enjoins no physician to do so. It empowers no druggist to substitute blend for spiritus frumenti, or aged whisky. Yet for sentimental and unsubstantial reasons you are afraid that a sick person may be poisoned if this authority is conferred upon a druggist. I should rather see a druggist, who is presumed to know something about the composition of liquor, have this right than to permit it to be exercised by a liquor store.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker and fellow Members, this is the first time since I have been a Member of the House and a member of the District Committee that I have taken the floor to ask the House to reject the committee's report.

For the last month or so I have been acting chairman of the committee, because Mrs. NORTON, unfortunately, has had sickness in her family.

On Wednesday last we had a regular hearing. On Thursday, in order to draw some bills, I called a special session of the committee. The gentleman who represented chain drug stores requested me particularly on Wednesday not to bring the bill up before the committee on Thursday.

On Thursday, unfortunately, I was 15 seconds late and missed the train. On that day the House met at 11 o'clock a.m. Mrs. NORTON came back that day, having been absent about a month, as I say, on account of sickness in her family, and, to my surprise, when I got here I found that the bill had been reported out that morning. In other words, the Representative who asked me not to report the bill took advantage of my absence and had it reported out. I want to say that Mrs. NORTON knew nothing about it.

Mrs. NORTON. What bill is the gentleman discussing? This is not the bill he objects to.

Mr. PALMISANO. Yes. Under the present law no concern except a bona fide hotel, in existence at the time when the liquor bill was passed, can have more than one license. Now, the chain stores in the District of Columbia can obtain only one license. What they want is to have a license in every store so that they may monopolize all liquor business in the District. Now, you want to take this in connection with the bill that will follow this.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The bill that will follow this should stand or fall by this bill, because that permits drug stores to fill prescriptions with blended liquor.

Mr. PALMISANO. I call attention to the two bills. The law provides that the drug stores today can sell straight liquor on prescription with a $25 license. If they do not prefer that license, they can obtain a regular liquor license to sell blended liquor or anything they please. Now, the bill that will follow this will permit them to fill prescriptions of blended liquor on a $25 license.

I want to call attention to the testimony of a gentleman who appeared before our committee. His name was Hege. I quote from the hearings:

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Don't you think that some of these blends they are selling are terrible?

Mr. HEGE. I do; I heard Dr. Linder testify in effect at a hearing at the Mayflower Hotel that some of the blended whiskies consisted of the dumping into a 50-gallon barrel of 24 gallons of water, 24 gallons of alcohol, 1 gallon of straight rye whisky, coloring, and flavoring substances.

I say with all due respect that any drug store or any doctor who prescribes liquor of that kind should be put out of business. For years we have had a chain drug store proposition.

Now, the so-called "independent grocers", and the chain drug stores are getting together and want to freeze out the poor little fellow who is not tied up with either of them.

In Baltimore city the Read's Drug Stores have 27 licenses. It is like a gasoline station. They grab up all of the prominent corners of the city and then sell their wares at cut-rate prices. In Baltimore they are putting everyone out of business by selling liquor that the individual dealer must buy at $1.10 per pint for $1.12, which necessarily brings on a violation of the law by the little fellow, who wants to do the right thing and abide by the law. We should let every man who obtains a license, and who will abide by the law, have a chance to make a living, and we should not permit a chain combination to undersell him in any respect. When they put the little fellow out of business, you will find that they will go back to the price and get the profit.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last two words. I think a great many people thought as I did when we originally passed the liquor bill for the District of Columbia, that the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] was somewhat visionary when he advocated a tax of $5 a gallon on whisky. I for one have begun to believe that the gentleman from New York was right.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. If the gentleman will permit, the net result of the defeat of my amendment has been that the Government has lost some money and the distillers have it in their pockets.

Mr. TRUAX. Quite true, and today you have to pay $3 and $3.50, $4 and $4.50 for a pint of good bonded whisky, which means $8 and $9 a quart, or $32 and $36 a gallon. You could buy this same brand of goods before we repealed prohibition on a prescription from a drug store for from $2.50 to $3 and $3.50 a pint. There is one thing clearly evident, and that is there is a Whisky Trust in this country, that is receiving millions and millions of dollars every week that we sell liquor.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. Yes.

Mrs. NORTON. Does the gentleman not think that by allowing whisky to be sold freely as in the chain stores and drug stores, the competition that would ensue would naturally bring down the price of liquor? I believe that a great deal of what the gentleman says is true. I think the American people have been put in a very strange position by the Whisky Trust in this country, but does the gentleman not think that allowing it to be sold in chain stores and drug stores will help that situation?

Mr. TRUAX. In my judgment it would not, because of the fact that the food chains today, the A. & P. and Kroger stores, of which we have 7,000 in Ohio and Indiana, operate without any competition between them at all. They have agreements, they have fixed price schedules, and when you consider the short weights and the short measures that they use in many instances the price of their food is no lower than that which is retailed by the home merchants. It would only fortify and make stronger the trust that is now handling the liquor of this country.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. Yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The bootleggers before the repeal of prohibition were mere pikers as compared with the Whisky Trust today.

Mr. TRUAX. That is true. We all said that we were going to free this country from the bootlegger, that we were going to bring down the price of liquor and make it easy and possible for every one who wanted a drink to buy good liquor cheaply. I repeat the statement I made when we passed that bill, that our New Straitsville moonshine liquor in Ohio is better liquor today than you can obtain for twice the price here.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. Yes.

Mr. O'MALLEY. It has been suggested that perhaps by letting this liquor into chain stores it would bring down the price by competition. A price war is illegal under the N.R.A. How, then, could that be accomplished?

Mr. TRUAX. It would only make it possible to maintain these present high prices, and to send all the money derived from liquor sales into Wall Street. Your A. & P. stores are owned by Wall Street capital, and the Kroger stores are owned by Lehman Bros., Wall Street bankers in New York.

Mr. O'CONNOR. And the headquarters of the Whisky Trust is at no. 52 Williams Street, in Kuhn-Loeb's building.

Mr. TRUAX. I thank the gentleman for that information. These are some of the rich income-tax evaders that ought to be strung up and 90 percent of their wealth taken away from them.

Now, there is no competition in the liquor trade. Let us not be fooled by anyone on that. Whether you buy blended liquor in the drug store or the liquor store, the price is the same. Whether you buy bonded whisky in the drug store or the liquor store, the price is the same. When you go to get liquor you pay the same price no matter where you go. I speak not from my own experience, but from what I have learned from listening to the gentleman from New York on the floor of this House. Really good imported liquors, such as Haig & Haig and Johnny Walker are beyond the reach of the average man's purse. It is a most distressing situation today, Mr. Speaker, that the great American people, who were led into repealing prohibition by their votes, first, cannot buy liquor at a reasonable price. The American people were the first to repeal prohibition and then Congress came to see the light, and repealed it. Now we have given the American people what? We have given them a sham and a fraud, and we are giving the real benefits and the real revenues to the giants of finance down in New York, who have grabbed off everything we eat, who have grabbed off everything we wear, and who are now grabbing off everything that we drink.

I am heartily in accord with the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] and I want to praise the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON] for accepting the amendment. I hope it will be passed by the Members of this House without a dissenting vote.

I want to say a word for my friend from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN]. From my personal knowledge I will say to the gentleman from New York that they do sell down here what is known as straight 100-percent proof Bourbon, distilled in Peoria, Ill., and it is not bad, and you can buy a fifth for $1.75.

Mr. KRAMER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. I yield.

Mr. KRAMER. The gentleman means the label reads "100 percent"?

Mr. TRUAX. The label reads "100 percent."

Mr. KRAMER. But the liquor is not 100 percent?

Mr. TRUAX. I would not be too sure about that.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. I yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The gentleman speaks constantly of the Whisky Trust. Is the gentleman familiar with the fact that the code for the distillers makes it impossible to enlarge the distilling capacity of this country beyond what it was on the 5th day of December 1933? You stopped them from making whisky so that the price would go up. Your administration, the Democratic administration, has brought that about, and has placed the stamp of approval upon a code that seeks to keep intact only those distillery properties that were in operation or under the process of construction on the 5th of December 1933.

Mr. TRUAX. Oh, we might stop them from distilling it, but we did not stop them from blending this rotten stuff that they are racketeering with. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX] has expired.

The pro forma amendments were withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. Section 36 of such act is hereby repealed.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'CONNOR: Page 2, line 14, strike out section 4.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIRKSEN: Page 2, line 13, after the word "act" add: "Except that insofar as said section affects retailer's license, class B, it shall become effective upon the approval of this act."

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment to ask an explanation of it.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Simply that it makes the provision effective, insofar as beer is concerned, immediately, and as far as the other licenses are concerned, it does not become effective.

Mr. BLANTON. When the gentleman refers to "we", to whom does he refer?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I must have been speaking editorially. I am sorry.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman said "as far as we are concerned."

Mr. DIRKSEN. I said "as far as beer is concerned."

Mr. O'CONNOR. The proviso is that section 12 shall become effective 90 days after the approval of the act. What is the gentleman from Illinois trying to do?

Mr. DIRKSEN. The gentleman from Illinois is not trying to put anything over. He is simply trying to make this effective, as far as beer is concerned, at once, because it will give the brewers a chance to sell their wares during the summer season. Otherwise it would not become effective for 90 days, and the good beer season at that time would be at an end.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Well, I do not know about the reason for this great interest in the brewers. I would call the gentleman's attention to the history of the patriotism of the Brewers during the World War.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I presume next I will be hearing of a Brewers Trust in my district.

Mr. KRAMER. I do not believe it will have any effect in California, because we have warm weather there all the year round.

Mr. BLACK. This bill is not for California.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DIRKSEN) there were ayes 3 and noes 23.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H.R. 8471) entitled "An act making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes", disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. COPELAND, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. SHEPPARD, Mr. STEPHENS, Mr. TOWNSEND, and Mr. CAREY to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Passed the Senate February 6, 1934.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 1820) to amend the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, and ask its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subchapter 5 of chapter XVIII of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia be amended by adding thereto a new paragraph reading as follows:

"Every insurance corporation or association authorized to transact business in the District of Columbia, which insures employers against liability for compensation under the Employees' Compensation Act, shall file with the Superintendent of Insurance its manual of classifications and underwriting rules, together with basic rates for each class, and also merit rating plans designed to modify the class rates, none of which shall take effect until the Superintendent of Insurance shall have approved the same as adequate and reasonable for the group of risks to which they respectively apply. The Superintendent of Insurance may withdraw his approval of any premium rate or schedule made by any insurance corporation or association, if, in his judgment, such premium rate or schedule is inadequate or unreasonable: Provided, That upon petition of the company or association or any other party aggrieved the opinion of the Superintendent of Insurance shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia: Provided further, That any petition for review shall be filed with said court within 30 days after the rendition of opinion by the Superintendent of Insurance."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DEGREE-CONFERRING INSTITUTIONS

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 193) to amend section 586c of the act entitled "An act to amend subchapter 1 of chapter 18 of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia relating to degree-conferring institutions", approved March 2, 1929, and ask its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey?

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MUTUAL FIRE INSURANCE CO. OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H.R. 7090) to amend an act to incorporate the Mutual Fire Insurance Co. of the District of Columbia, as amended, and ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute for the House bill, Senate bill S. 2857, to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Mutual Fire Insurance Co. of the District of Columbia", as amended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 2 to 9 of the act entitled "An act to incorporate the Mutual Fire Insurance Co. of the District of Columbia", approved January 10, 1855 (10 Stat. 836), as amended April 12, 1866 (14 Stat. 32, ch. 41), March 25, 1870 (16 Stat. 80, ch. 35), June 14, 1878 (20 Stat. 132, ch. 195), and July 5, 1884 (23 Stat. 155, ch. 233), are hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. The purpose and designs of this corporation shall be to insure the property of the members thereof against loss or damage by fire, lightning, sprinkler leakage, cyclone, tornado, windstorm, and hail; to insure glass against breakage; to insure the loss of use and occupancy and rents of buildings when such loss is caused by fire, lightning, cyclone, tornado, windstorm, and hail; to insure automobiles and other vehicles, and other property, against loss or damage by fire, theft, transportation, explosion, and collision; to insure against the loss of property by burglary, theft, robbery, larceny, and forgery; to insure against loss or damage by any other hazard upon any risk which is not prohibited by statute or at common law from being the subject of insurance by a fire-insurance company but not including loss or damage by reason of bodily injury to the person, nor shall such corporation do a life-insurance or fidelity or surety business; and to cede and accept reinsurance upon the whole or any part of any risk; and to have and exercise all the general powers of corporations organized under the laws of the District of Columbia, insofar as they relate to mutual fire-insurance companies: Provided, however, That said corporation shall forever be conducted for the mutual benefit of its members, and not for profit; and, as to its business transacted in the District of Columbia or in any State or other jurisdiction in which it is licensed, shall be subject to all laws of such District, State, or other jurisdiction governing mutual fire-insurance companies.

"SEC. 3. The policies hereafter issued by said corporation shall provide for a premium or premium deposit payable in cash without premium note, and, except as herein provided, for a contingent premium at least equal to the premium or premium deposit: Provided, That said corporation may issue policies without additional contingent liability of its members whenever it has a surplus of assets over all its liabilities of $100,000, or more.

"SEC. 4. All persons who shall hereafter insure with said corporation; and their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns continuing to be insured by said corporation, shall thereby become members thereof during the period they shall remain insured by said corporation and no longer. Any public or private corporation, board, association, or estate may hold policies in the corporation. Any officer, director, trustee, or legal representative of such corporation, board, association, or estate may be recognized as acting for or on its behalf for the purpose of membership in this corporation, but shall not be personally liable upon such contract of insurance by reason of acting in such representative capacity. The right of any corporation, board, association, or estate to participate as a member of this corporation is hereby declared to be incidental to the purpose for which such corporation, board, association, or estate is organized and as much granted as the rights and powers expressly conferred.

"SEC. 5. The annual meeting of the members of said corporation shall be held at such time and place as provided in the bylaws. It shall be the duty of the president to call a special meeting of the corporation upon the written request of 20 members. "SEC. 6. The affairs of said corporation shall be conducted by a board consisting of seven directors or such greater number as may be authorized by the bylaws, selected from the members, to be elected by ballot at annual meetings of the members, for terms not exceeding 3 years, as fixed by the bylaws, and to continue in office until their successors are chosen. The board of directors shall have full power to make and prescribe such bylaws, rules, and regulations as they shall deem needful and proper for the elections herein provided and for the conduct and management of the business, funds, property, and effects of the company, not contrary to this act or to the laws of the United States, and they shall have power to alter or amend the same as the interests of the company, in their opinion, may require. Not less than a majority of the directors shall be a quorum to do business, but a less number may adjourn from time to time. Vacancies happening in the board may be filled by the remaining directors for the remainder of the term for which they were elected. The board shall choose one of their number as president, and appoint a secretary and treasurer and such other officers as may be necessary for conducting the affairs of said corporation. The persons now acting as managers shall continue as the board of directors until the next annual meeting after the passage of this act, and thereafter until their successors are duly chosen.

"SEC. 7. It shall be lawful for said company to invest and reinvest all moneys received by it in such manner, consistent with the laws of the District of Columbia relating to mutual fire-insurance companies, as the directors deem best for the interests of the company, and to acquire, hold, and sell real estate necessary or convenient for the transaction of its corporate business.

"SEC. 8. Nothing herein contained shall be construed to affect or impair in any manner whatsoever any vested right or interest in or under any existing contract of the company.

"SEC. 9. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

SEC. 2. Sections 10 to 16, inclusive, of the said act of January 10, 1855 (10 Stat. 836), as amended April 12, 1866 (14 Stat. 32), March 25, 1870 (16 Stat. 80), June 14, 1878 (20 Stat. 132), and July 5, 1884 (23 Stat. 155), and said Act of July 5, 1884 (23 Stat. 155), are hereby repealed.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

DELLA D. LEDENDECKER

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 2006) for the relief of Della D. Ledendecker and ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commission on Licensure to Practice the Healing Art in the District of Columbia is hereby authorized to license Della D. Ledendecker to practice chiropractic in said District under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the practice of the healing art to protect the public health in the District of Columbia", approved February 27, 1929, notwithstanding the provision therein requiring applications from candidates for licenses to practice chiropractic to be filed within 90 days from the date of the approval of said act, and on condition that said Della D. Ledendecker shall otherwise be found by said commission to be qualified to practice under the provisions of said act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMATEUR BOXING

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 328) to prevent professional prize fighting and to authorize amateur boxing in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, and an amendment will be offered striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the provisions of the bill H.R. 1607, as amended.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does not this bill create another expensive commission in the District of Columbia?

Mr. BLACK. It is a self-sustaining commission.

Mr. BLANTON. Does it not provide for three high-salaried commissioners and does it not provide for a lot of paid employees?

Mrs. NORTON. I believe the gentleman must be in error, because the bill does not provide for any salaried commission.

Mr. BLANTON. Is not this the bill which provides for a salaried boxing commission?

Mrs. NORTON. This is the bill, H.R. 1607, to permit amateur boxing.

Mr. BLANTON. It is not the one that creates a salaried boxing commission?

Mrs. NORTON. Absolutely not a salaried commission.

Mr. BLANTON. And it creates no salaried offices of any kind?

Mrs. NORTON. None. It creates a boxing commission, but the commissioners serve without salary.

Mr. BLANTON. There is no salary connected with the bill?

Mr. HARTLEY. No salary whatsoever.

Mr. BLANTON. Then the commissioners who are to be appointed under the terms of this bill are to serve without salary?

Mr. HARTLEY. That is right.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whoever shall, in the District of Columbia, voluntarily engage in a pugilistic encounter shall be imprisoned for not more than 5 years. By the term "pugilistic encounter", as herein used, is meant any voluntary fight by blows by means of fists or otherwise, whether with or without gloves, between two or more men for money or anything of value except a suitably inscribed wreath, diploma, banner, badge, medal, or timepiece, not exceeding the value of $35 or upon the result of which any money or anything of value is bet or wagered, or to see which an admission fee of more than $2 is directly or indirectly charged.

SEC. 2. (a) There is hereby created for the District of Columbia a boxing commission, to be composed of three members appointed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, one of whom shall be a member of the police department of the District of Columbia. No person shall be eligible for appointment to membership on the commission unless such person at the time of appointment is and for at least 3 years prior thereto has been a resident of the District of Columbia. The terms of office of the members of the commission first taking office after the approval of this act shall expire at the end of 2 years from the date of the approval of this act. A successor to a member of the commission shall be appointed in the same manner as the original members and shall have a term of office expiring 2 years from the date of the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed, except that any person appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed for the remainder of such term. The members of the commission shall receive no compensation for their services. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall furnish to the boxing commission such office space and clerical and other assistance as may be necessary.

(b) Subject to the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the commission shall have power (1) to cooperate with organizations engaged in the promotion and control of amateur boxing; (2) to supervise and regulate amateur boxing within the District of Columbia; and (3) to make such orders, rules, and regulations as the commission deems necessary for carrying out the powers herein conferred upon it.

letics. Each such permit shall be limited to a period of 1 day, except that in case of any interscholastic boxing meet or similar contest a permit may be issued for the duration of such meet or contest. No such permit shall be issued to any person unless such person agrees to accord to the commission the right to examine the books of accounts and other records of such person relating to the boxing exhibition for which such permit is issued, and such permit shall so state on its face. A permit may be revoked at any time in the discretion of the commission.

(d) No individual shall engage in any boxing exhibition in the District of Columbia without a license from the commission. Such license shall entitle the licensee to engage in amateur boxing exhibitions in the District of Columbia for the period specified therein, but the commission shall not issue any such license to any individual if the commission finds that such individual has at any time or place engaged in any professional prize fight or in any boxing exhibition for which he received money as compensation or reward, and the commission shall revoke any such license if at any time, after notice and hearing, it makes such finding in respect of the licensee, and may revoke any such license at any time for violation by the licensee of any order, rule, or regulation of the commission, or for other cause.

(e) Any permit or license issued by the board shall not be valid for the purpose of holding or engaging in, respectively, any boxing exhibition which does not conform to the following conditions: (1) Such exhibition may consist of one or more bouts, but no such bout shall continue for more than four rounds; (2) no round shall exceed 3 minutes; (3) there shall be an interval of 1 minute between each round and the succeeding round; and (4) each contestant shall use gloves of not less than 8 ounces each in weight.

(f) The commission may charge for permits and for licenses such fees as will, in its opinion, defray the cost of issuance thereof and other necessary expenses of the commission.

(g) Any person who (1) holds any boxing exhibition in the District of Columbia without a permit valid and effective at the time, or (2) engages in any boxing exhibition in the District of Columbia without a license valid and effective at the time, or (3) violates any lawful order, rule, or regulation of the commission shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both.

(h) The term "person" as used in this act, includes individuals, partnerships, corporations, and associations.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the House bill, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLACK: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

(a) That there is hereby created for the District of Columbia a boxing commission to be composed of three members appointed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, one of whom shall be a member of the police department of the District of Columbia. No person shall be eligible for appointment to membership on the commission unless such person at the time of appointment is and for at least 3 years prior thereto has been a resident of the District of Columbia. The terms of office of the members of the commission first taking office after the approval of this act shall expire at the end of 2 years from the date of the approval of this act. A successor to a member of the commission shall be appointed in the same manner as the original members and shall have a term of office expiring 2 years from the date of the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed, except that any person appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed for the remainder of such term. The members of the commission shall receive no compensation for their services. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall furnish to the boxing commission such office space and clerical and other assistance as may be necessary.

(b) Subject to the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the commission shall have power (1) to cooperate with organizations engaged in the promotion and control of amateur boxing; (2) to supervise and regulate boxing within the District of Columbia; and (3) to make such orders, rules, and regulations as the commission deems necessary for carrying out the powers herein conferred upon it.

(c) No person shall hold a boxing exhibition in the District of Columbia without a permit from the commission. Each such permit shall be limited to a period of 1 day, except that in case of any interscholastic boxing meet or similar contest a permit may be issued for the duration of such meet or contest. No such permit shall be issued to any person unless such person agrees to accord to the commission the right to examine the books of accounts and other records of such person relating to the boxing exhibition for which such permit is issued, and such permit shall so state on its face. A permit may be revoked at any time in the discretion of the commission.

(d) No individual shall engage in any boxing exhibition in the District of Columbia without a license from the commission. Such license shall entitle the licensee to engage in amateur boxing exhibitions in the District of Columbia for the period specified therein, and the commission may revoke any such license at any time for violation by the licensee of any order, rule, or regulation of the commission, or for other cause.

(e) Any permit or license issued by the board shall not be valid for the purpose of holding or engaging in, respectively, any boxing exhibition which does not conform to the following conditions: (1) Such exhibition may consist of one or more bouts; (2) no round shall exceed 3 minutes; (3) there shall be an interval of 1 minute between each round and the succeeding round; and (4) each contestant shall use gloves of not less than 8 ounces each in weight.

(f) The commission may charge for permits and for licenses such fees as will, in its opinion, defray the cost of issuance thereof and other necessary expenses of the commission.

(g) Any person who (1) holds any boxing exhibition in the District of Columbia without a permit, valid and effective at the time, or (2) engages in any boxing exhibition in the District of Columbia without a license, valid and effective at the time, or (3) violates any lawful order, rule, or regulation of the commission shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both.

(h) The term "person", as used in this act, includes individuals, partnerships, corporations, and associations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended to read as follows: "A bill to authorize boxing in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes."

JENNIE BRUCE GALLAHAN

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H.R. 2035) for the relief of Jennie Bruce Gallahan and ask that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I call the gentlewoman's attention to line 4, where it says that the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $5,000. May I say that the Appropriations Committee are quite jealous.

Mrs. NORTON. This says "authorized."

Mr. GOSS. It says "authorized to pay out any money in the Treasury." I may say that this is a bill to pay a fireman's widow out of Federal money instead of out of District funds.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. This widow is now drawing a pension of $60 a month, and this bill would give her an additional $5,000.

Mr. GOSS. Out of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. BLANTON. This would establish one of the worst precedents that could be brought before this House.

Mr. GOSS. May I say to the gentlewoman that we have discussed this matter in the Appropriations Committee, especially the subcommittee of which I am a member, this morning. We have no objection to the legislative committees' reporting out bills that do not appropriate money, but we do object to the legislative committees' reporting out bills that do appropriate money, and that is why I call this to the gentlewoman's attention. I will have to object to this, but I would not object to an authorization.

Mr. BLANTON. This sets a bad precedent, and the bill should not be passed.

Mr. GOSS. If this is amended to purely an authorization I would not object.

Mr. BLANTON. I hope the distinguished gentlewoman from New Jersey will not call this bill up, because this is the kind of bill that ought to come through another committee. This is going to establish a bad precedent and will harass us hereafter.

Mr. GOSS. May I ask the gentlewoman if there is any good reason why this amount of money should be paid out of the Federal Treasury? Does not the gentlewoman feel this should be confined to District funds?

Mrs. NORTON. I do feel that way.

Mr. GOSS. I would have no objection if it is authorized and tied up in that way although I have not prepared an amendment. I did not know that this was coming up.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the gentleman from New York want to protect the jurisdiction of his committee? This is a bill that should come through his committee.

Mr. BLACK. We rather came to the conclusion that the bill belonged to the District Committee.

Mr. BLANTON. It ought to come out of the District funds then. It should not come out of Federal funds.

Mrs. NORTON. There is no objection to that suggestion.

Mr. GOSS. I will prepare an amendment. I have not the amendment in front of me. If the gentlewoman will defer for a moment and call this up later, I will prepare an amendment.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Do claim bills of the District of Columbia go to the District of Columbia Committee?

Mr. BLACK. Some of them do and some of them do not. There does not seem to be any fixed rule. I have seen bills in the District Committee that I have met again in the Claims Committee.

Mr. BLANTON. They ought to go to the Claims Committee always.

Mr. BLACK. There was a bill that was taken up in the District Committee and then went to the Claims Committee.

Mrs. NORTON. This bill has been passed by the House on two different occasions.

Mr. O'CONNOR. As I understand the parliamentary situation, this is a private bill. It should have gone to the Claims Committee, but under our rules a Member may refer this type of bill himself. The Member must have referred this to the District of Columbia Committee.

Mr. PALMISANO. This has been considered by the District Committee.

Mrs. NORTON. This bill has been passed by the House on two different occasions.

Mr. GOSS. The bill appropriates Federal funds and not District funds.

Mr. BLANTON. I hope that the bill will not be called up, for I shall be compelled to oppose its passage.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the bill temporarily while an amendment is being prepared.

RACE TRACKS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H.R. 7906) to license race tracks in the District of Columbia and provide for their regulation.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentlewoman a question? I notice on page 2, lines 15 to 18, these words: "The cost of any bond given by any member of the racing commission shall be taken to be a part of the necessary expenses of said commission and shall be payable by the District of Columbia."

I have taken the trouble to look up the law, and I find that all employees of the Federal Government as well as the District government are required to pay their own bond premiums except in this case. The payment by the Government of premiums on the bonds of Government employees or District employees is setting a new precedent.

Mr. BLACK. Here is a bond of $50,000. The cost of the bond would be as much as the salary.

Mr. GOSS. The gentleman is talking about a penalty.

Mr. BLACK. No. I am talking about the premium on the bond.

Mr. GOSS. This says "The cost of any bond."

Mr. BLACK. This is the only bond required. This is a $50,000 bond.

Mrs. NORTON. To which bill is the gentleman referring?

Mr. GOSS. H.R. 7906. The Appropriations Committee felt that this was an appropriation, because the cost of a bond given by any member of the racing commission was to be payable out of District funds, whereas in all other cases, as I was trying to point out, Federal and District employees who are bonded pay the premiums themselves. The Appropriations Committee felt this was an appropriation and is desirous again of having this bill limited to an authorization only. We are not opposed to these bills except insofar as they appropriate money.

Mr. BLACK. Is the gentleman opposed to the principle of the bill?

Mr. GOSS. No; but, as a matter of fact, I think this is a bill where the Commissioners are opposed to handling the matter in this way, according to the report.

Mr. BLACK. They were against the bill.

Mr. GOSS. Yes; and they were opposed to the provisions of this bill that allowed this bond money to be paid by the District instead of the individual.

Mr. BLACK. No; the District Commissioners believe that all these bonds should be paid out of the public funds, including the District of Columbia bonds.

Mr. GOSS. I may say to the gentleman that there is not a single one of them paid in the way you are suggesting in this bill.

Mr. BLACK. But they believe they should be paid in this way. This is a case of a $50,000 bond, and the premium would be $1,000. The proposed salary is $2,000; and if you make the individual pay for the premium on his bond, you will be giving him a salary of only $1,000.

Mr. GOSS. I have spoken to the Chairman of the District Committee many times about this bill, and your committee has taken the position heretofore that all the power the committee has is to authorize appropriations, and they have always taken the position that these things should go to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, when this bill was originally drawn it provided that anyone desiring to have races in the District of Columbia should apply to the District Commissioners for a permit. If horse racing is to be permitted, that is as far as this bill should go; yet it has been amended by the committee and provides for an expensive racing commission with a lot of employees, and should not be passed.

Mr. BLACK. That was my idea exactly.

Mr. BLANTON. That is what the Commissioners are for; to pass on and to grant such permits. They are here to attend to the business of the people of the District. This is why they get a basic salary of $9,000, after they have been in office for the required period of time. We should not provide for the establishment of another expensive commission to handle racing, with the members of the commission and numerous employees paid salaries. When you pass such a bill, you are putting the District and the people of the District of Columbia in the racing business, and that ought not to be done.

Mr. BLACK. I introduced this bill, and I was quite satisfied that the District Commissioners have charge of the entire operation, but, to meet the objections of several members of the committee, I had to agree to these amendments.

Mr. BLANTON. There is always an attempt to enlarge personnel and create new positions with new salaries at the expense of the taxpayers here, because they cannot help themselves.

Mr. BLACK. I agree with the gentleman that the simpler we have the structure of government here the better.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from New York wields great influence with this committee, and is he not willing to go back to his own proposition?

Mr. BLACK. Absolutely.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the chairman of the committee willing to do that?

Mrs. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. GOSS. The gentleman from Texas is a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and I am sure he does not want to appropriate the money in this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly not; and that is what I have arranged with the committee to avoid. We are going to change that and go back to the original Black bill.

Mrs. NORTON. I may say to the gentleman from Texas that the bill that was to be considered, I thought, was the original bill, H.R. 7906. As the gentleman knows, I have been away from the committee for sometime, owing to serious illness in my family. The original bill did not contain all these amendments that the gentleman objects to, and I am perfectly willing to have the original bill considered.

Mr. BLANTON. Then let us call up that bill.

Mrs. NORTON. That is the bill we have called up, but the bill has been amended in my absence. Of course, we can vote down the committee amendments.

Mr. BLANTON. That will be all right.

Mr. BLACK. Except the one about dog races. We will take out the dog races.

Mr. BLANTON. Very well.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, under the circumstances, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether any more bills are to be called up this afternoon.

Mrs. NORTON. Just one more bill, and that is the bill having to do with snow removal.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person, persons, association, or corporation desiring to hold horse or dog races at meetings where the pari mutuel or certificate wagering thereon shall be conducted, shall apply to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for license to do so. Such applications shall be in such form and supply such information and data as the Commissioners shall prescribe.

SEC. 2. The Commissioners may reject any application for any cause which they may deem detrimental to the public interest.

SEC. 3. Any licensee may deduct 8½ percent from the total amount wagered in all pari mutuel pools, which shall include a 2-percent license fee, which shall be payable to the Commissioners after the last race on each and every day of each and every race meeting and shall be made from all contributions to all pari mutuel pools to each and every race of that day.

SEC. 4. There shall also be paid to the Commissioners a sum of 10 percent for each and every person entering the grounds or enclosure of the licensee, on the price on each and every ticket of admission.

SEC. 5. The Commissioners shall have the power to prescribe rules and reguations for race meetings, including the power to fix the amount of the purses to be offered at all contests at such meetings.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw all committee amendments except the one on page 1, line 4, striking out the words "or dog."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk reported the committee amendment, as follows:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "horse", strike out the words "or dog."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the next bill, which the Chairman of the District Committee is to call up, I may be allowed to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman inform us upon what subject?

Mr. PATMAN. On the Federal Reserve System and monetary legislation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the special committee authorized and empowered to investigate the charges of Dr. Wirt has agreed upon and adopted the following plan of procedure: They will first call Dr. Wirt to the stand, swear him and demand that he give the name or names of the parties to whom he has referred and then state what it was these parties stated, whereupon the committee will adjourn without giving Dr. Wirt the opportunity to make any statement at that time.

I would like to make the following observation. Should any committee of this House pursue such an extraordinary procedure I feel that Dr. Wirt would be rendering a distinctly patriotic service to his country, regardless of whether he is right or wrong, by remaining silent and refusing to answer. There is no justification in authorizing any investigation upon the part of this House and then circumscribing and crushing a man in this manner. He should be given full opportunity to state his position and any facts that he may have to support it. Voltaire once said, "I do not believe in a word that you say but I will defend with my life, if need be, your right to say it."

Mr. O'CONNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania is unduly alarmed. I take the liberty of saying, in the absence of two other majority members of the committee, what I believe that committee proposes to do. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania is advising Dr. Wirt to refuse to answer, I assure him that as far as I am concerned, as one member of that committee, that the committee will take care of Dr. Wirt under the powers of this House and compel him to answer.

All that the resolution of the committee as to procedure at the first meeting does is to prescribe what shall be done at that first meeting; that to wit, Dr. Wirt shall name the people who made these alleged statements to him as read by Mr. James H. Rand, Jr., before the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce; that he shall state what they, those alleged "brain trusters", said to him; that he shall state the occasions on which the said statements were made; and that he shall state who else was present. The resolution as to procedure does not foreclose the committee from going further at that meeting or a meeting called 5 minutes later or any other meeting. But the committee does not propose in the first instance to have Dr. Wirt appear before it and deliver a long academic treatise on some alleged revolutionary movement in the United States.

Dr. Wirt is not called before the committee as a defendant. He is being subpenaed as a witness. He will take the oath, and he will answer questions put to him by the members of the committee, but he will not be permitted to make a speech, unless the committee sees fit to permit him to make certain statements. So the gentleman from Pennsylvania need not be alarmed as to what the committee proposes to do. It is going to find out what truth or falsity exists behind the statements made by Dr. Wirt, who, if anybody, made such statements to him, and if nobody did make any such statements, the committee proposes to call his bluff.

Mr. TRUAX. Will the gentleman yield? I wonder if the fact that Dr. Wirt is a Republican, and has been for years under the influence and environment of the United States Steel Corporation, had anything to do with the statement of our friend from Pennsylvania.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The committee does not care whether he is a Republican, a Democrat, a Communist, or a Socialist. The committee will handle him just the same as they propose to handle him, even if he is a regularly, duly registered organization Democrat.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. For a brief question.

Mr. McFADDEN. I resent the statement made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX]. I am not playing politics nor do I know Dr. Wirt, nor do I know of any connection between him and the Steel Corporation, but Dr. Wirt is making serious charges that certain people are conniving to break down our form of government.

Mr. TRUAX. And I expect to show that he is connected with the Steel Trust.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The only reason I rose was to assure the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN] that the committee proposes to proceed without partisanship, and to maintain at the same time the right of the House of Representatives to examine the witness as it sees fit, and not to permit stump speeches by some one who may want to gain notoriety or publicity.

REMOVAL OF SNOW AND ICE

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H.R. 8281) to amend the act entitled "An act providing for the removal of snow and ice from the paved sidewalks of the District of Columbia", which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4 of the act entitled "An act providing for the removal of snow and ice from the paved sidewalks of the District of Columbia", approved September 16, 1922, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"In each and every case wherein the occupant of a residence, or the person in charge of a building other than a residence, or in the case that the premises as a whole or in part are vacant, then the owner, agent, or person in charge, and the owner or agent or person in charge of any unimproved lot, shall remove such snow or sleet from such sidewalk within the first 8 hours of daylight after the ceasing to fall of any such snow or sleet."

SEC. 2. Section 5 of such act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Failure to comply with the provisions of this act shall be punishable by a fine of not more than $5 for each and every offense, and each day of 24 hours after the first 8 hours mentioned that said snow or sleet be not removed shall constitute a distinct and separate offense."

SEC. 3. Section 6 of such act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"All prosecutions under this act shall be on information filed in the police court by the corporation counsel or any of his assistants."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, there should be an amendment offered to this bill providing that where the premises are occupied by a tenant, the tenant shall remove the snow and ice.

Mrs. NORTON. I should be very glad to accept that amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Because sometimes there might be an owner of a residence who lives in New Jersey who might be renting the property to someone in Washington. He would not know when it snows in Washington.

Mrs. NORTON. I ask the gentleman to submit his amendment.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Is there anything in this bill to compel the owners and the lessees to clear the sidewalks in front of their houses?

Mrs. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Such a law should be enforced. It is the only city in the United States where owners and tenants are not compelled to clean the sidewalks in front of their houses.

Mr. BLANTON. There is a regulation here that requires it, but it is not enforced. This bill is to remedy the situation.

Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment as a new section at the end of the bill, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BLANTON: At the end of the bill insert a new section as follows:

SEC. 4. When the premises are occupied by tenants the snow shall be removed by such tenants.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to take any time. I happen to know from my experience in Washington that there are many residences here owned by people who live all over the country, in New York, New Jersey, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Maryland, and other States, and unless this amendment be adopted they could be fined.

Mrs. NORTON. The committee will accept the amendment.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. MILLARD. Is it a fact that the city of Washington owns the fee to the sidewalks, and, therefore, we cannot compel the tenants and property owners to remove the snow?

Mr. BLANTON. We can compel them if we pass this bill.

Mr. MILLARD. This will remedy that?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MEMORIAL EXERCISES

Mr. MOREHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk a resolution, which I ask to have considered at this time.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 327

Resolved, That on Friday, April 27, immediately after the approval of the Journal, the House shall stand at recess for the purpose of holding memorial services as arranged by the Committee on Memorials under the provisions of clause 40a of rule XI. The order of exercises and the proceedings of the services shall be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and all persons shall be given the privilege of extending their remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

At the conclusion of the proceedings the Speaker shall call the House to order, and then, as a further mark of respect to the memories of the deceased, he shall declare the House adjourned.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the resolution and ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order and ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask to speak out of order at this time to bring to the attention of the Members of the House the fact that there has been placed upon the Speaker's table today a petition asking to bring the McLeod bill—that is, the bank pay-off bill—out of committee for consideration by the House. I have filed this petition, not only to bring the bill out but due to the fact that if it is not brought out in this way we will not have time at this session, I fear, to consider this bill.

Due to the drive now under way to adjourn the Congress by May 15, we find that regardless of the favorable sentiment which may exist in both the subcommittee holding hearings on the bank depositors' 100 percent pay-off bill and the full Banking and Currency Committee, the remaining time is far from sufficient to permit the passage of the bill through the regular procedure.

If the subcommittee reports the bill on the 12th, it will take 3 days before the report can be written and filed in the House. Sunday being the 15th, it will be the 16th before the report of the subcommittee can be filed in the basket, and it will be the 17th before it can be printed in the RECORD. Then it has to remain in that status until the chairman of the full committee calls a meeting for consideration of this particular bill. Until then this bill cannot be considered by the full committee.

You can count on a week before the full committee is called for consideration of this bill. That brings the date to April 24. If the bill is reported on the 24th or 25th, which is not likely, because the full committee has already stated it will hold hearings which will last at least 2 or 3 days, that makes it the 26th or 27th. If the report of the bill is made on the 26th or 27th, you have got to allow at least 3 days before the report of the full committee can be written and dropped in the basket. That means at least the 29th or 30th, and April being a 30-day month cuts us down to only 15 days remaining before the adjournment date.

After the report of the full committee has been printed, even though this bill is favorably reported, it goes on the calendar in the regular course of procedure and takes its regular place on such calendar and is subject to call only in such regular course of procedure. In other words, not until the next Banking and Currency Committee day is reached on the House Calendar.

If, however, the leadership and administration in Congress can be construed to be in favor of this bill, then the next step is for the leadership and the chairman of the full committee, Congressman STEAGALL, of Alabama, to ask the Rules Committee for a hearing on obtaining a rule for this bill to come before the House under a special rule. If the Rules Committee and the administration are favorable—and the majority members of the Rules Committee are selected for that committee only because they are strictly administration men—then it is up to the Rules Committee to grant a hearing to the Chairman of the full Banking and Currency Committee.

This procedure should take at least 3 or 4 days. Then, according to the rules of the House, the ordinary procedure is that it would be at least 1 or 2 days before the rule is printed and came before the House for a vote on such rule. This would bring the date somewhere—say, for sake of argument, May 7. Therefore, if the Rules Committee, after the rule is granted on May 7, permits this bill to come before the House for action under a special rule—for instance, on May 9—we have only 6 days remaining in which to pass this bill, not only through the House but through the Senate, and have it signed and enacted into law before May 15, which, as said before, is the date set by the leadership of the House, at least according to all the rumor prevailing here, for adjournment.

The fact that this bill is so vital to hundreds of thousands of substantial, hard-working citizens makes it imperative that this bill pass at this session of Congress.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, I am in receipt of a communication from Idaho which I think will interest the Members of this House:

Whereas in order to keep thousands of American citizens from starving through the different governmental agencies through the last several months the United States of America has increased its public debt in a staggering amount, it would seem that a point is rapidly approaching where the credit of our Government must necessarily break unless the wisdom of our President and the Congress of the United States are brought into play to the end that a wise monetary policy may be adopted. It must be apparent to all that our monetary base must be broadened. We believe in a sound monetary system. In order to establish this and to curb the present pyramiding of tax-free interest-bearing paper credit issues we urge the restoration of silver to the time-honored position it occupied for thousands of years prior to its ruthless demonetization by this country in 1873 and the assaults made upon it by European nations prior to that time. For thousands of years silver was the money of the people and was sound and would be so today if given an opportunity. It seems to us to longer postpone this matter is the continuation of an almost criminal neglect to an open avenue of relief where an open avenue is so readily available. We urge that a ratio be established between gold and silver conformable to the production ratio between gold and silver throughout all mining history.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE IDAHO MINING ASSOCIATION.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] is recognized for 30 minutes.

GET GOVERNMENT OUT OF PRIVATE BUSINESS AND GET PRIVATE CORPORATIONS OUT OF GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I asked for this time in order to talk about the monetary situation. I believe that the issuance and distribution of money is a governmental function. I think that the Government should, as quickly as possible, get out of all private business, but on the other hand I think the Government, as quickly as possible, should take over its own business.

The Constitution says that Congress shall coin money and regulate its value. I do not blame the bankers for the present credit and monetary conditions as much as I blame Congress. The banking laws are responsible. Therefore it is not the bankers so much as it is our own Congress, and we are Members of one branch of the Congress. If we fail to do our duty I think the people should blame us.

FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS HAVE FAILED TO HELP PEOPLE

The Federal Reserve banks have not been doing what Congress contemplated that they should do when they were created. They were created for the purpose of giving the country an elastic currency, to help commerce, industry, and agriculture. The country was divided up into 12 regions or divisions. In each area there is a Federal Reserve bank that has a monopoly on the use of the Government credit in that particular area. In the area in which I live is the Federal Reserve Bank of Dallas, Tex. It is district no. 11. That bank has $114,000,000 in cash in its vaults and has actually let industry and agriculture and commerce have this time not over $100,000 out of the $114,000,000. It is just as I heard a Member of Congress, the Hon. MARVIN JONES, describe it the other night. The money set-up that we have is like the power for an automobile. When it goes down hill we have plenty of gas, and we have plenty of power, but as we start up hill on the other side we have no power, no gas. Our financial system is that way. When we have plenty of money, credit, and prosperity, we have plenty offered to us by the Federal Reserve banks, but when we actually need money, and when we actually need credit they are putting on the brakes. They order deflation. We are going up hill. We need that power which the Federal Reserve can supply, and we cannot possibly get it.

MONEY MONOPOLY OF FEDERAL RESERVE

A Federal Reserve bank has a great privilege. It has the right to issue a blanket mortgage on all the property of all the people of this country. It is called a Federal Reserve note. For that privilege section 16 of the act provides that when the Government prints a Federal Reserve note and guarantees to pay that note and delivers it to a Federal Reserve bank, that Federal Reserve bank shall pay—it seems to be mandatory—the rate of interest that is set by the Federal Reserve Board. The law has never been put into effect. The Federal Reserve Board sets the zero rate. Instead of charging an interest rate which the law says they shall charge, they set no rate at all.

Therefore, for the use of this great Government credit, these blanket mortgages that are issued against all the property of all the people of this Nation and against the incomes of all the people of this Nation, they do not pay one penny. Not one penny of the stock of the Federal Reserve banks is owned by the Government or the people, but it is owned by private banks exclusively. They do not pay one penny for the use of that great privilege, to the people or to the Government.

SO-CALLED "PERFECTING AMENDMENTS"

It was contemplated that they should pay for the use of the Government's credit. The Board said, "Well, the law is that when they make so much money all above that is excess profit and will go over into the United States Treasury." When those profits commenced to accumulate they got so-called "perfecting amendments" passed by Congress, providing that until this surplus was up to a certain amount none of the profit should go into the Treasury. Then as the surplus piled up they kept increasing it by other perfecting amendments, and, finally, last session when the Glass-Steagall bill was passed there was a provision that all profits, instead of going into the Treasury as contemplated by the Federal Reserve Act, should go into the surplus fund of each Federal Reserve bank. Eventually they expect to distribute these profits. Another perfecting amendment will be proposed for that purpose.

Therefore, not one penny is paid to the Government, to the people, by these private banking institutions for the use of this blanket mortgage upon the property and the income of the people.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman inform the House how many Members knew such a provision was in the bill, and was it discussed to any degree whatsoever?

Mr. PATMAN. I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that when the Glass-Steagall Act of 1933 came over from the Senate and came on the floor of the House I offered an amendment to strike out that section. I considered it a joker in the bill, and after full and deliberate consideration the House voted almost unanimously to strike that section from the bill which would have caused all excess profits to go into the United States Treasury, as contemplated by the original act.

Then when the bill went to conference and the House wanted certain concessions and the Senate wanted certain concessions, the Senate conferees refused to yield on that point and said, "We will not let you have guarantee of bank deposits unless you leave that provision giving the profits to the banks instead of the Government in the bill." In order to get guarantee of bank deposits the House had to agree to that section remaining in the bill. Of course, I did not agree to it, but there was no way of getting guarantee of bank deposits without permitting that provision to remain.

Mr. McFARLANE. Was it not section 3 that was stricken out by the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. PATMAN. I believe it was section 3; I am not sure.

Mr. McFARLANE. Did the conferees of the House call to our attention the matters the gentleman has just mentioned?

Mr. PATMAN. I do not recall. It was at the end of the session and we were all anxious to get some kind of Federal deposit insurance, and the conferees, I think, lost sight of that part of it, but it was very material.

Mr. McFARLANE. They did not call it to our attention.

GOVERNMENT SHOULD OWN FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM

Mr. PATMAN. There is one way we can bring back to the people of this country that great privilege and right, and that is to do something about the Federal Reserve banks. The banks of the country have invested $140,000,000 in the Federal Reserve banks. That is all they have invested in these 12 great institutions. With this small, insignificant capital of $140,000,000 they have been doing business aggregating as high as $100,000,000,000 a year. Do you think they can do it on that capital? We know they cannot do it on that capital and are not attempting to do it on that capital. They are doing that enormous business on the credit of this Nation. They are doing it by issuing these blanket mortgages that are liens upon your homes and my home, and upon our incomes until they are paid.

I hold in my hand a Federal Reserve note issued by the Federal Reserve Bank of Philadelphia. The Federal Reserve Bank of Philadelphia does not agree to redeem this note. None of these banks agrees to redeem them. This Federal Reserve note reads:

The United States of America will pay to the bearer on demand $5.

The United States guarantees all the paper money that is issued by the Federal Reserve banks. The Federal Reserve banks do not issue this money upon their financial responsibility. Therefore they are enabled to do $100,000,000,000 a year business on $140,000,000 capital investment.

GOVERNMENT PAYS BONDS AND CONTINUES TO PAY INTEREST ON THEM

I have before me a copy of the report of the Federal Reserve Bulletin for March 1934. I notice that the 12 Federal Reserve banks at the end of February 1934 owned $2,431,951,000 of Government bonds. What did they pay for these Government bonds? Did they pay money; did they pay credit; did they give the member banks credit on their books for them? The credit of this Nation was used by these banks to acquire these Government bonds. Suppose you owed $3,000 on your home, the remainder due on your mortgage, and you gave me $3,000 to pay the holder of that mortgage and I gave the holder of the mortgage the $3,000 and had the mortgage transferred to me, and at the end of 6 months or a year I came to you and said, "Pay me interest on that mortgage"; you would say to me, "Why, I gave you the money to pay that mortgage, to liquidate it! Why, you are foolish to come to me and ask me to continue to pay interest on an obligation I have liquidated with my money." I would not be any more foolish than the Federal Reserve banks that buy Government bonds on Government credit and then continue to call upon the Government for interest on those bonds; and, remember, about 60 percent of the Government bonds that are outstanding today, Government securities, are owned by banking institutions. The banks have plenty of Government bonds; they are in a liquid condition. There is not much incentive to them to lend money out to private industry because the Government has gone into the business of subsidizing the banks and keeping them up. The bankers are no longer restless or uneasy at night because the Government of the United States is behind them subsidizing them, paying them plenty of money to operate, to run no risk; and the banks are ceasing to function as they should function.

EXPENSES OF FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS

Last year the expenses of the Federal Reserve banks were $29,220,000, total current expenses for the year. How much did they collect from the Government? They collected interest on Government securities for that year amounting to $37,529,000.

In other words, they collected $8,000,000 more in interest from the Government during that year 1933 than their total operating expenses for the year by using the credit of this Nation free of charge and charging the Government interest on obligations which they purchased with Government credit.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman tell us how much profit they made from their transit department in collection charges which they exacted from the banks in addition to the amount the gentleman has mentioned?

Mr. PATMAN. The losses ought to be determined. They had some losses. They have a bookkeeping system in the Federal Reserve banks that I have not been able to follow, and I have not seen any one able to comprehend the bookkeeping system of the Federal Reserve banks. That is no reflection on the system. It would have to be very plain and simple for me to understand it. I do not know how much they had in losses on the transactions to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. McFADDEN. The gentleman is making an interesting statement and is calling attention to matters which I have repeatedly called the attention of the House to and I may say to the gentleman that this matter can be corrected if this side of the House will cooperate and see that the resolution I have before the Judiciary Committee of the House is acted upon. That is an impeachment of the Federal Reserve System.

Mr. PATMAN. We have worked together on this for 3 or 4 years and the gentleman's party was in power when I started. I was not able to get any cooperation from them and I believe the gentleman also appeared before the Rules Committee several times when I appeared. We both appeared for the same purpose, namely, getting an investigation of the United States Treasury and of the Federal Reserve System.

Mr. McFADDEN. This is not a political matter.

GET THE TRUTH TO THE PEOPLE

Mr. PATMAN. This is not a political matter and I think the first thing to do is to give the people the truth about the situation. When you get the truth to the people you will not have to worry about action. They will see that Congress takes action. Congress is responsible, and we as Members of Congress are responsible. We as a body, the House of Representatives, are sitting idly by when we know that the greatest privilege on earth has been farmed out to special interests to issue blanket mortgages on all our property in order to make money for themselves and to charge interest rates to people who obtain this money.

WHAT IS REMEDY?

With regard to the remedy, may I say that the first thing the Government should do is to take over the Federal Reserve banks. Just give the member banks credit on the books of the Federal Reserve for this $140,000,000 and then take them over. When the Government takes over the Federal Reserve banks, the banks can then issue money, extend loans and credit not only to national banks and to the member banks of the Federal Reserve but to State banks as well, to building and loan companies as well, and to any kind of an organization that needs the credit of this Nation. The profits would go to the Treasury.

Why should a few people have a monopoly on this credit? This is the first step that should be taken by this Government. The Government should take over the Federal Reserve banks and after that there are other steps that should be taken.

FORD-EDISON PLAN

Back in 1922 Henry Ford asked Thomas A. Edison to get up a plan that would help the farmers. Mr. Edison made the following statement, and I will read one short paragraph:

Some months ago Mr. Ford asked me to see if I could not invent some plan for helping the farmers. I have approached the matter in the same way I do with a mechanical or other invention, namely, get all the facts as far as possible and then see what can be done to solve the problem.

After Mr. Edison worked about a year he presented a plan in December 1922, that I feel is up to date now. It received very little consideration then and has received but slight notice or attention since that time. I think this is the proper time to give it some attention. His plan was to let the Government build and operate licensed warehouses where all nonperishable farm products could be stored. I am from a cotton section. Taking cotton for instance, a farmer could take a bale of cotton to the nearest warehouse. This cotton would be graded, weighed, and classed, and placed in the warehouse. If cotton over a period of 25 years has been selling for 12 cents a pound on an average, the Government would advance to the farmer 6 cents a pound, which would be just one half the price of cotton over a 25-year period. The Government would not be running any risk at all, because the price would be based on an average price over 25 years. The amount advanced would be 6 cents a pound or $30 a bale. Mr. Edison said the Government should loan the farmer this credit free of charge and that the Government should issue to him Federal Reserve notes or similar notes that the farmer would not pay one penny's interest on, thereby using free of charge a part of the credit of his Nation that he has helped build. To the extent of that small insignificant amount the farmer will be using the credit of the Nation free. In addition to this $30 the man would be given an equity certificate in the other half of the cotton. He could take the equity certificate to his private banker, merchant, or anyone else and use it as collateral for loans. The man would not be permitted to keep the cotton indefinitely, neither would he be permitted to keep coal which at that time was classed as one of the commodities, neither would he be allowed to keep wheat or anything else except for a period of 6 to 12 months, not long enough to allow him to use it purely for speculation.

If this plan had been adopted, every farmer and many others in the country would have been allowed in a small way to have used the credit of his Nation free of charge up to a reasonable amount.

The same plan could be used to help home owners. Why could there not be some limit placed on security—good security, the best on earth—so that any person could use the credit of his Nation up to a certain amount free of charge, just like the Federal Reserve banks now use the credit of the Nation?

WHAT THOMAS A. EDISON PROPOSED

Construction by the Government of warehouses where certain farm products can be stored.

Immediate loan to the farmer of one half the value of the products stored, value for the purpose to be based on the average price of the products for a 25-year period.

Issuance to the farmer of a certificate for his equity in the stored products, which certificate can be sold or used as bank collateral for an additional loan.

Loans to be made with Federal Reserve notes, the notes to be canceled when the loans are canceled. No interest on the loan.

If the price of the commodity goes up, the farmer will get the benefit. If it goes down, he will stand the loss, through increase or decrease in the value of his equity certificate.

To prevent utilization of the plan for speculative purposes products stored must be withdrawn within 1 year. Unless withdrawn within 1 year, products will be sold at auction, the loan canceled, and the balance delivered to the owner in return for his equity certificate.

Objects: To permit the farmer to sell his product as it is consumed instead of compelling him to glut the market by selling all at once; to permit the farmer immediate cash on his products as the gold miner does; to give the country a nonfluctuating currency.

His plan is entitled "A Proposed Amendment to the Federal Reserve Banking System."

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD and to insert certain tables and other information and data in regard to the subject matter I am discussing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

$8,000,000,000 NEW MONEY CAN BE ISSUED NOW

Mr. PATMAN. We really need an additional circulating medium.

The following letter and table are self-explanatory:

FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD,
Washington, March 31, 1934.

Hon. ROBERT L. OWEN,
Wardman Park Hotel, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. OWEN: Pursuant to your request, I am enclosing a table containing available figures of deposits of all banks in the United States. The figures in the first column include total deposits, exclusive of interbank deposits, for all banks as compiled by the Federal Reserve Board from reports received from the Comptroller of the Currency and from the State banking departments in each State. The figures in the three remaining columns were compiled by the savings division of the American Bankers' Association, and apparently exclude not only interbank deposits but also certified and cashiers' checks, cash letters of credit, travelers' checks outstanding, and deposits of States, counties, municipalities, and of the Federal Government.

It is estimated that total deposits, exclusive of interbank deposits, of all banks in the United States were turned over about 22 or 23 times in 1929 and at present they are being turned over at the rate of about 11 times per annum.

Very truly yours,

CARL E. PARRY,
Assistant Director of Research and Statistics.

Enclosure.

[1] Compiled by savings division, American Banker's Association.
[2] Compiled by the Federal Reserve Board.
NOTE.—Inclusive of mutual savings banks.

You should multiply the amount of deposits for 1929 by 22 to determine the amount of business done by these deposits in that year. Multiply the deposits for 1933 by 11 and you will determine our business for the year 1933 was short by almost $1,000,000,000. There is one way this condition can be remedied, and that is by putting out some real money. Eight billion dollars can be issued right now on the idle, unencumbered, unobligated gold that is in the Treasury, not counting the gold owned by Federal Reserve banks.

Mention has been made of tax-exempt bonds here today. I would not issue any more tax-exempt bonds, not another penny's worth of them, but I would gradually and eventually pay off every dime of tax-exempt bonds we have out today with new currency. You would not have undue inflation in that way if you changed the banking laws at the same time.

MONEY OR CREDIT

The other day before the Senate Committee on Agriculture the distinguished gentleman who was representing the Federal Reserve Board, Dr. Goldenweiser, the economist, was testifying. The chairman of the committee permitted me to ask him a few questions and I asked him if it would be a helpful condition if the banks of this country were to extend $20,000,000,000 of additional credit within the next 12 months or 2 years and his answer was substantially to the effect that it would be a very helpful condition because it would extend more credit and this credit would turn over, and with the turn-over there would be increased business, and this would be helpful. I said, "All right, Dr. Goldenweiser, suppose we just issue $20,000,000,000 of money; would not that be helpful?" In substance, he said, "No; because each dollar issued would go into the banks and the dollar would be used as a basis for the issuance of 10 additional credit dollars. Therefore we could have $200,000,000,000 in credit, wild inflation, and destruction of our monetary system." I answered Dr. Goldenweiser in this way: I said, "Yes; but you are presupposing that we cannot change our banking laws. Suppose, as we issue this money, we change the reserve requirements of banks and instead of their being able to issue 10 credit dollars for every $1 of reserve, they can only issue $5 or $4 or $3 or $2", and the chairman of the committee, Senator SMITH, said, "Yes; or no credit dollars at all; just be permitted to lend out the actual money they have and nothing more."

This is a complete answer to that argument. You can have this country on a currency basis. There is no question on earth about it. Dr. Goldenweiser later admitted it. You can have a currency basis the same as a credit basis. The only difference is that if you have currency nobody is paying interest on this money that is outstanding. If you have credit, somebody is paying interest on it every day that it is outstanding.

PEOPLE SAVED $11,000,000,000 INTEREST ON SO-CALLED "GREENBACKS"

I was reading the other day the hearings on the Goldsborough bill, and I noticed a statement put in there by Mr. Robert Harris, of New York, in regard to the United States notes that are outstanding.

In 1862 there was issued by this Government between three and four hundred million dollars of United States notes. Not a penny of gold was behind these notes. The credit of the Nation was behind the notes. This was during the War between the States, and when General Early, of Southern Confederacy fame, was about to take Washington and the Union was about to fall, these notes depreciated in value down to about 35 cents on the dollar. They only had the credit of the Government behind them; but when the Union was successful, these notes came back 100 cents on the dollar. The Government did put some gold behind them, but that was not the reason they came back 100 percent. It was because the credit of the Nation was restored. They have remained 100 percent ever since. This money is in circulation today—$346,000,000 of it. The people have been saved more than $11,000,000,000 of interest on that money on the basis of 5 percent, as this table discloses. If the people can save $11,000,000,000 in interest from 1862 to now on $346,000,000, how much will the people be able to pay and how much will they be required to pay on this $25,000,000,000 or $30,000,000,000 debt we have? This is a question we must consider.

IDIOTIC MONEY SYSTEM

So the point is that it is not right for the Government to pay interest upon its own credit. It is an idiotic and imbecilic system that we have that this Government, in order to get $1,000,000, will issue a million dollars in tax-exempt, interest-bearing bonds.

These bonds are sold to a banking institution. The banking institution does not pay money for the bonds. The banking institution gives credit for the bonds on the books of the bank and then if it wants money it will bring the million dollars of bonds back to the Treasury where they were purchased and get $1,000,000 in new money that is printed over here at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. They leave on deposit only 5 percent as a redemption fund, which is never needed and has never been used. This money is issued upon a Government debt. If the Government can issue, as Thomas Edison said, a dollar bond that is tax-exempt and interest-bearing that is good, that same Government can issue a dollar bill that bears no interest that is just as good.

PEOPLE STUDYING MONEY QUESTION

There is no answer to this argument. Nobody attempts to answer it. They will try to confuse you by saying that this money question is too complicated and too intricate for you to understand and do not try to understand it; but the people of this country are studying it today as they have never studied it before and I believe the time is coming, and not in the far distant future, when we will have some very interesting monetary reforms.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. PARSONS. I wonder if the gentleman has compared the operations of the Federal Reserve System with the operations of the Bank of France or the operations of the Bank of England with reference to their policy of handling credit for the government and various banking institutions.

Mr. PATMAN. Take France. Three individuals, in some cases I understand two of proven solvency can take their obligations to the Bank of France and get money. If we had a similar situation over here, you would not have to go to the bank and have the bank go to the Federal Reserve System, but an individual or an industry could go directly to the Federal Reserve bank and get credit.

The time of Mr. PATMAN having expired, he was given 5 minutes more.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes.

Mr. PARSONS. If the French Government needs $100,000,000 or $200,000,000, it goes immediately to the Bank of France, and the Bank of France issues the currency on the credit of France. The Government takes the currency, uses it, for which it pays the bank one half of 1 percent.

Mr. PATMAN. If you will take the Federal Reserve Bulletin for March, page 86, you will find where the credit has been extended to our Government for as little as 1 cent for a hundred dollars per year. That was last August, when the Government borrowed money for 1 cent for the use of a hundred dollars for 1 year. That was the rate that was paid. It seems small, but do not overlook the fact we were buying our own credit.

FEDERAL RESERVE BANK OF NEW YORK VISITED

The other day a large group of Members of Congress had the privilege of going through the great Federal Reserve Bank of New York. On the tenth floor we were shown the directors' room. I asked the man who was showing us through, "Where is the Federal Reserve agent's room?" He carried us into an adjoining room and said, "Here is the Federal Reserve agent's room. This belongs to the Federal Reserve agent." I said, "Where is the room of the chairman of the board?" He carried me across the hall and said, "Here is the room of the chairman of the board." There was a desk there, and places for two or three assistants. I said, "Why should he have two offices?" There is only one man for both places?" The Federal Reserve agent is the chairman of the board. When he sits across the hall in the Federal Reserve agent's room he is supposed to look out for the protection of the people. When he crosses the hall he becomes chairman of the board of directors, and he is looking out for their interests, the protection of the member banks of the country.

WHAT THE GOOD BOOK SAYS

You know that we are told by the Good Book that no man can serve two masters. The Federal Reserve agent as chairman of the board is serving two masters; he has a dual relationship. He serves two masters, or is supposed to serve two masters.

The point is this: The Federal Reserve agent wants new money—Federal Reserve notes. He wires the Bureau of Engraving and Printing through the United States Treasury and says, "Print the bank $10,000,000 of new currency." They print it, because he represents the Government. The law says that when this money is printed, which is a blanket mortgage, and is delivered from the Federal Reserve agent to the chairman of the board an interest rate shall be charged, but that interest rate has never been charged. They are using the credit of this Nation free. We would probably not have a deficit today if an interest rate had been charged. There is no reason why the Government should pay a billion dollars a year interest, or even a million dollars a year interest, for that matter, if we will do just what the Constitution of this country says we should do, and that is not to delegate this great authority out to private bankers and to a few individuals for their own profit, to use in any way they choose, but take that power and authority back to ourselves and regulate money as the Constitution says we should regulate it. And I hope that this Congress before it closes will take some long and substantial steps in the direction of bringing us back to the Constitution in that respect. [Applause.]

Mr. FOULKES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOULKES. Mr. Speaker, after all this discussion of the past few days concerning the possibility of a fundamental social change in this country, the Nazi movement, the absurd assertions of Dr. William Wirt, and the habitually emotional and hysterical outbursts of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], I feel that it is entirely in order to make some detailed observations on the whole matter.

As some of you are aware, I received a telegram from Dr. Wirt in which he quoted a statement of Secretary of Agriculture Wallace to the effect that we must "decide which way we want to go" with reference to the economic system. The quotation from Secretary Wallace was made by Dr. Wirt in connection with Dr. Wirt's effort to wriggle out of the debate to which he virtually challenged me in the first place, in which I was willing to participate, and from which he later seemed to shrink. That is not so important. I merely accepted the invitation of the Washington Open Forum to take part in such a debate after Dr. Wirt had issued what amounted to a challenge to me to discuss the whole matter with him. The fact that he later seems to have acquired a case of "cold feet" was, no doubt, fortunate for me. I am busy enough as it is, without engaging in a debate with a school teacher who, as I have pointed out, is really aiding Hitlerism in America, and who, it seems, is so innocent of the implications of his own conduct that he does not realize its consequences.

In quoting Secretary Wallace's statement, however, Dr. Wirt rendered a service, for the Secretary's statement that the American people must decide which way they want to go is entirely correct and very much to the point.

After having lived under a dictatorship of plutocracy that has slowly but steadily grown more cruel, merciless, and intolerable, it is highly proper that we take stock of ourselves and, as Secretary Wallace said, "decide which way we want to go." Millions of people in these United States have already reached the conclusion that we do not want to go further in the old direction. They have had enough of poverty, destitution, and suffering for the many; and luxury, ease, and indolence for the few. They know that we are at the crossroads, the dividing point, the turning of the ways, and that we must soon make the decision as to the future course we shall pursue. [Applause.]

The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] has expressed profound concern and wept copious crocodile tears because, in his opinion, the Democratic Party is being used to establish a gradual form of socialism in this country. Although he swears allegiance to the Republican Party and its most reactionary doctrines, he professes deep interest in maintaining the integrity of the Democracy and in keeping it safe from any taint of radicalism. It is too bad about Mr. FISH! I like him personally and I am sorry to see so much time, energy, and talent go to waste, but I suppose his habits are too firmly settled to expect him to reform at this late date.

It has not dawned upon him that the Democratic Party in its origin was a radical party and that the clearest thinkers and finest characters among the founding fathers of this Republic were radicals. It does not occur to him that a courageous radicalism today, instead of being reprehensible, is to be commended and is just what the Nation needs.

As a matter of fact, there is no socialism—much less any communism—in the Roosevelt administration. But if it should, in the course of time, happen that certain members of the official family come to realize that we are on the verge of a vast social change, that we must reorganize our economic structure even if such a reorganization should be considered communistic or socialistic, it would be a very creditable and intelligent attitude. It has frequently been remarked that "wise men change their minds, fools and dead men never." I certainly hope that there are a number of men in the administration who grasp the truth that old things are passing away in the industrial world and that the social structure must be changed from top to bottom. I should dislike to think that our public officials are all so obtuse, blind, and, in ordinary slang, "dumb" as not to realize this. [Applause.]

Instead of being alarmed because several department officials have a social vision and believe that human needs should be supplied even if it is necessary to scrap some of the outworn ideals and statutes of the past, the gentleman from New York should be gratified. So should the gentleman from Texas [Mr. EAGLE], who, in a recent meeting of the dairy bloc, intimated that he was afraid President Roosevelt wanted to sovietize the country. So should the arch defender of protectionism, Dr. CROWTHER, of Schenectady, N.Y. So should the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], the undoubted candidate of reaction for the Presidency in 1936. There has been little enough accomplished in the way of improvement, God knows. Suffering is rampant from coast to coast. The cries of the hungry, the homeless, and the jobless, rise to high heaven in a pitiful chorus of agony. The new deal, after all is said and done, has relieved human suffering in the United States very little. It is well that more attention is being paid to the needs of our people today than was given in the days when heartless Hooverism ruled the land, but the relief rendered has been so slight that any complaint from Mr. FISH and his aristocratic companions is a ghastly joke.

If the Democratic Party should have the wisdom, sagacity, and prophetic vision to espouse the cause of a social order based on cooperation and not on competition and exploitation, it would become the great emancipator of the American people from a slavery as galling and black as that which once held down the Negroes in bitter bondage. [Applause.]

Will the Democratic Party measure up to such an opportunity? Can it meet the occasion? Can it do less? In the light of events of the past few decades it is hard to hope for such a development. When one recalls the prostitution of the Democratic Party to the gold standard, and when one reflects on the vicious Prussianism that prevailed in the name of a pretended "war for democracy", when liberty was throttled from coast to coast and the finest of our citizenship was being jailed, lynched, and tarred and feathered for exposing the mercenary motives back of war, can we hope to see the Democratic Party today become a party of social justice and to free itself from capitalistic control? I am a Democrat, a member of a Democratic family, with a Democratic background, and with deep and strongly established admiration for the Democratic Party. [Applause.]

Yet, fellow Members of the House of Representatives, and fellow Democrats in particular, do we not know that Thomas Jefferson was an uncompromising, unrelenting radical whose fiery statements would, in this corrupt and later day, have caused the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], and the prosperous and astute leader of the minority [Mr. SNELL] to want to lock him in a penitentiary for the rest of his natural life?

Experience—

Said Thomas Jefferson—

declares that man is the only animal which devours his own kind; for I can apply no milder term to the governments of Europe and to the general prey of the rich on the poor.

Now, as I understand it—and in spite of the spasms and tremors of the gentleman from New York and Mr. Ralph Easley, the tiresome gentleman of the National Civic Federation, and Gen. Amos A. Fries, who was so embarrassingly repulsed in a major battle some years ago when he tried to get a Socialist school teacher in Washington fired and failed, and all the others who are either hired tools of Wall Street or fidgety old ladies shivering for fear of "big, bad wolves" and "big red Communists"—as I understand it, intelligent radicals do not advocate armed revolution and never have, but they have a strong suspicion that, if they win elections and get control legally, the profiteers and grafters will precipitate violence by refusing to obey the laws, thereby causing bloodshed. That is, as I am advised, the entire basis of the claim that radicals advocate violence. They do not advocate it at all—none of them have ever done so, except where capitalists have planted stool pigeons and agents in their midst to provoke trouble. They expect trouble, to be sure. They do not intend to start the trouble. They took it for granted that the capitalists will do the starting. If so, they, the radicals, have made it clear that they intend to end the trouble.

For your information, Thomas Jefferson, who in some respects was more radical than the Communists of 1934, made this statement:

The tree of liberty must be refreshed from time to time with the blood of patriots and tyrants.

On one occasion he remarked that a little rebellion, now and then, was a good thing for any people. At another time he declared that no constitution ought to be in effect more than 20 years.

If Foster or Thomas had made such statements in our time, I have no doubt that the gentleman from New York, and others who believe in the inherent virtue of stagnation and dry rot, would have attempted to send them to Fort Leavenworth.

What sickening hypocrisy when the spokesman for reaction talks to us about preserving the integrity of the Democratic Party, utterly unconscious of the splendid assertion of Thomas Jefferson, who said:

And let us reflect that, having banished from our land that religious intolerance under which mankind so long bled and suffered, we have yet gained little if we countenance a political intolerance as despotic, as wicked and capable of as bitter and bloody persecution.

I commend to the thoughtful consideration of my friend Mr. FISH and the minority leader, Mr. SNELL, and the chief champion of the protective tariff, Dr. CROWTHER, this fine statement of the principle of tolerance from the pen of the immortal Jefferson.

And I call to their attention another and even more vigorour statement from this great Democrat—a statement which involves granting to every champion of social change the fullest and freest right to express his opinions even if they should mean the complete overthrow of the present social system and the present system of government. These are the words, and they are the words of Thomas Jefferson, not of William Z. Foster, nor of Norman Thomas, nor of Joseph Stalin, nor of Nicholas Lenin, nor of Karl Marx:

If there be any among us who wish to dissolve this Union or to change its republican form, let them stand undisturbed as monuments of the safety with which error of opinion may be tolerated where reason is left free to combat it.

Such a magnificent expression of the spirit of free speech, freedom of opinion, and freedom of conscience is as contrary to the viciousness of mind that characterizes our red baiters as gorgeous sunlight is contrary to blackest midnight.

So much for freedom of belief, which is guaranteed by the American Constitution and a part of our fundamental law.

Now, for another important point. There is plenty of prevalent nonsense about alien radicalism. Let me disabuse the minds of some good people of the delusion that radicalism is alien. When I use the word "radical" I use it in the correct sense as meaning someone who believes in a change at the base of things, a root change. Those convinced that there must be a root change in the social structure in the United States are by no means altogether aliens—only a minority of them are in this category. Radicalism is as native to American soil as conservatism—more so.

Read the writings of Thomas Jefferson, from whom I have quoted. Read Franklin, Paine, Madison, Henry, and others of the time—many of whom had absorbed the iconoclasm of the Jacobins of the French Revolution. Any public library contains plenty of proof that collectivism was advocated in the United States by able Americans long before Karl Marx and Frederic Engels wrote the Communist Manifesto. The ideal of the social ownership of the means of production and distribution is not confined to thinkers of any one land. Economists, philosophers, and statesmen of all countries have conceived of it. Why not? Did you expect science, truth, and common sense to be limited to one region, one national tract of land, one chunk of soil?

Many men in many lands have reached common conclusions about the multiplication table, the law of gravitation, and the roundness of the earth. Why should they not reach common conclusions about the inefficiency and the injustice of the present social system and the necessity for establishing another? Who cares where an idea originates if it is rational and logical? Who cares whether the Arabs or the Scandinavians or the Fiji Islanders invented the multiplication table? Who cares whether Jews or Gentiles, Protestants or Catholics, or nonchurch members discovered the law of gravitation?

No; radicalism is not alien. It is as much American as it is German or French or Russian or British. And it does not matter what it is, so far as inception is concerned. All that matters is whether it is reasonable, just, and scientific.

The Declaration of Independence was radical and constituted a deliberate defiance of established authority. Obviously, the same was true of the Revolutionary War. Radicalism was the very soul of the Jeffersonianism of 1800 and the years that followed. Andrew Jackson was a radical, and when he was made President of the United States he came into power as the candidate of a Democratic Party backed by primitive labor unions and the angry agrarian elements of the South and West who were desirous of breaking the power of the mercantile and banking interests of the East and North. In a sense, Jackson may be termed the first Farmer-Labor President of the United States. The abolition movement was a radical movement—an assault on the so-called "rights" of private property, a warfare against the legitimate business of owning human beings and peddling them on the auction block. The abolition of slavery, while a step in the right direction, has less value than was expected, since it merely wiped out direct slavery and did not affect the indirect slavery that is inseparable from the capitalist system—the slavery of the man who must work for a capitalist at the capitalist's own terms or starve to death. But the abolition of chattel slavery was unquestionably radical; and I am trying to emphasize that every forward step in human history has been radical in the sense that it meant an important divergence from previous policies.

Let us come to another important point. It is the point that there are many capable and conscientious American Communists and Socialists. The screams and outbursts against alien radicals are without foundation. Truth is international, and it is not required that facts must be discovered in one's own country in order to gain recognition, but it will probably soothe and relieve certain reactionaries and "Nervous Nellies" if they realize that an American discovered the truth as soon as a native of a foreign land.

These hysterical complainants against the increasing popularity of the idea that government ownership and operation of industries may be a sensible innovation either do not know or pretend that they do not know how natively American is this doctrine of government ownership. If they will consult their American histories, they will find that Horace Greeley, Ralph Waldo Emerson, Albert Brisbane (father of Arthur Brisbane), Nathaniel Hawthorne, James Russell Lowell, and many other brilliant thinkers were interested in Brook Farm, one of the outstanding experiments in American communism, in which the social ownership and management of a community was attempted. I might add that Marx, author of the Communist Manifesto, was foreign correspondent for Horace Greeley's paper, the New York Tribune.

It seems to me a tremendous waste of time and effort to seek to establish the American origin of a fact, a philosophy, or a movement. How much more intelligent to recognize truth wherever it comes from and to realize that merit is what counts, not the color of one's skin or the national label one has attached to him? Yet, since some people are so bothered about the matter of nationality, let us make it clear, once and for all, that the proposal to have the Government own and operate the industries is as natively American as the idea of letting corporations own and operate them. With this point disposed of, perhaps we can consider the question itself. Evidently we cannot do so otherwise. Apparently the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] and the rest of the worried defenders of the sacredness of privately owned fortunes, will not permit consideration of any suggestions coming from anybody whose ancestors did not arrive via the Mayflower.

Mind you, I am not at this time going into the subject of government ownership. That is sufficiently broad to justify a separate speech. All I wish to do just now is to make it clear to several badly misinformed legislators that communism and socialism are exactly as American as republicanism, democracy, and other political philosophies. Collectivism has had as valiant defenders among native American stock as it ever had among men and women born in other lands. The leaders of the Communist movement in this country—and of the Socialists—are Yankees, with the usual background of American wage workers. Naturally, communism and socialism have their followers in all countries, just as have Christianity, Judaism, and temperance. Why not? What of it?

No more unjust form of prejudice exists than that directed against people because of their complexion, their accent, and their birthplaces.

The Christian religion is international and has followers in all lands. Has anybody suggested prosecuting the followers of Jesus of Nazareth because he was not born on American soil? No doubt Hitler would have recommended his crucifixion because he was a Jew. [Applause.]

Does anybody in his right mind advocate discrimination against musicians whose parentage was not on "the sidewalks of New York" or my own congressional district in Michigan or in the shadow of the General Electric Co. in Schenectady?

Are scientific inventions rejected because the inventor happened to be born in Belgium, Mesopotamia, Turkey, or Madagascar?

Now, if you can eliminate from your mind the objection against new ideas that may not have originated within the bounds of our own realm and proceed to consider these ideas on their merits, you will make a noticeable bit of progress.

This brings us to the question raised by Secretary Wallace in, "America must choose."

In considering it, I hope that we shall not allow extraneous matters to be dragged in.

I have attempted to point out to you that collectivism must be considered per se, free from the prejudice and passion associated with race, creed, color, and nationality. Whatever Dr. Wirt does to focus attention on this matter, is highly commendable. I am glad he has stirred up this discussion of economic problems—of the question whether we can continue along existing lines or must adopt a new program. Such a discussion is bound to prove informing and is to be welcomed. I give Dr. Wirt full credit for starting it. But he is on the wrong side of the fence and he will be disappointed in his hope that the people of the country will be shocked and angry because of progressive tendencies in the administration. What the people want is, not less radicalism, but more. They are not frightened at the prospect of Government interference with business. On the contrary, they are exasperated because the Government did not interfere long before this with the shameful robbery that has impoverished our citizens.

In a country whose Government was established through a revolution, suggestions of change ought not to excite fears. No people should be less reluctant to consider new procedure than the American people. In no spot on the earth should hard-boiled reaction and stubborn attachment to ancient ideas be less liked. The very spirit of America is that of progress, of change, of advancement, "Sail on"—the thought of pioneering into new realms, into uncharted seas, is the very essence of Americanism. [Applause.]

So much is said about things that are "American" and "un-American." Nothing is more un-American than adherence to obsolete opinions and a system that has served its purpose. Instead of shunning innovations and evading the duty of considering reforms, let us look them frankly in the face and give them impartial consideration.

> You cannot salt the eagle's tail,
> Nor limit thought's dominion;
> You cannot put ideas in jail—
> You can't deport opinion.

> By exile and by prison,
> Truth has been crushed and palled in black,
> Yet truth has always risen.

Our beloved Mark Twain in his Connecticut Yankee gave a definition of loyalty that is as far from the Wall Street definition as night from day, and that ought to be an inspiration to all of us:

> You see, my kind of loyalty was loyalty to one's country, not to institutions or its officeholders. The country is the real thing; it is the thing to watch over and care for and be loyal to; institutions are extraneous, they are its mere clothing, and clothing can wear out, become ragged, cease to be comfortable, cease to protect the body from winter, disease, and death. To be loyal to rags, to shout for rags, to worship rags, to die for rags—that is a loyalty of unreason; it is pure animal; it belongs to monarchy; was invented by monarchy; let monarchy keep it. I was from Connecticut, whose constitution declared "That all political power is inherent in the people, and all free governments are founded on their authority and instituted for their benefit, and that they have at all times an undeniable and indefensible right to alter their form of government in such a manner as they think expedient." Under that gospel, the citizen who thinks that the Commonwealth's political clothes are worn out and yet holds his peace and does not agitate for a new suit, is disloyal; he is a traitor. That he may be the only one who thinks he sees this decay does not excuse him; it is his duty to agitate, anyway, and it is the duty of others to vote him down if they do not see the matter as he does.

And if you are not willing to accept the advice and viewpoint of Mark Twain, perhaps you will agree with that of Abraham Lincoln, whose ringing words should have the reverent respect of every lover of liberty throughout all the ages:

> This country, with its institutions, belongs to the people who inhabit it. When they shall grow weary of the existing government, they can exercise their constitutional right of amending it or their revolutionary right to dismember or overthrow it!

[Applause.]

DISCONTINUE ADMINISTRATIVE FURLOUGHS IN THE POSTAL SERVICE

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker—

The postal employee is an anarchist whose sole aim is the crushing of the objects of the National Economy League.

Such is the accusation hurled against the postal employees by special corporate interests which grow fat on the heart's blood of the underpaid. Each side makes its complaints, but the plaints of the postal employees are the saddest of all.

With a long series of developments, culminating in service conditions so serious as to now hamper the efficiency of the Post Office Department, through the infliction of salary cuts, compulsory furloughs, the suspension of promotions, and the filling of vacancies, the wage income of postal workers has been sharply reduced. That life for most of the postal substitutes is a hand-to-mouth existence is acknowledged by the Post Office Department through its official order under date of March 30, 1934, over the signature of the Postmaster General. The order reads as follows:

In any cases where substitute employees are in need of this relief (referring to C.W.A.) and the local agencies refuse to grant proper consideration, the matter should first be taken up personally with the officer in charge of the local agency, and if the employee's efforts are without avail a report thereof should be submitted to the Department.

Charity in any form has always seemed an abhorrent thing, and it must be so especially to the postal substitutes.

The nature of the furlough order throwing 26,000 postal substitutes out of employment and curtailing the income of all others in the Postal Service on the very day when President Roosevelt called upon private employers to employ more at higher wages and shorter hours and "do it now" is increased to the point of irony by this frank admission that the situation of those most severely affected by the order is sufficiently desperate to be the subject of specific orders of the Department. How much better, more logical, and humane, then, to completely revocate orders issued March 2 by the Postmaster General.

Certainly, to my mind, the response given by the postal employees to the announced policy of placing the Post Office Department on a self-sustaining basis has been most gratifying and has been consistently observed. A further application of additional economies during the next 4 months, through the 4-day furlough of all postal officials and employees in the field service and the elimination of substitute employment, as well as the reduction of city deliveries to one a day and other far-reaching service changes would be imposing added pay cuts upon the postal workers.

Mr. Speaker, no one can quarrel with Government economies that reduce waste and curtail needless services. However, the post-office economies lower the employees' living standards, inconvenience the public, and add to the public relief burden. It is interesting to note that the administration itself finds it necessary to deal more realistically with hours and wages of certain groups of its own employees, while General Johnson appeals to employers to shorten working hours, increase wages, and hire more workers—exactly the opposite direction.

But what should be done to remedy existing evils? Some advocate the Golden Rule as a remedy capable of producing an effect. No doubt its application would be of immense benefit. But since the suggestions as to the adoption of the Golden Rule come mostly from the administration, we have good reasons to assume that the postal employee would be the fellow who would be expected to follow it, especially when it comes to dealing with Postmaster General's orders. The latter would scarcely consider himself bound by its precepts. At any rate, as long as such orders are issued as 1-day payless furlough every month and the elimination of substitute employment and other far-reaching service changes, we cannot believe the Post Office Department would be inclined to follow the dictates of the Golden Rule.

Someone once said, "There will be no industrial peace until every industrial worker receives an adequate share of the profits of his labor. It is unjust that the lion's share should be swallowed up by capital, while labor, the equal producer, should content itself with the leavings."

Mr. Speaker, the postal employee must eat, pay house rent, feed and clothe and rear his children just as an industrial worker must do. He must be guaranteed hours of toil that will not impair his health and undermine his strength. He must be given the opportunity to reap the benefits of the new deal just as the industrial worker has been given that opportunity through the National Recovery Administration. Industries and business houses of all classes report conditions are improving because public confidence is improving. The following Good Business News Notes were taken from a recent local publication:

One corporation increases, 2 vote extras, 1 pays initial and 1 accumulated dividends in day. Hard-coal output the past 2 months best for any like period in 8 years. January exports of automobiles highest of any month since August 1931. Atlantic Pacific sales rise 5.2 percent in latest 4-week period. United States Rubber Co. cuts 1933 loss to $606,337, from $10,358,374 in 1932. Class 1 railroads report $30,931,205 net operating earnings in January, comparing with $13,585,010 in like 1932 month. Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., reports long awaited upswing started in heavy industries, with wholesale and retail merchandising lines booming.

Why not elaborate on these flashes of good news by adding: "Post Office Department rescinds order dated March 2, 1934, with reference to payless furlough order"? Why should the regular employees—men and women who have given their life to public service at salaries small enough at any time—be subject to further reductions through the recent "furlough order"?

It inflicts harsh and unwarranted burdens on postal employees, and revocation should be made at once.

AIRCRAFT PROCUREMENT AND INCOME TAXES

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes and to revise and extend my remarks by the insertion of certain statistical matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to address the House at this time in regard to aircraft procurement, also particularly as it deals with the income-tax phases of the different aircraft companies selling equipment to our Government.

On March 29 I introduced a bill (H.R. 8891) that amends our income-tax laws in certain particulars, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 13 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1932 is amended to read as follows:

"(a) Rate of tax: There shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the net income of every corporation a tax of 13¾ percent of the amount of the net income: Provided, That the tax levied, collected, and paid in the case of a corporation which derives, within the taxable year, income from a Government contract or contracts shall be the sum of (1) 13¾ percent of the net income attributable to such Government contract or contracts, and (2) 13¾ percent of the net income from other sources.

"For the purposes of this section the net income attributable to such Government contract or contracts shall be the gross amount of the income received within the taxable year from such Government contract or contracts less the deductions allowed by section 23 and properly allocable to such Government contract or contracts. The allocation of the deductions with respect to gross income derived from such Government contract or contracts and from other sources, respectively, shall be determined under rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary."

SEC. 2. Section 141 (d) of the Revenue Act of 1932 is amended to read as follows:

"(d) Definition of 'affiliated group': As used in this section an 'affiliated group' means one or more chains of corporations connected through stock ownership with a common parent corporation if—

"(1) At least 90 percent of the stock of each of the corporations (except the common parent corporation) is owned directly by one or more of the other corporations; and

"(2) The common parent corporation owns directly at least 90 percent of the stock of at least one of the other corporations.

"The term 'affiliated group' does not include a corporation which derived, within the taxable year, income from a Government contract or contracts. As used in this subsection the term 'stock' does not include nonvoting stock which is limited and preferred as to dividends."

SEC. 3. Section 1111 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1932 is amended by adding a new paragraph to read as follows:

"(15) The term 'Government contract' means (a) a contract made with the United States, or with any department, bureau, officer, commission, board, or agency, under the United States and acting in its behalf, or with any agency controlled by any of the above if the contract is for the benefit of the United States; or (b) a subcontract made with a contractor performing such a contract if the products or services to be furnished under the subcontract are for the benefit of the United States."

SEC. 4. The provisions of this act shall apply only to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1933.

This bill was introduced as a result of the study that I have made of the income-tax returns of the different companies selling the Navy aircraft equipment. I have in my office at this time a complete take-off of those income-tax figures relating to each company from 1929 to 1932, inclusive. I have in my hand a summary of the information contained in those returns, and it is about that information that I desire to speak to you at this time. There are four large holding companies controlling very largely the air industry today in this country, in all its different ramifications—transportation, manufacture, mail, local, and abroad. It may be of interest to you to know some of the salaries that have been paid by the Air Trust to some of their officers as shown by the income-tax returns filed by them insofar as the information is available at this time, as follows:

It may be especially of interest to some of the new Members to go into this matter just a little bit, to understand how this aircraft racket has worked in this country. The same crowd, very largely, that is in the saddle in the air industry today were in control of this industry during the war, and a study of the set-up of the personnel will convince you that that is true. Col. E. A. Deeds and H. E. Talbott, George B. Smith, Charles F. Kettering, and the others were connected directly or indirectly in the sale of aircraft equipment to the Government during the war, and they sold quite a lot of equipment and experience to the Government for which they and their friends collected more than a billion and a half of dollars, and according to the investigations and the records that have been made by Chief Justice Hughes, who at that time made a personal investigation at the request of the President, there were something like 100 observation planes being used on the front in France at the signing of the Armistice. There were something like 215 or 220 more such planes at the front subject to being used. That is what the United States realized out of an investment of more than a billion and a half dollars.

Studying the air industry from that time down to date, we learn quite a lot of interesting things about the maneuvers and the activities of this group. They have not been interested in developing aircraft equipment and warplane engines to improve the efficiency of our national defense. They have been interested only in one thing, and that is selling the Government equipment for the best price obtainable, and they have gone into this matter with that primarily in view. We find these holding corporations paying their officers large salaries as shown by the above tables.

You will notice that in 1929 the Pratt Whitney Aircraft Co. paid its president, Mr. Fred Rentsler, $380,668.04 and the same year he received $35,000.07 as president of the United Aircraft & Transportation Corporation and quite a few of the officers of the subsidiaries of this and other holding corporations were drawing similar salaries from the subsidiaries and the holding corporations through such manipulations.

AIRPLANE-ENGINE MANUFACTURERS

We find that in 1926 there was but one large airplane-engine manufacturing concern in this country, Wright Aeronautical Co., and during 1926 we find Colonel Deeds, Rentsler, and others organizing the Pratt Whitney Aircraft Corporation to manufacture airplane engines. Testimony before our committee showed the stock of this concern on organization had no value; however, shortly thereafter, when they had secured enormous Government contracts, their stock was placed on the board at $97 per share, and within a short period of time increased to $336 per share. This company and the Wright Aeronautical Corporation comprise the two principal airplane-engine manufacturing concerns in the United States, and, according to the testimony before our committee, there is very little competition between them in the different categories in the sale of their equipment to the Navy Department.

We find them making enormous profits. We find that when the different investigation committees were checking them a little too closely they then organized holding corporations.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. McFARLANE] has expired.

Mr. McFARLANE. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. McFARLANE. Under the law which they and others succeeded in having passed permitting them to file consolidated returns, they have defrauded our Government out of millions of dollars.

Mr. GOSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. GOSS. Will the gentleman be good enough, having made these accusations, to tell us where they have defrauded the Government?

Mr. McFARLANE. I am going to put these charts in the RECORD.

Mr. GOSS. Will the gentleman tell us now? I am interested. As the gentleman knows, I am a member of a committee which is studying that question now.

Mr. McFARLANE. Very well. I will give the gentleman the information right now.

Mr. GOSS. I say that, because the Government is supposed to audit these concerns.

Mr. McFARLANE. That is true. The hearings before the Naval Affairs Committee show that they wrote letters to these different concerns, telling them they were going to come up there and check their books, and they came up there and they looked over their books, made their examination. They did not call it an audit. They called it an examination of their books. Then they returned to Washington. That is the only audit that we have. We do not have men located in their plants particularly checking the overhead, as to what officials are working on Government contracts and what are working on commercial contracts. We have no one checking the accuracy of their accounts. And according to their own books and figures they are making enormous profits.

Mr. GOSS. Now, I have been over some of the audits personally. I am not particularly taking the floor to defend those, because we are in the midst of our investigation, but I want to say that they have separated out the overheads on what has been spent on Army and Navy contracts versus commercial contracts.

Mr. McFARLANE. Answering the gentleman, I will say that I will furnish the gentleman with a copy of the hearings before the Committee on Naval Affairs. As to the break-down for Army, Navy, and commercial, yes; those three are separated, but the point I am making is that there was not any Government official present at any of their plants making that separation and checking the personnel to see that the division of labor, as to the kind and character of work being performed, the wages paid, and so forth, was fair to the Government, and we simply took their ipse dixit as to what the separation was.

Mr. GOSS. We had an auditor from the War Department testify before the Military Affairs Committee under oath that he did make the separation.

Mr. McFARLANE. If they had that in the Military Affairs Committee, and you check them closely, I imagine you will find they did the same as they did in the Naval Affairs Committee. It is not their fault. It is the fault of Congress, because we have not enacted laws and made appropriations requiring those things. They took their own audit, their own figures.

They have a right to require further information if they want it, but on particular questioning of the gentleman who makes these audits for the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts for the Navy, it was shown that they did not maintain any personnel in any one of these plants for the purpose of checking these things over, as to what part of the personnel is being used in commercial phases, as to what personnel is being used in Army or Navy contracts or in other Government contracts.

Mr. GOSS. I do not want to interrupt the gentleman, but I hope he will confine his remarks to the investigation before the Naval Affairs Committee, because I do not know anything about the Navy. I am on the Military Affairs Committee, and the gentleman has not attended the meetings before that committee. We are going to make a full report, and I do not think the gentleman should confuse the two Departments.

Mr. McFARLANE. We brought out all this information in the Naval Affairs Committee and the complete breakdown as it was furnished by these concerns to the Navy Department are in the record of our hearings. Of course, the gentleman's committee will make their own report.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. The gentleman made an interesting statement, in that all that the Government got for over a billion dollars was 300 airplanes.

Mr. McFARLANE. That much in use at the front. We got a lot of experience, and some planes that were considered obsolete that were delivered later on, but that is all that we received at the time of the signing of the armistice.

Mr. DONDERO. A rather expensive investment.

Mr. McFARLANE. A rather expensive investment, and we ought to profit by it. We ought to change a system of Government aircraft procurement that allows that to go on and continue, such as we are having today.

NO COMPETITION IN AIRCRAFT PROCUREMENT

It was the clearly expressed intention of the Aircraft Act of 1926 to permit procurement of experimental aircraft without competitive bidding. This act gave to the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy special privileges in this regard not allowed even other branches of the Government in the procurement of their aircraft. Their interpretation of Government contract was to prevail instead of the Comptroller's Department having the final say, as is the case of procurement of aircraft for the other six or seven departments of Government purchasing the same, and in this regard it may be pointed out that these other departments have been able to purchase their aircraft through competition considerably cheaper than have the Army and Navy where little or no competition has been had in such purchases.

It was the expressed intention of the Aircraft Act after the experimental stage had been passed to require open competitive bidding in the procurement of production contract. The negotiation stage had passed. The Government had decided what aircraft it wanted. Then in all fairness the act clearly specifies open competition must be had, but the records of the Comptroller's office show that both departments have continued to disregard the law and purchase a large part of their aircraft without open competitive bidding on production contracts. The law is plain and the legal staffs of both the Army and the Navy have clearly construed it as it is written, that the act requires open competitive bidding on production contracts. A bill to nullify this law was offered by Hon. CARL VINSON in January 1928, H.R. 9359, to permit procurement of production contracts without open competitive bidding, and this measure was not reported out of the Military Affairs Committee. This Congress should not adjourn until this matter is fully and completely gone into and the parties disregarding the clearly expressed intention of Congress dealt with accordingly.

INCOME TAX

Now, with regard to the income-tax phase of this question, I have before me here charts I have inserted in the RECORD, that shows how much these different aircraft concerns have saved for themselves through being allowed to file consolidated returns instead of being required to file separate returns on all Government contracts as required under the law of 1918.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. McFARLANE] has again expired.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it seems to me the gentleman should conclude in less time than that.

Mr. McFARLANE. I think I can conclude before that, but I would like to get as much as possible of this information before you.

Mr. TABER. If the gentleman would make it 3 minutes and then extend it in the RECORD.

Mr. McFARLANE. All right.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman from Texas is recognized for 3 additional minutes.

Mr. McFARLANE. We find that the Bendix Aviation Corporation has saved, through the filing of consolidated returns, and in the change of income-tax laws which have been changed since the law of 1918, the sum of $625,863.49 in money they would have been required to pay to the Government had the law not been changed and had they been required to file separate returns rather than consolidated returns.

The Curtiss-Wright Corporation saved $101,709.31 in the same way. The North American, or the General Motors Corporation, has saved $150,980.75. United Aircraft & Transport Corporation has saved $854,959.29. The Aviation Corporation of America has saved $313,454.44. These five holding corporations have saved primarily on Government contracts through the filing of consolidated returns $2,046,967.28.

This should be very significant to Congress as indicative of what is being saved by different corporations throughout the United States. In other words through the filing of consolidated returns they are depriving the Government of this amount of taxes. Reasoning the thing out a little further let us consider a family of 10 children, all of age and making good income. Is there any reason why these 10 separate families should be allowed to file a consolidated return and in this way deprive the Government of the tax it would receive did each of them file a separate return? Under existing law, however, the corporations are depriving this Government of millions of dollars through the filing of consolidated returns. It is not right; it is not fair; it is not just to the Government that this situation be allowed to continue.

We should speedily reenact into law the above measure which is in keeping with the same provision during the World War. If there ever was a time in the history of our country when we were at war it is now. We are in the midst of the greatest of all wars—to end the depression. We need more revenue from those most able to pay. If this measure was right during the World War, it is right now and should be enacted to raise more revenue for our badly depleted Treasury. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. ZIONCHECK, for today, on account of official business.

To Mr. RAMSPECK, for 5 days, on account of death in family.

To Mr. CROSBY, for 5 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. HESS, indefinitely, on account of illness.

PAYMENT OF BONUS

Mr. THOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOM. Mr. Speaker, in casting my vote against the immediate payment of the soldiers' bonus, I was controlled by the following considerations:

While business is showing remarkable improvement over the black conditions of a year ago, the volume of unemployment is still such that I feel our governmental borrowing and spending power should be chiefly employed until the end of this critical period to accomplish these objects:

First to insure that no person in the whole United States shall lack food; second, to furnish jobs at fair wages to as many able-bodied persons as possible through soundly conceived work programs in lieu of direct money or food grants.

Recognizing that there is a limit to our spending power unless we want to resort to printing-press money that would invite financial chaos such as we have just emerged from, after taking care of the objects enumerated above, I should be disposed if compatible with preserving the national credit to extend loans to our collapsing school system where such loans are imperative for its continuance and to hospitals in financial straits that minister to those who are in even more distress than the unemployed.

AMATEUR BOXING IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 828) to prevent professional prize fighting and to authorize amateur boxing in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, which were to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That (a) there is hereby created for the District of Columbia a boxing commission, to be composed of three members appointed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, one of whom shall be a member of the police department of the District of Columbia. No person shall be eligible for appointment to membership on the commission unless such person at the time of appointment is, and for at least 3 years prior thereto has been, a resident of the District of Columbia. The terms of office of the members of the commission first taking office after the approval of this act shall expire at the end of 2 years from the date of the approval of this act. A successor to a member of the commission shall be appointed in the same manner as the original members and shall have a term of office expiring 2 years from the date of the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed, except that any person appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed for the remainder of such term. The members of the commission shall receive no compensation for their services. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall furnish to the boxing commission such office space and clerical and other assistance as may be necessary.

(b) Subject to the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the commission shall have power (1) to cooperate with organizations engaged in the promotion and control of amateur boxing; (2) to supervise and regulate boxing within the District of Columbia; and (3) to make such orders, rules, and regulations as the commission deems necessary for carrying out the powers herein conferred upon it.

(c) No person shall hold a boxing exhibition in the District of Columbia without a permit from the commission. Each such permit shall be limited to a period of 1 day, except that in case of any interscholastic boxing meet or similar contest a permit may be issued for the duration of such meet or contest. No such permit shall be issued to any person unless such person agrees to accord to the commission the right to examine the books of accounts and other records of such person relating to the boxing exhibition for which such permit is issued, and such permit shall so state on its face. A permit may be revoked at any time in the discretion of the commission.

(d) No individual shall engage in any boxing exhibition in the District of Columbia without a license from the commission. Such license shall entitle the licensee to engage in amateur boxing exhibitions in the District of Columbia for the period specified therein, and the commission may revoke any such license at any time for violation by the licensee of any order, rule, or regulation of the commission, or for other cause.

(e) Any permit or license issued by the board shall not be valid for the purpose of holding or engaging in, respectively, any boxing exhibition which does not conform to the following conditions: (1) Such exhibition may consist of one or more bouts; (2) no round shall exceed 3 minutes; (3) there shall be an interval of 1 minute between each round and the succeeding round; and (4) each contestant shall use gloves of not less than 8 ounces each in weight.

(f) The commission may charge for permits and for licenses such fees as will, in its opinion, defray the cost of issuance thereof and other necessary expenses of the commission.

(g) Any person who (1) holds any boxing exhibition in the District of Columbia without a permit valid and effective at the time, or (2) engages in any boxing exhibition in the District of Columbia without a license valid and effectve at the time, or (3) violates any lawful order, rule, or regulation of the commission shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both.

(h) The term "person", as used in this act, includes individuals, partnerships, corporations, and associations.

And to amend the title so as to read: "A bill to authorize boxing in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes."

Mr. KING. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House of Representatives, ask a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. KING, Mr. COPELAND, and Mr. CAPPER conferees on the part of the Senate.

LOANS TO INDUSTRY BY RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I present and ask to have printed in full in the RECORD resolutions of the Massachusetts General Court memorializing Congress in favor of direct loans to industry by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The resolutions were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY, Boston.

Resolutions memorializing Congress in favor of direct loans to industry by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation

Whereas it is of vital importance that industry be enabled to secure without unnecessary delay the financial benefits provided by the National Industrial Recovery Act; and

Whereas the direct and principal cause of the delay in enabling industry to secure said benefits appears to be the unnecessary requirement that loans to industry by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation be obtained through the agency of mortgage loan companies: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the General Court of Massachusetts hereby records itself in favor of the making of loans by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation directly to industry instead of through the agency of mortgage loan companies; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the Commonwealth forthwith forward copies of these resolutions to the President of the United States, to the Presiding Officers of both branches of Congress, and to the Members thereof from this Commonwealth.

In house of representatives, adopted March 20, 1934.

In senate, adopted, in concurrence, April 4, 1934.

A true copy.

Attest:

[SEAL] F. W. COOK,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

THE WORLD COURT

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I present and ask that there be printed in full in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD resolutions adopted by the New Hampshire Bar Association calling upon the Senate to complete the adherence of this country to the World Court.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the Senate of the United States voted in January 1926 by a vote of 76 to 17 for the adherence of the United States to the World Court if five conditions were met; and

Whereas these conditions are now fully met, in the judgment of the Department of State and of such competent bodies as the American Bar Association and many State and local bar associations, by the three protocols now awaiting the Senate's consent to ratification; and

Whereas both the Democratic and Republican national platforms endorsed the completion of our adherence to the Court; and

Whereas the United States might notably aid in world-wide economic recovery by completing its adherence to the Court at an early date, and thus by formally recording its support of the principle of using judicial methods for settling those international disputes to which judicial methods are applicable, increase the sense of international confidence in the possibility of avoiding war: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the New Hampshire Bar Association calls upon the Senate of the United States to complete the adherence of this country to the World Court at the earliest practicable time, through ratification of the pending protocols, without additional conditions or reservations of any kind; and be it further

Resolved, That this resolution be forwarded to Senator HENRY W. KEYES and to Senator FRED H. BROWN with a respectful request that they hasten by their interest and support favorable action on the three World Court treaties; and be it further

Resolved, That Senator BROWN be requested to have this resolution spread on the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

CHARGES OF DR. WIRT

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I have just received from the Gary W.C.T.U. a copy of resolutions urging support in securing for Dr. William A. Wirt a full, complete, and impartial public hearing at the investigation now taking place. I ask that the resolutions may be printed in the RECORD and lie on the table.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolutions

Whereas the widely published statements recently made by Dr. William A. Wirt, superintendent of Gary public schools, charging certain unnamed Government officials with engaging in activities tending to overthrow our constitutional Government, the same to be replaced with a Socialist or Communist form of government, have created Nation-wide interest; and

Whereas Dr. Wirt for many years has been well known to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Gary as a man of high honor and a serious student who would not lightly make such serious charges: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Gary W.C.T.U. beg your support in securing for Dr. Wirt a full, complete, and impartial public hearing at the coming congressional investigation; be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent to Senators ARTHUR R. ROBINSON and FREDERICK VAN NUYS and to Congressman WILLIAM T. SCHULTE and Chairman ALFRED BULWINKLE.

MRS. CHAS. M. SWISHER, President,
637 Jefferson Street, Gary, Ind.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have inserted in the RECORD an editorial appearing in the Washington News of yesterday entitled "Page Dr. Wirt."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Daily News, Monday, Apr. 9, 1934]

For fear Dr. Wirt and the Bulwinkle committee tomorrow will overlook some of the really dangerous influences in Washington, we propose a thoroughgoing probe into the "brain trusters" not only of this but of past new-deal administrations.

The patrioteers will find less to shock them in the modest reformers of the Roosevelt regime than in the subversive utterances of American revolutionists that have slipped into history books and even now are being read by our youth in schools and libraries. For instance:

"Labor is superior to capital and deserves much higher consideration."—Lincoln.

"None shall rule but the humble, and none but toil shall have."—Emerson.

"Thunder on! Stride on democracy! Strike with vengeful stroke."—Whitman.

"Labor in this country is independent and proud. It has not to ask the patronage of capital."—Webster.

"Is life so dear or peace so sweet as to be purchased at the price of chains and slavery? Forbid it, Almighty God!"—Patrick Henry.

"They are slaves who fear to speak for the fallen and the weak."—Lowell.

"A little rebellion now and then is a good thing. It is a medicine necessary for the sound health of government."—Jefferson.

CANCELATION OF CONTRACT WITH BOSTON IRON & METAL CO.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I submit a short resolution requesting the Secretary of Commerce to furnish some information with reference to the cancelation of a contract. I ask unanimous consent for immediate consideration of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S.Res. 221), as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Commerce is requested to furnish to the Senate the reasons for the abrogation of a contract dated November 25, 1932, between the Government of the United States and the Boston Iron & Metal Co., Baltimore, Md., for the sale and scrapping of 124 vessels belonging to the United States Shipping Board, declared by the Shippping Board as obsolete and surplus, of the terms of which contract there appears to be no violation by the Boston Iron & Metal Co.; and to advise the Senate why the rights under this contract should not be immediately restored in accordance with the obligations of the Government of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I ask to have inserted in the RECORD at this point a short statement explaining the reasons for the adoption of the resolution.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE MATTER OF THE CONTRACT BETWEEN THE BOSTON IRON & METAL CO. AND THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

1. Contract signed November 5, 1932, for the sale of 124 vessels. Price, $1.51 per ton for metal derived. Contract to be performed by purchaser within 3 years; 39 vessels received; 87 vessels undelivered (2 extra vessels having been purchased under a supplemental agreement, after Nov. 5, 1932).

September 8, 1933, check for four vessels sent to Shipping Board. These vessels undelivered.

October 13, 1933, Secretary Roper sent notice that all vessels remaining undelivered were withdrawn from the contract.

2. These vessels had been declared by the Shipping Board, after a survey of them sometime in the early part of 1932, as obsolete and surplus vessels. Vessels needed by the Army and Navy had been allocated by the Shipping Board and the vessels sold to purchaser were surplus. Bids were invited by the Shipping Board and all people in the country who could possibly bid on these vessels were notified of the contemplated sale. Four or five bids were received, the Boston's bid being the highest. The next highest was the Union Shipbuilding Co. (a Mellon company), who bid $1.06 per ton, to which might be added mothering of the ships, which was considered to be 15 cents per ton additional, would bring their bid to $1.21. Our bid, therefore, 30 cents higher. Our bid accepted.

3. These vessels were constructed for war purposes under the stress of war, and have outlived their usefulness. They were constructed in 1917 and 1918. Some of them have never been used and, as a matter of fact, some never completed. Life of ordinary ship approximately 20 years. These ships are now 16 and 17 years old.

4. When war over, United States had on hand considerable shipping materials of all kinds, including docks, yards, buildings, houses, etc., and about 1,250 steel cargo vessels, in addition to vessels of other variety such as wooden, tankers, and foreign vessels, which probably brought the total fleet up to 2,500 units.

In 1923 the Shipping Board found that of the 1,250 steel cargo vessels on hand, 355 were operated, and 885 were laid up. They determined that the laid-up fleet cost the Government $2,588,000 annually to care for the same, besides what additional work might be necessary to keep them. They determined that of the laid-up fleet there were approximately 400 vessels which were not required in the promotion and maintenance of the American merchant marine. They determined further that they were spending a lot of money on ships that they would never use. That these vessels were actually a menace by their mere existence, in fictitiously accrediting the market with 400 additional ships and thereby affecting the sale of the balance.

Shipping Board then appointed a committee, and this committee determined on the policy of scrapping surplus and obsolete vessels. From that time on the Shipping Board has continuously sold vessels and compelled the purchaser to scrap the same.

In 1926 the Shipping Board entered into a contract with the Ford Motor Co., wherein they sold that company 200 cargo vessels known as "lakers." (They were called this because they were built on the Great Lakes.) The matter was referred to the Attorney General's Office for the purpose of investigating the legality of the contract and to determine the right of the Shipping Board to sell ships for scrapping, and the Honorable John G. Sargeant, who was the Attorney General at that time, after reviewing the entire matter, upheld the Shipping Board in its legal right to make the sale and scrap the vessels.

The Senate of the United States was asked to investigate this matter, and in 1926 passed a resolution referring the matter to the Senate Committee on Commerce, and the committee held a hearing on February 11, 1926, and issued a pamphlet. This happened in the Sixty-ninth Congress, first session, Senate Resolution 135.

Ford bought practically the same kind of vessels which we bought, and the sale sustained by the Attorney General.

Sometime last December, for the purpose of determining the value of these vessels, the Department of Commerce advertised a ship, Eastern Craig, for sale without any restrictions, and received four bids, the highest of which, the Secretary informs us, was $7,700. Our price per vessel is approximately $4,500.

On November 5, 1932, the steel market, in accordance with the magazine known as the Iron Age, was around $7 per ton.

We entered into a contract with the Sun Shipbuilding Co., of Chester, Pa., to break up some of these vessels for us, at $5 per metal-ton recovered. We were unable to do it as cheap in our plant. For the sake of the discussion, we will add $1.51 (cost of metal to the Boston Iron), and $5 per ton break-up, makes $6.51, before other expenses can be added. In order to obtain a quantity price, the metal had to be sold less than market price, and contracts, as of the date of the sale—that is, November 5, 1932—were entered into at $6.60 per ton. This covers the nonferrous metals, which are iron and steel, etc. Now, we have figures to prove that three fourths of 1 percent, on the average, of a vessel is ferrous metals, such as copper, brass, etc. The average recoverable metal of a ship is 3,000 tons. Of this approximately 20 tons are nonferrous metals, which, at time of contract, were worth about $60 to $75 per ton. About 400 men were employed on this job in Chester and about the same amount at Baltimore, and, through the action of the Government, these men have become disemployed by us.

Shipping Board removed these vessels from the World's Shipping Registry, and they were no longer ships when we bought them but were just so much scrap. They cannot now be used from a practical standpoint because it would cost too much to repair them, and from the standpoint of their possible future life this would not be a reasonable thing to do, and, furthermore, these ships are, for the most part, 10-knot ships; their engines are obsolete in design and from every standpoint they have no place in the shipping world. Particularly is this true when the Department of Commerce has determined to encourage the building of new vessels and modernize the fleet.

5. United States had the right to withdraw the vessels whenever it desired these ships for operation, or for sale for operation, or in the event of a national emergency, declared by the Secretary of War. This did not mean that they could withdraw these vessels at any time that a whim or a wish moved them but that they must have had, at such notice of withdrawal, a sale for operation of the vessels, or, at least, had a plan for the operation of the same.

Six months have expired since notice of withdrawal received. They do not have any sale for operation of these vessels, and absolutely have no definite plan of what to do with them. Of course, as you know, no national emergency, which has been so declared by the Secretary of War, exists.

6. After notice of withdrawal received, we immediately dispatched a letter of Secretary Roper, requesting him to tell us under what portion of article 3 of our contract the vessels were being withdrawn. To this he has never replied, but simply stated that the matter was being reviewed. We have continuously contacted the Department of Commerce and the Shipping Board, but up to now, as you know, we have never received any word from anybody as to just exactly why these ships were withdrawn from us, which action actually nullified and abrogated our contract.

The matter was placed in the hands of South Trimble, Jr., Esq., Solicitor for the Department of Commerce, and he passed upon the question of whether the Shipping Board had a right to sell the vessels and scrap the same; whether they received an adequate consideration for the sale; what rights the Government had under the contract to withdraw the same, and if they did not have such right, what damages must they respond to. We have requested to be shown this opinion, but, of course, we have never seen it. We, accordingly, filed briefs with the Solicitor for the Commerce Department on the first question; that is, the right of the Shipping Board to sell these vessels and scrap them, and when the matter got into the hands of the Attorney General's Office, we submitted briefs on the other questions, except the question of damages which we did not address ourselves to. The Department of Justice never rendered an opinion. They have told the Secretary of Commerce repeatedly that they would not render an opinion, that he had taken his action without first consulting them and they would not now intervene. They are, however, investigating the matter for the purpose of being in a position to defend any action which we take.

The Army and the Navy have repeatedly been asked if they needed these vessels, and I understand that a committee was appointed, consisting of a representative of the Shipping Board and the Army and Navy, and it was decided that neither of these branches needed the vessels in question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

CARRIAGE OF THE AIR MAIL—ADDRESS BY SENATOR AUSTIN

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I hold in my hand a radio address entitled "The Current Chapter of the Air-Mail Tragedy", delivered last night over the National Broadcasting Co. network by the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN]. I ask unanimous consent that the address may be printed in full in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The present status of the defense by the Postmaster General for cancelation of the air-mail contracts, and placing the risk, burden, and tragic penalty of transportation upon Army pilots, can be understood best if the principal facts leading to this new deal are reviewed. Graphically stated, they are as follows:

The Government engaged in flying its own mail until 1925, when this practice was abandoned.

Preceding the adoption of the McNary-Watres Act two substantial through routes were created; but generally over the country there sprang up an illogical, sporadic mushroom-like growth of numerous short, weak, inefficient, disconnected mail and passenger routes. The outstanding exception to the general situation, namely: United Air Lines, which was a through transcontinental route from the Atlantic to the Pacific, had been established. The beneficial operation of this route emphasized the wisdom and economic need for extensions and consolidations of short lines into other independent competitive transcontinental routes for the good of the Air Mail Service, for the encouragement of development of aeronautics, for the invention and use of multimotored planes, for increased number of seats for passengers, for safety devices in flying by night and in storms, and for the promotion of the national defense.

On April 29, 1930, Congress passed the McNary-Watres Act for the purpose of creating a logical air-mail map with great systems of transportation to supplant the scattered and disconnected routes.

In May 1930, Postmaster General Brown exercised the powers vested in him by the McNary-Watres Act. Two different methods for creation of air-mail systems were contained in the act. One was by extensions and consolidations, and the other was by competitive bidding.

The first-mentioned method was tried out and failed. That method involved increasing or diminishing existing routes, taking from one contractor part of a route and transferring it to another, elongating or coupling up disconnected routes, adding feeders thereto, and consolidating the whole into transcontinental trunk lines, from East to West, with suitable North and South laterals. Procedure under this power necessitated meeting with the contractors to obtain the necessary modifications of their contracts for this purpose. The logical scheme of air-mail routes intended by Congress required agreement upon the pioneering equities and rights of operators. These meetings were not clandestine, but were published through releases by the Post Office Department to the newspapers of the country. They were contemplated by law. Similar meetings had been held before then, and similar meetings have been held since by the Democratic administration.

Mr. Crowley, the present Solicitor of the Post Office Department, testifying before the special Senate committee, admitted that a Postmaster General needs the knowledge of operators to determine questions regarding transportation of air mail.

The meetings held by Postmaster General Brown resulted in agreement upon the least controversial routes, but there was a total disagreement regarding routes where several operators claimed the pioneering equities on the same lines.

A law question was raised regarding the authority of the Postmaster General to create these lines by this method of extension and consolidation. The question was submitted to the Comptroller General, and his opinion, rendered July 24, 1930 (as well as the disagreement of operators to which I have referred), terminated the effort to establish these equities in that manner.

Thereupon the second method was adopted, namely: Competitive bidding. Bids were publicly called for, and those qualified by the law were competent to bid. The law limited the class who could bid to those who had a certain specified experience and who were found by the Postmaster General to be responsible bidders. The words of the law made bidding rather futile. The policy of the Government to have these lines independent of each other and evenly competitive excluded bona fide qualified bidders for one line from competing with bona fide bidders for another line. No collusion or agreement or conspiracy could exist under these conditions, because the interest of each bidder impelled him to devote all his energy to obtaining the line he sought. The result of operating under this method was the creation of the midtranscontinental route and the southern transcontinental route.

The fact that there was a joint bid for each of these routes which was not opposed by any other qualified bidder was the result of the disqualification and economic incapacity of any other person to bid thereon.

As a result of the vigorous insistence by Postmaster General Brown that all and every entangling alliance between these three great trunk lines should be discontinued, and of his insistence upon economic responsibility and skilled personnel in operation for each route, there was created in a remarkably short time the most efficient, safe, and progressive system of transportation of mail and passengers in the world.

To illustrate the acceleration thereby of the speed of business transactions, two letters might be dropped in the mail chute of a New York skyscraper at the close of a business day, one addressed to a person in that same building, the other air mailed to Omaha. Both letters would be delivered at the same time.

Immediately after the election in November 1932, those who did not have air-mail contracts formed a society for the purpose of securing cancelations of the contracts and the opening of them to competitive bidding for the purpose of taking away from those who had contracts and letting to those who did not have contracts.

Propaganda and lobbying by the members of this organization and their attorney resulted in the appointing of a special Senate investigating committee and in the enactment of a resolution authorizing the President to cancel contracts upon 60 days' notice, public hearing, and the awarding and payment of damages therefor. It should be noted that these cancelations were not made under this law.

Then began hearings by the special committee. Members of that society participated in the hearings. The meetings of May 1930 were characterized publicly as "spoils conferences" on the theory, of course, that approbrious epithets have an effect of proof with those who are uninformed. They also tend to give bad repute to the subject to which they are applied. A camouflage of the operations of this society consisted in the pretense that their objective was to fly the mail for less money than the Government was paying. This sham is exposed by pointing out that the Postmaster General had arbitrary power given him in the law to fix the price from time to time as he saw fit. The insincerity of it as a defense by the Postmaster General is exposed by the fact that he had used this power. Moreover, he had asked Congress for an appropriation increased by $1,000,000. Not a word of evidence of fraud was introduced. Indeed, there appeared such a lack of agreement, such an utter absence of collusion that the Solicitor of the Post Office Department finally charged that the Postmaster General had blackmailed the contractors into obedience and conformity with the "vision splendid" that he had of a great air transportation system. It is my opinion that the charge of fraud was trumped up as a smoke barrage to conceal operations under the plot of the society referred to and certain members of the Post Office Department to cancel these contracts for the benefit of the members of that society. The character played in this tragedy by politics will undoubtedly later enter upon the stage.

January 30, 1934, Postmaster General Farley admitted on oath before the special Senate committee that he had not discovered anything fundamentally wrong about these contracts, and that his conduct concerning them might be considered as an approval up to that date.

Yet 7 days later—on February 6, 1934—the project to cancel all of the contracts was submitted to the President and the Attorney General by the Postmaster General. In this short time a determination by the Postmaster General had been made to cancel the contracts.

It should be remembered that the transcontinental line of the United Airways and the National Parks Airways were established before the McNary-Watres Act was adopted, and they obtained nothing from the conference. Nevertheless, their contracts were canceled. The significance of this submission of the case to the President and the Attorney General for cancelation before termination of the investigation by the committee is that those who sought cancelation could not afford to wait for the fact to come out, because the facts in possession of the President and of the public would then block the cancelation.

On February 9, 1934, all of the contracts were canceled effective as of February 19.

Then followed the ill-considered use of the Army to fly the mail with its ghastly loss of human life.

Next came retreat from that blunder.

Shortly after, service by the Army on a curtailed basis was resumed, which resulted in further loss of human life.

Thereupon, Congress adopted a temporary air mail bill authorizing the Army to fly mail subject to conditions relating to safety.

The President was misled by representations in writing made by the Solicitor of the Post Office Department and an attorney of the Department of Justice. It is safe to assume that the oral representations made to the President were of like character to the written ones. These written representations give the false impression that certain contracts were extended in time for 6 months without authority of law and without readvertising for bids, whereas the basic law granted authority to do this. They allege that the route certificates were granted without authority of law, whereas the McNary-Watres Act expressly provided for an exchange which was made to the great benefit of the Government in securing complete control by the Government over routes, compensation, and conditions for safety and efficiency which did not exist under the old contracts for which they were exchanged. These lawful and beneficial acts were represented to the President to have been done in conspiracy. If this were true then Congress was a conspirator. A flagrant misrepresentation was made that "the entire system of the United Air Ways was built up by the certificate or extension method." On the contrary, the fact is that it was built up by the competitive bid method. Only two extensions were ever made and they were obvious and logical ones which came too long after the meetings to have been related to them.

These written representations did not inform the President that the transactions at the meetings held were done under provisions of the act and a declared policy of the Government which required such meetings. Ascertaining equities, laying out routes, creating an air-mail map, and such vital matters relating to the terrain of an airway could not be intelligently handled by an official behind a desk, but necessitated conferences with operators whose actual experience was indispensable. The representations gave the false impression that all extensions made were agreed upon at these meetings, whereas some of them were not even mentioned.

The statement was made that the National Parks Airways, Inc., route "was the result of a certificate issued after the 'spoils conference' on July 29, 1930", which carried the innuendo that this was done as a result of a collusive agreement at the meeting, whereas there was no party interested in that route other than National Parks Airways, Inc. The President was not told that this route was established by a contract let by bidding. The presentation of the situation with respect to Eastern Air Transport and American Airways was not frankly stated, but the President was shown only that certificates to these companies were granted after the "spoils conference." A representation was made that carried the implication that every holder of an air-mail contract obtained his contract by virtue of the conference in May. Moreover, this written representation characterized extensions as a "subterfuge", whereas they were the declared policy of the Congress.

These writings also gave the impression that cost to the Government required cancelation of the contracts and letting of new ones by bids, whereas the fact is that the cost not only could be, but must be, fixed arbitrarily by the Postmaster General. Certainly this representation must rebound with great force upon Postmaster General Farley, who not only justified the cost before the Appropriations Committee of the House, but asked for additional funds. The effect of these representations was to condemn the performance, separately and jointly, of every function of Postmaster General Brown under the law, although all of them had been sustained by the Comptroller General in making payments under the contract, all had been carefully considered from time to time by committees of Congress, and had been ratified by Postmaster General Farley up to January 30, 1934, 6 days before.

On March 8, 1934, the President sent a letter to the Chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads recommending a law which would reverse every feature of the McNary-Watres Act and make permanent, not only the cancelation of contracts, but the disqualification of the contractors.

Bad faith and conflict with public policy were doubtless predicated on the representations. No provision for testing such questions in a judicial manner and ascertaining qualifications of bidders before the bidding was suggested. If enacted into law this policy would set back the aeronautical industry many years and confirm the fear of the people of these United States that their Government has become arbitrary and unjust.

This was followed on March 9, 1934, by the McKellar-Black bill to revise air mails, which carried out every feature of the recommendation and included the following language:

"* * * and no person shall be eligible to bid for or hold an air-mail contract if it or its predecessor is asserting or has any claim against the United States because of a prior annulment of any contract by the Postmaster General. * * *"

The protests of the people of this country against this ruthless destruction of property, and against this impetuous condemnation, without trial, and attempt at attainder by legislation, as well as the withering criticism of every expert called before the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, excited the reporting of a substitute bill phrased to give the impression that the destructive elements of the first bill were eliminated.

But the proponent of the bill stated in the Senate that the inhibitions of the measure were substantially the same as those of the Postmaster General's advertisements for bids, which I now speak of.

On March 28, 1934, the Postmaster General announced that temporary contracts with commercial aviation companies for transporting air mail would be made within the next 3 weeks, and advertised for bids containing the following inhibition:

"No bids shall be considered or received from any company which previously had a contract for the carriage of air mail and whose contract was annulled under Revised Statutes, section 3950, * * *."

All of the cancelations were expressly claimed to have been made under that section.

Other bills have been introduced relating to the subject. The current chapter in the air-mail tragedy to which I invite attention now follows:

Today there was ordered printed a bill, proposed by Senators AUSTIN, of Vermont, DAVIS, of Pennsylvania, and BARBOUR, of New Jersey, as an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the McKellar and Black bill. This measure is designed to preserve the remarkable development of the art of aeronautics to compel the Postmaster General to issue a route warrant to any carrier who held a route certificate which was canceled unless upon fair trial, by a three-judge court, the applicant has been found to be disqualified under section 3950 of the Revised Statutes. This bill prohibits the attainder of any person by refusing him a route warrant on the ground that he has a claim against the United States because of a prior annulment of contract. This bill prohibits the Postmaster General from presuming disqualification and requires him to raise that question by complaint presented to a district judge of the United States in the district wherein is the residence of such person sought to be disqualified.

This bill makes the Postmaster General the agent of Congress to carry out provisions for extending, consolidating, or creating new air-mail routes, upon such a basis that monopoly will be prevented and balanced competition will be maintained.

This bill does away with the fallacious doctrine of competitive bidding which was exposed in the language of Captain Rickenbacker as follows:

"Asking one of these companies to bid on another route is as impracticable as asking the New York Central Railroad to bid to carry mail over a route such as the Santa Fe system."

On the other hand, it authorized the Postmaster General to place mail for air transportation on any route operating aircraft on a fixed daily schedule under the authority of the Department of Commerce. The bill fixes compensation on a basis where bidding is inapplicable, namely; at the fixed rate of 2 mills per pound mile, except that the average compensation paid to any carrier for transportation over any route shall not exceed 50 cents per airplane mile.

The great underlying stimulus which the McNary-Watres Act furnished for the amazing development of the passenger service is continued in this bill, namely: A frank subsidy determined by the Postmaster General upon a formula standardized for all operators and calculated to create a financial inducement and incentive to competitively develop the aeronautical industry, to improve its efficiency to the end of making it self-supporting, to encourage the development of safety, speed, additional space for carriage of passengers and express, and to promote the national defense.

The effect of such a formula has already been tested, and there is no room for doubt that it tends to keen competition and to the exercise of the highest character of service.

Such a formula as was effective from November 1, 1932, to June 30, 1933, offered additional pay for carrying two-way radio, an increased number of passenger seats, employment of a copilot, and other variables which helped toward the creation of an aeronautical industry that could support itself. Obviously, this is superior to a law requiring competitive bidding without subsidy which would reverse the interest of the operator, because he would be tempted to get his cost back, plus a profit, regardless of efficiency and without encouragement to promotion of the service. Under the formula operators inclined to lag behind in economy and efficiency of operation could only make money by raising their standards to meet competition because all would be established on the same basis.

The proposed act requires the Postmaster General to promulgate and execute rules, regulations, and orders establishing standards of qualification of pilots, involving experience and skill in blind flying and other aspects of navigation, providing for working conditions of all employees, with due regard for safety and efficiency, holding up the standard of compensation to that of 1933 unless changed from time to time through the medium of collective or other bargaining, and maintaining the quality of landing fields, lighthouses, radio stations, and other means of communication and aids to navigation, as well as standards of planes and their equipment.

This bill, if enacted into law, would restore a great institution. It would lend encouragement to industry generally by assuring industry that a contract still has value and binding force in this country; that the old-fashioned American idea of trial by due process of law is a certain bulwark of our safety from sudden impetuosity of our Government; that we really have rights as citizens, whether as contractors with the Government or as beneficiaries of contracts with the Government.

The passage of this bill would benefit business generally because it would prevent the chaos in transacting its affairs which necessarily must follow the setting back of the air-mail transportation business and the passenger-transport enterprise 5 or 6 years.

The passage of this bill would save the air-transport industry, because there is an opportunity for 10-year contracts which would permit planning and financing upon a stable basis. This measure would permit warrants for a period not exceeding 10 years from date by contrast with the McKellar-Black bill, which is limited to periods of not exceeding 3 years.

It is apparent that the hampering uncertainty of operators would be alleviated by this measure. The policy of Congress to adhere to the American right of notice, trial, and judgment in case of an intended cancelation was expressed in the McNary-Watres Act, which required 45 days' notice and an opportunity to show cause why the certificate should not be canceled (sec. 6); and in the act of June 16, 1933 (Public, No. 78), which required 60 days' notice to the parties to any contract with the United States which the President might intend to cancel and an opportunity for public hearing.

These great powers were granted by law. The law for cancelation was plain and simple, but was utterly ignored; on the contrary, the parties and the country were startled by a sudden exercise of the might of official position to ruin this great servant of the people—the air-mail transportation system.

By this bill we try to salvage from the wreckage the great airways, the competitive systems, the principle of incentive to individual effort and progress, the financial encouragement for development of safety and efficiency, and better conditions of work, as well as justice in pay for labor, both skilled and unskilled.

The proposed bill offers to the people of the United States the assurance that their Government is honest and honorable as a contractor with them. Our cause is an institution for which intrepid pilots have given their lives and a principle of civilization for which humanity has battled since the birth of Christ. Let not politics interfere with the progress of this cause.

Let this chapter of the air-mail tragedy strike down government by men and uphold government by laws.

COMMENT ON UPTURN OF CONDITIONS

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a cross-section of comment on the upturn of conditions, the reports having been taken by careful newspapermen in interviews with some of the leading citizens of various parts of the West, gathered for a conference in Salt Lake City, Utah, and taken from the Deseret News of April 6. The reports come from men who are leaders in the intermountain country. All are presidents of stakes of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and all were present at Salt Lake City for the annual conference of that church.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Deseret News of April 6, 1934]

PRESIDENTS OF STAKES REPORT BETTER TIMES—CONDITIONS IMPROVE IN DISTRICTS OF CHURCH

A very definite note of optimism regarding improved business and financial conditions and outlook for future improvement in farming, grazing, and mining, is expressed in Salt Lake today by a number of presidents of stakes here attending the one hundred and fourth annual general conference.

Without exception these stake presidents report improvement both in actual conditions and in the attitudes of the people. All report a generally more hopeful feeling prevailing, and many gave definite indications of conditions being much improved.

The stake presidents interviewed are representative of the entire Rocky Mountain region, ranging from Arizona to Colorado, and including Canada and Mexico.

RANGES IMPROVE IN GARFIELD COUNTY

Range conditions in Garfield County are the best they have been for some time, President Thomas A. King, of the Garfield stake, reports. The people are much happier and more settled in mind over the prospects for this year than they have been for a long time. Water conditions are good, and barring a siege of grasshoppers, farming should be much improved this year, he explained.

LYMAN DISTRICT EMPLOYMENT GAINS

President H. Melvin Rollins, of the Lyman stake in Wyoming, can see very definite improvement in several ways. With the water outlook only a very little below normal and grazing conditions of the past winter ideal, the outlook for the farming and cattle-raising industries of Wyoming is excellent.

General conditions, too, are much better, he asserts. In Evanston, he said, there are as many men now employed in the railroad shops as there ever have been; and conditions in the mining towns are also much improved with the providing of more work.

HURRICANE FRUIT ESCAPES FROST

President Claudius Hirschi, of the Zion Park stake, whose home is in Hurricane, said that with the recent danger of frost past without damage, farming prospects, particularly with fruit, are excellent in the southern part of the State. Grazing conditions for the spring are good, although much depends in this industry on later summer rains. Movement of wool in that section is good at a good price, and livestock men are now placing their cattle on the market for fair returns, he said.

President Hirschi stated that the C.W.A. projects greatly aided that section and especially affected the merchants. While things are more or less at a standstill, another boom is expected this year during the fruit season.

UINTAH SELLS WOOL BEFORE PRICES DROP

President Hyrum B. Calder, of the Uintah stake, at Vernal, said business conditions were much better. While the wool prices are now slipping, most of the clips in that section have already been sold at a good price, he said.

The recent storm, he explained, has abated a gloom that was apparent as a result of expected water shortage. It helps conditions. There is plenty of moisture, and although business is quiet, the general outlook is much better, he said.

ARIZONIANS HOPEFUL OF BETTER TIMES

Presidents Harry L. Payne, of the St. Joseph stake, and Levi S. Udall, of the St. Johns stake, can see a definite improvement in Arizona. The State received a great impetus from the C.W.A. and the people are hopeful, they said. President Payne stated the people were more optimistic and improvement was apparent on all hands. He explained that the ideal winter through which they have passed was a great aid to grazing and livestock conditions.

IMPROVED POTATO PRICE AIDS DRIGGS

A fair price for potatoes and considerable road work has been a great factor in improving conditions within the Teton district around Driggs, Idaho, President Albert Choules, of the Teton stake, reports. He said conditions were much better than they have been, and high hopes are held out for the future.

SOUTH SANPETE NEEDS MORE WATER

While financial conditions are somewhat better, crop conditions, owing to a shortage of water, are not as favorable, President Lewis R. Anderson, of the South Sanpete stake, reports. The people there, however, are hopeful and more optimistic than they have been, he said.

GUNNISON HOPEFUL DESPITE REVERSES

Although the water in the Gunnison Reservoir is 3 feet short and prospects on the west side of the valley are rather disappointing, residents of Gunnison are quite optimistic this year, according to Charles S. Hansen, president of the Gunnison stake. Tithing, he said, had increased up to date over last year.

Merchants did better during January and February this year than last, but things were rather quiet in March, President Hansen said. Farmers have been rather worried about beet prospects, but are now preparing to sign up. Wheat acreage will be about the same, he declared, despite the United States reduction, since many of the largest growers did not sign Government contracts.

REDMOND FARMERS TO PLANT MORE BEETS

Farmers of Redmond are preparing to plant more beets this year than for several years past, if present indications prove reliable, Martin Jensen, first counselor in the North Sevier stake presidency, said Friday. Business has picked up a little, so that more tithing is being paid in several of the wards, and the people of Redmond are generally optimistic over the future.

BUSINESS IMPROVES IN SEVIER DISTRICT

The dental profession is much better this year than last, says W. Eugene Poulson, president of Sevier stake. He feels that in general this may be taken as an indication of other business in Sevier County.

Cattlemen are happy over the open winter season on the ranges, and prospects for the sale of marketable livestock seem to be better. Sheepmen are rejoicing over the rise in the price of wool. Those who fed sheep during the past winter were able to make some profit, although not so many tried this form of winter work this year.

CENTRAL COLORADO HAS LITTLE CHANGE

Business in central Colorado is practically the same this year as last, John W. Smith, second counselor of the Colorado Springs branch, Western States mission, said Friday morning. "While there is a slight improvement in the music business—my line of work—it is so slight that we can't continue on this way for very long. Business must improve, or we will have to quit."

CONDITIONS IMPROVE IN KANAB DISTRICT

Things have never been better in and around Kanab, President Charles C. Heaton, of the Kanab stake said. The people are happy, and everyone who wants to work is working.

An unusual amount of road work and forest work, together with improved conditions in livestock, particularly sheep business, are responsible for this healthy condition.

SHELLEY MENACED BY WATER LACK

President Berkley Larson, of the Shelley stake, expressed a fear that a shortage of water might result for the maturing crops, but the people are optimistic through knowledge that crops have frequently been better in dry years than in years of plenty of moisture. The people are more hopeful and conditions are generally much better than for several years.

INCREASES OF VETERANS' COMPENSATION

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, in this morning's New York Herald Tribune is a defense of the veterans' increases. It is from the pen of Mr. Anson T. McCook, of Hartford, Conn.

I wish every citizen who is not fully informed on the subject could read this concise, and, I believe, entirely accurate statement. Many who are now unhappy over the veto will have a better understanding of the facts.

Reading the article may not change a conviction, but at least it will make understandable the attitude of those who in all good conscience voted in the majority. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEFENDING THE VETERANS' INCREASES

To the New York Herald Tribune:

Accusations have raged around the veto of the independent offices bill. There has been a wide misunderstanding of vital facts. Having made a special study of disabled veterans' relief for several years, perhaps I can help clear the air.

First of all, the bonus has no connection with this matter whatsoever. The bonus was not even mentioned in the bill which was vetoed. And the Legion at Chicago voted down all resolutions which would have called for its present payment.

Next, this bill did not restore any of those numerous disabilities, classified as not connected with the service, which were cut off by the Economy Act last year; nor did the Legion ask to have them restored. Therefore, that large saving remains exactly where it stood.

As to raiding the Treasury or unbalancing the Budget, the bill provides less than $50,000,000 in payments to disabled World War veterans, and most of this the President himself had already approved. David Lawrence, an impartial observer, puts the difference between Congress and the President as to World War veterans at only $20,000,000. It is probably less than that. The largest part of the appropriation was to restore pay cuts to Federal employees and for Spanish War veterans, but even there the total difference between Congress and the President was comparatively small.

Just what did the bill provide for World War veterans? First, it restored to concededly service-connected cases the cuts which had been made in their compensation as a temporary measure of economy last year. The President himself had favored their restoration as soon as practicable. Therefore, the difference was not one of principle, nor of amount, but simply of time. With wages and costs increasing, Congress thought the time had arrived.

Discussion has chiefly centered about the second class, namely, that especially pathetic group known as "presumptives." There are but 29,000 of them and the number is shrinking by death. It is vitally important to note three things about them. First, they must have broken down before 1925. Next, the break-down must have been a very grave one, such as in mind, lungs, or heart. Finally, up to 1933, they were rated as actually service connected, albeit by presumption, and most had held that honorable status for 10 years. Then, when their lives had become adjusted on that basis, they were deprived of it by a stroke of the pen. In my opinion that was most unjust. If I am right, they had an absolute claim to be restored as a matter of national obligation.

My reasons are these: First, my personal observation, confirmed by no less a medical authority than Gen. Sanford H. Wadhams, deputy chief surgeon of the A.E.F., and many other reliable observers, convinces me that the vast majority of these presumptive break-downs were actually service connected in point of fact. And I am more interested in the fact than in any rating on paper. Next, I would ask this question: How could an insane man after the lapse of 15 years produce evidence to prove that the war caused his insanity even though there was no doubt about it? And yet that is exactly what the 1933 law required. And how is a man flat on his back with tuberculosis to get affidavits from doctors who are now dead and buddies who have disappeared? None of this evidence was required when they broke down before 1925. That is why the review boards' decisions were so necessarily restricted. A perfectly normal person would find it hard to prove an automobile case after 10 years during which he had been lulled into a false sense of security.

To bar 3 out of every 4 because 1 out of 4 might not be service connected seems comparable to convicting 3 out of 4 innocent persons in order to catch the 1-out-of-4 malefactor. The Legion's opinion is that the full burden of proof should rest upon the Government rather than upon the veteran who, after all these years, has lost his ability to prove his case. This is what the new law provides at the same time that it excludes any whose cases were established by fraud or misrepresentation.

Three hundred and seventy-three out of four hundred and seventy-two Senators and Representatives, a majority of each party in each House, believed that to restore these men and women to their honorable status and support was an act of simple justice. Believing this, they had no recourse in good conscience except to override the President's veto.

ANSON T. MCCOOK.

HARTFORD, CONN., April 9, 1934.

TARIFF ON LACES

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a very interesting letter written by Lilian F. Thompson, of Woodville, R.I., relating to the tariff on laces.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WOODVILLE, R.I., April 8, 1934.

The Honorable JESSE H. METCALF,
Senator from the State of Rhode Island, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR METCALF: I am a lace worker, employed by the Richmond Lace Works at Alton, R.I., and I am taking your words, that workers and investors in the lace industry should "cry out against this tariff bill", literally; and if this letter of mine to you could do any good, I wish that every word of it could be blazoned across the heavens of this country in letters a mile high so that every lace worker might see and read and be made to realize what will happen when Secretary Wallace eliminates what he terms the "inefficient group of industries" in New England.

I wonder if Secretary Wallace and the other men who advocate the passage of this tariff bill have ever given a thought as to what will become of this vast army of lace workers when they are deprived of a means of livelihood. Evidently they haven't, and it is quite probable that they do not care. I know lots of little children, and grown-ups, too, who, during the past winter, would have often gone cold and hungry if it hadn't been for the work given to the wives and mothers by the lace mills.

It is too bad that Secretary Wallace and the men who think the same as he does and who are doing everything they can to crush out American products and American producers, couldn't visit some of the lace mills in Rhode Island and see the lovely laces made from shimmering silks, gleaming rayons, and fine cottons in patterns as delicate and lovely as those created by nature on our window panes on frosty mornings. It would be an education to them to see a lace loom and watch it in action. When Secretary Wallace brands the finer textiles made in this country as inferior to those made in France and China, he does not know what he is talking about. Some years ago I watched a Belgian peasant woman making lace by hand; and as the roses grew under her skillful fingers, it seemed to me wonderful. Today, except for the value that hand-made goods always command, there is all-over and band lace made at the Richmond Lace Works that is just as beautiful in every way as that made by the Belgian woman. I have an idea that even Secretary Wallace couldn't tell the difference between the hand and machine made. His remark that it is desirable to import laces and finer textiles from France and China to delight our womenfolk is a strange one for an American and a Cabinet officer to make, and is a mighty poor argument in favor of foreign goods. Furthermore, I happen to know that the womenfolk from the world of fashion, where Secretary Wallace moves, take much pleasure in purchasing yards and yards of these American-made finer textiles, and I haven't the least doubt that Secretary Wallace and his colleagues have footed the bills for a good many lace gowns and frills now that they are again in style.

What would any man worthy of the name think of a banker or a group of bankers who would take the savings of their depositors and throw them into the nearest mud pond and then remark that they did it to delight our womenfolk? Secretary Wallace goes even further: He aims to throw away millions of dollars invested in buildings and machinery and to take the bread from the mouths of men, women, and children. Crushing out industry and the workers in industry in New England, or any other part of the country, isn't going to help the farmers in Minnesota or any other place, not in a thousand years despite all that Secretary Wallace may say to the contrary, and while his statesmanship and religion and his ideas on industry may be the extraordinary revelations of the same mind, no one would ever know it.

Thanking you for all your splendid efforts in behalf of the people of the State of Rhode Island, I am, dear sir,

Very truly yours,

LILIAN F. THOMPSON.

SAN JUAN WATERWORKS CONTRACT, PUERTO RICO

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I should like to bring to the attention of the Senate a very interesting situation which has developed in Puerto Rico.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation authorized a loan of $1,300,000 for the construction of improvements to the waterworks system of San Juan, the capital of Puerto Rico. The Government requested quotations for hydrants under contract 14A and valves under contract 14B. The bids received were opened on January 29, 1934. The awards made by the administrative board of the capital of Puerto Rico on February 24, 1934, were transmitted to the office of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation here under date of March 3, 1934, and received March 7, 1934.

Mr. President, it develops that in this project 17 different concerns were bidders. Sixteen of the bids were identically the same to the penny. Sixteen concerns furnished bids each of $16,516.66 for the work. One concern, the Western Gas Construction Co., of Fort Wayne, Ind., was the lowest bidder, with a bid of $13,752.14. It developed that 1 of the 16 bids was accepted, being the higher bid, and ultimately approved by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which was furnishing the money for the work.

Naturally we were very curious to understand how it happened that 16 concerns would all bid in exactly the same amount for the same job of work. If there ever was an instance that seemed to suggest collusion, a meeting of the minds of competitors, that seemed to be such an instance.

We took up the matter with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. We were informed by Mr. H. E. Whitaker, the acting chief engineer of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, that this was due to the N.R.A.; that under the N.R.A. there can be no competitive bidding any longer; that is to say, that each and every concern bidding on a job of any kind under the codes must bid precisely the same amount. Thereupon we inquired whether or not that was the reason why the Western Gas Construction Co., at Fort Wayne, Ind., had been penalized, though they were the low bidder and were not permitted to get the job. The answers to our questions in that regard were very indefinite. This is what happened:

The project is for the San Juan waterworks extension. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is furnishing $1,300,000 for that work. The contracts in question were nos. 14–A and 14–B, contract 14–A being for hydrants and valves and contract 14–B being for valves. The bid of the Western Gas Construction Co. under contract 14–A was $28,372. The bids of the competitors of the Western Gas Construction Co., 16 in number, were identical, each being $34,724. The bid of the Western Gas Construction Co. under contract 14–B was $13,752.14. The bids of the competitors, 16 in number, were identical, each being $16,516.66.

The total bid of the Western Gas Construction Co. was $42,124.14. The total bids of the competitors, 16 in number, each being identical with the others, was $51,240.66. The Western Gas Construction Co.'s total bid was $9,116.52 under the bids of the 16 who had all bid in exactly the same sum.

Naturally, Mr. President, if the N.R.A. fosters this sort of procedure, there can be no competitive bidding any more on Government work under any of the codes of the N.R.A. This is just one instance, showing the utter extravagance in the expenditure of public funds throughout the United States under the system at present in vogue. It shows, too, that the smaller business concerns are being practically driven out of business by the administration of the N.R.A. in this country.

In order that it may all appear in the RECORD, I ask to have printed the entire memorandum report covering this strange procedure as furnished to me by Mr. Whitaker, the acting engineer of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, together with his letter to me.

There being no objection, the letter and memorandum were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION,
Washington, March 28, 1934.

San Juan waterworks, loan docket no. 328.

Hon. ARTHUR R. ROBINSON,
United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR ROBINSON: With further reference to my letter of March 15, there is attached hereto a copy of the memorandum setting forth the facts concerning the award of the hydrant and valve contracts, nos. 14–A and 14–B, by the capital of Puerto Rico and the subsequent approval by this Corporation.

If there is any further information you may desire in connection with this matter, we shall be pleased to furnish it promptly.

Yours very truly,

H. E. WHITAKER,
Acting Chief Engineer.

MEMORANDUM REPORT COVERING APPROVAL OF AWARDS MADE BY THE ADMINISTRATIVE BOARD OF THE CAPITAL OF PUERTO RICO FOR HYDRANTS

CONTRACT 14–A AND VALVES CONTRACT 14–B

The R.F.C. has authorized a loan of $1,300,000 for the construction of improvements to the waterworks system of the capital of Puerto Rico at San Juan. The Government of Puerto Rico requested quotations for hydrants under contract 14–A and valves under contracts 14–B. The bids received being opened on January 29, 1934, and the awards made by the administrative board of the capital of Puerto Rico on February 24, 1934, being transmitted to this office under date of March 3, 1934 and received here March 7, 1934.

CONTRACT 14–B

There were 16 quotations received for $16,516.66, and one low bid of $13,752.14 for the valves under contract 14–B.

The administrative board considered at great length the bids and finally awarded contracts 14–A and 14–B to Sucs de Abarca, representing the Ludlow Valve Co.

On March 9 representatives of the Western Gas Construction Co., the low bidder, made informal complaint relative to the award.

On March 12 the Western Gas Construction Co. made formal complaint as the low bidder and also verbally raised a question as to the legality of the award to Sucs de Abarca.

On March 13 the R.F.C. transmitted the formal complaint to the capital of Pureto Rico requesting consideration of the information supplied in the complaint by the consulting engineer, the director of public works, and the administrative board.

On March 19 the chairman of the administrative board sent the R.F.C. the following cable: "Reconsideration contract 14 hydrants and valves not appropriate after submission matter R.F.C. To again consider matter in opinion officials city it is necessary that awards be disapproved. Recommend this procedure as serving best interests of city. Advise definite action by cable."

In view of the above cable stating that the administrative board could not reconsider and also recommending that we disapprove the award, this office immediately got in contact with members of the Bureau of Insular Affairs here in Washington and at our suggestion a cable was sent to Governor Winship of Puerto Rico and the attorney general of Puerto Rico requesting a legal opinion in the case of the award to Sucs de Abarca. The legal question was raised because a salaried employee of Sucs de Abarca is also a commissioner of the capital, but having nothing to do with the administrative board which made the award, and it was desired to learn from the highest legal authority on the island whether or not this, in any way, affected the legality of the award made to Sucs de Abarca.

On March 26 the following cablegram was received from Governor Winship by the Bureau of Insular Affairs:

"Reference your no. 96, March 24. By formal opinion rendered March 24, copy being transmitted by air mail, Attorney General of Puerto Rico holds contract valid, notwithstanding Pesquera's relations to successful bidder. Municipal commission had nothing to do with granting the award or contract, as this power resides in the administrative board, of which Pesquera is not a member. Furthermore, Pesquera is not a member or official of the contracting firm, but is only an employee thereof, and as such has no such interest in the contract as would render it void, even if he had participated as a municipal official in the awarding of the contract. See case of Mumma v. Town of Brewster, decided August 1933 by supreme court, State of Washington (24 Pac. (2d) 438)."

WINSHIP.

Upon receipt of the above cable Mr. Whitaker appeared before the executive committee of the Board of Directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and laid the facts before them. He recommended that in order that there might not be any further delay the awards made by the honorable administrative board of the capital of Puerto Rico be approved. First, for contract 14–A, as the hydrants of the low bidder, the Western Gas Construction Co., are a new product and do not have a service record; second, for contract 14–B, because the disapproval of the award by the administrative board would cause delays at least of six weeks and possibly more, which would, in his opinion, more than neutralize any difference in price, and also that the delay is important when considered in connection with the program for relief in San Juan.

The executive committee of the Board of Directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation accepted the recommendation of Mr. Whitaker and instructed him to approve the awards made by the administrative board of the capital of Puerto Rico under contracts 14–A and 14–B to Sucs de Abarca.

Thereupon the following cable was dispatched to San Juan under date of March 26, 1934: "To avoid further delay, you are advised that this Corporation has no objection to the awards made by the honorable administrative board on contracts nos. 14–A and 14–B to Sucs de Abarca at an estimated cost of $51,241, in view of opinion of Attorney General received today."

On March 27 the following cable was received from the city manager of Puerto Rico: "Cable March 26, regarding contracts 14–A and 14–B, just received at moment administrative board was to meet for reconsideration matter awards according your letter March 12. Please advise if we should continue reconsideration proceedings or accept your cable as final."

On March 27 the following cable was sent to the city manager of the capital of Puerto Rico: "To avoid further delay you are advised that awards by honorable administrative board, contracts 14–A and 14–B, to Sucs de Abarca, at estimated cost $51,241, is satisfactory to this Corporation. Believe it inadvisable to reconsider in view legal complications which would undoubtedly ensue unless all bids were rejected, necessitating readvertisement, with consequent expensive delay."

On March 27 the following cable was received from the city manager of the capital of Puerto Rico: "In accordance with your cable, I called immediately Sucres de Abarca to sign contracts 14–A and 14–B."

The above is a history of this matter up to the present time.

H. E. WHITAKER,
Acting Chief Engineer, Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 7835) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before the Senate took a recess yesterday I offered an amendment to the pending bill, which was read and appears in the proceedings of yesterday.

I am advised that one part of the amendment could be offered only upon a reconsideration of the former action of the Senate under which the House rates upon income taxes and surtaxes, with some modifications, were approved. I ask unanimous consent that I may offer the amendment which I submitted yesterday.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I do not anticipate that there will be any lengthy discussion of the matter, and, of course, I shall not object to the Senator's request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BACHMAN in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, yesterday I offered an amendment to subtitle (B) of the pending bill which deals with normal tax and surtax on individuals. Section 11 of the bill levies a normal tax of 4 percent on the net income in excess of certain deductions and credits. Section 12 of the pending bill deals with surtaxes on individuals. The rates levied begin with 4 percent upon net incomes and excess of $4,000 and not in excess of $8,000. Progressively the rates increase throughout the various brackets until in the last bracket there is imposed a surtax of $532,740 upon net incomes of $1,000,000, and a 59 percent surtax in addition upon incomes in excess of the amount stated.

I think it must be admitted that the taxes imposed in the title referred to are high, but it must be remembered that the present condition of the Treasury and of the country requires the collection of very large revenues. The expenditures of the Federal Government have greatly increased during the past 15 or 20 years. My recollection is that in 1916 the entire expenses of the Federal Government were approximately $1,000,000,000.

During the World War, of course, the demands for revenue were increasingly great, and following the war it was impossible to return to the pre-war revenue status. During the closing years of Mr. Hoover's administration, notwithstanding the revenues derived from taxation were very large, there were increasingly large deficits. It seems almost incredible, in view of the heavy burden of taxation, that in the closing year of Mr. Hoover's administration a deficit of nearly $3,000,000,000 was created. During this period of depression revenues have diminished and the expenditures of the Government have increased. I think the same is true with respect to the States and their political subdivisions. The demands for relief for the unemployed have been colossal, and both the Federal and State Governments have been compelled to borrow in order to meet current demands.

The States and their municipalities experience difficulty in finding sources of revenue, and it should be the policy of the Federal Government, so far as possible, to leave to the States and their political subdivisions as many fields from which revenue may be derived as conditions will permit. Unfortunately the Federal Government has been compelled to invade fields which ought to have been left exclusively to the States. It is obvious that the Federal Government must rely upon individual and corporate income taxes for the greater part of its revenues.

Aside from income taxes the Federal Government's receipts are derived for the most part from customs duties and taxes upon tobacco, liquor, and a rather limited number of commodities. The present condition of the Treasury and the demands made upon the Federal Government conclusively prove that the revenues of the Federal Government must be increased if the Budget is to be balanced and the credit of the Government is to be unimpaired. No mere juggling of figures will meet the situation and no imagination will supply facts to meet realities. The Federal Government needs money, and more money, in order to meet the enormous appropriations which are being made. Billions of dollars have been appropriated to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Public Works Administration, and for relief purposes; and hundreds of millions of dollars have also been appropriated to meet other expenses of the Government, including the demands made for the maintenance of the Army and the Navy. The Government has been compelled to borrow enormous sums in order to meet appropriations made by Congress, and our Government cannot go on indefinitely borrowing and issuing bonds. The credit of the strongest government may be impaired, and it is obvious that disastrous consequences would result to the entire economic structure if our Budget was not balanced and increased deficits resulted. Many governments have met with disaster because they have destroyed their credit by profligate expenditures.

I call attention to these matters merely for the purpose of justifying the heavy burdens of taxation which are being laid upon the people. It would not be the part of wisdom or statesmanship for Congress to refuse to balance the Budget, or to decline to impose taxes adequate to meet all legitimate demands. A humorist has said that a statesman is one who votes against all tax measures and in favor of all appropriation bills. Undoubtedly persons in public life have been defeated for positions because they voted to maintain the credit of their country and opposed measures calling for increased appropriations.

The bill before us will add to the tax burdens of the people, but it is but a fraction of the aggregate appropriations this Congress has already made; and the additional revenue that the Government will derive from the provisions of this bill, plus all other revenue from various sources, will, in my opinion, still be inadequate to balance the Budget. Indeed, additional sums will be required to meet the expenses of the Government, and they can only be met by the issue of Government securities.

I appreciate the fact that heavy taxes imposed at this time may retard industrial rehabilitation. There are evidences of a revival of business. Many factories and mills and plants that were silent for a number of years are now in operation, and millions of persons who a year ago were without employment now find positions in the industries and activities of our country. It is important that all legitimate measures be adopted to promote industrial revival; and it would be unfortunate if the exactions of the Government made necessary to meet the imperative demands upon the Treasury should constitute impediments to business development. I believe that the representatives of business, and indeed the people generally, will respond to the needs of the Government; and while the burdens of taxation will be grievous and perhaps hard to be borne, there will be a patriotic response to the request for increased Federal revenues.

I think it is conceded that the income tax is the fairest tax that may be placed upon the people. Ability to pay is recognized as a sound and just basis upon which to rest a revenue system. Reactionary forces opposed the income-tax system; and it was a long and hard struggle to secure an amendment to the Constitution authorizing the collection of income taxes from the people. I think opposition to this system of taxation has vanished, and the majority of the people would be unwilling to deny the Government the right to obtain a considerable part of its revenues from the incomes received by individuals and corporations.

Mr. President, the able Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] delivered a most excellent address a day or two ago in support of his amendment which called for an increase in the income-tax rates. His amendment dealt with surtaxes and materially increased the rates in the higher brackets. If his amendment had prevailed, then my amendment would not have been submitted.

Mr. President, the amendment which I have offered includes a normal tax of 5 percent, an earned-income credit of 10 percent against net income subject to normal tax, and surtax rates graduated from 3 percent on surtax net income in excess of $4,000 to 65 percent on surtax net income in excess of $500,000. This amendment, if adopted, would yield between forty and fifty million dollars more revenue than H.R. 7835, as reported by the Committee on Finance. The greater part of the additional revenue would come from net incomes of $20,000 and over. A small part would come from net incomes under $20,000, in part due to the fact that taxes on these incomes would be reduced less to meet present taxes (1932 act) than under H.R. 7835, as reported by the Committee on Finance.

Under the proposal which I have submitted, surtax rates would be revised so that there would be a gradual increase in the surtax rates over the present law and also over the pending bill. These increases are from 1 percent to more than 6 percent. The amendment submitted would have advantages over the pending bill in that it would raise more revenue and would rest taxes on a broad group of the larger incomes, i. e., net incomes above $25,000, and, of course, would be higher than under the pending bill.

It is obvious that with the proposed increase in the normal tax from 4 to 5 percent there would be a considerable increase over the pending bill.

Under the existing law the normal tax is 4 percent up to $8,000 and 8 percent upon all incomes in excess of that amount. The House did not continue the 8-percent normal tax, and the Committee on Finance of the Senate accepted the view of the House bill upon this matter. I believed that the situation called for an increase of the 4-percent normal tax, and accordingly have incorporated in my amendment a provision calling for 5 percent.

I shall not take the time of the Senate to institute a comparison of the rates in the pending bill and those in the amendments which I have offered. I shall, however, call attention to a few of the brackets and the difference in the rates and in the taxes which would result therefrom. I might add that in this morning's RECORD will be found a table showing the surtax rates in the pending bill and the surtax rates in the amendment which I have offered. For instance, in the pending bill the surtax rates upon net incomes of $32,000 to $38,000 are 21 percent, while in my proposal they are 22 percent. In the next bracket—$38,000 to $44,000—the pending bill levies a surtax of 24 percent, and in my amendment the surtax is 25 percent. In the bill before us the surtax rates increase 1 percent in each bracket until the maximum surtax rate of 59 percent is reached upon all net incomes of over $1,000,000. In my amendment the surtaxes are higher in the upper brackets, the highest surtax being 65 percent upon net incomes. Upon all incomes of $1,000,000 and over my amendment levies a surtax of 65 percent. With the surtax and the normal tax there would be imposed a 70-percent tax upon net incomes from $1,000,000 upwards.

Mr. President, I shall submit a few figures showing the difference in taxes paid under the Act of 1932 and the taxes which will be required under the amendment that I have submitted. These taxes are those that would be paid by a married man having no dependents. Under the 1932 act the total tax upon an income of $25,000 would amount to $2,520, whereas under my amendment the total tax would be $2,670. Upon a $50,000 income the tax under the act of 1932 would be $8,600, and under my amendment it would amount to $9,455. A tax of $30,100 is imposed under the act of 1932 upon an income of $100,000; and upon the same income under my amendment the tax would be $33,440. Upon incomes of $500,000 the 1932 tax would be $263,600, but under my proposal it would be $293,315. The tax upon incomes of $1,000,000, or over, under the 1932 act is $571,100, and under my amendment they would total $643,190.

Mr. President, I concede that these rates are high, but as I have briefly and imperfectly stated, the situation warrants the application of these rates. Surtaxes falling within the lower brackets cannot be regarded as severe, and those provided in the higher brackets are justified under existing conditions. The taxes are graduated as income taxes should be. Under my amendment they are not capriciously laid.

The graduation, I repeat, is uniform and measures up to the standards established by the most scientific method applied in the imposition of income taxes. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS], as I am advised, has an amendment pending which imposes a flat 10 percent tax upon all individual taxes paid. If his amendment should be adopted, it would produce an additional fifty or fifty-five million dollars. I submit that the amendment which I have offered is more in harmony with the theory of income taxes; and, as I have stated, follows a fair and scientific graduated system such as is applied in surtax schedules. If my amendment is adopted, I do not believe the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan would be necessary and probably would not be pressed. If my amendment is rejected, then the Senate undoubtedly will be called upon to vote upon the Senator's amendment.

I appeal to the Senate to give their support to the amendment which I have offered. The needs of the Government for revenue justify increasing the rates submitted in the pending bill, and Congress should respond to this just and necessary demand.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I do not desire to take up the time of the Senate in discussing the amendment. The committee has made its recommendations as to rates, has passed on that question; it was fully discussed a few days ago, and I hope the pending amendment will be defeated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DUFFY in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

Mr. KING. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. KING. I ask for a division.

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment which was reconsidered this morning.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I should like now to have the Senate take up one of the most controversial propositions in the bill, because, in my opinion, when we get that out of the way we can see the way to final action on the bill shortly. I refer to the oil provision.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. Does not the Senator think that before we consider that provision we had better finish with the income-tax question?

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator desires to offer his amendment now in regard to that feature of the bill, I shall raise no objection.

Mr. COUZENS. I think now is the proper time to offer it, inasmuch as we have been discussing the income-tax rates.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator wishes to offer the amendment at this time, very well.

Mr. COUZENS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. HARRISON. I should like to have the Senate take up the oil matter next.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, at the appropriate time I shall ask for consideration of my amendment, which proposes a tariff of 10 cents a pound on all copper imported into the United States. I should like to have the Chairman of the Committee on Finance advise me when the appropriate time arrives.

Mr. HARRISON. I wish to have some of the committee amendments cleared up first.

Mr. ASHURST. This would not be an appropriate time?

Mr. HARRISON. I certainly trust the Senator will not offer his amendment now.

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi in the matter of procedure.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, yesterday I offered a proposed amendment, but I find that it has not been printed; at least, it is not on the desks of Senators. Therefore, I refer Senators to page 6198 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of yesterday, and I now offer the amendment.

On page 13, after line 24, I propose to insert a new section, to read as follows:

SEC. 14. Increase of tax for 1934: In the case of an individual the amount of tax payable for any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1933, and prior to January 1, 1935, shall be 10 percent greater than the amount of tax which would be payable if computed without regard to this section, but after the application of the credit for foreign taxes provided in section 131, and the credit for taxes withheld at the source provided in section 32.

Mr. President, it is estimated by the experts that this amendment would result in raising an additional $55,000,000 of revenue, and the provision would last for only 1 year. It would automatically expire on January 1, 1935.

I desire to make a few comments with respect to the statement made by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] when he spoke in opposition to the surtax rates offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. On April 5, as appears from page 6083 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the Senator from Mississippi himself spoke of the fact that the Congress had overridden the President's veto and referred to the need of additional revenue.

I desire to point out that when the President sent his Budget message to the Congress, and when he made his recommendation for taxes, the Senate had not overridden his veto with respect to additional compensation to Federal employees and increased compensation to veterans. The Senator from Mississippi stated on April 5:

The other day Congress overrode the President's veto. I have no quarrel with any Senator who voted to override the President's veto, and I would be the last one in the Senate to try to criticize Senators for their votes on that occasion. I believe that those who so voted voted conscientiously. I voted to sustain the President's veto. But, Mr. President, let us see what excuse there is now, simply because Senators overrode the President's veto, for piling up higher taxes. The facts are, with reference to what was done by the Senate in overriding the veto, that the cost of government has increased. Here are the facts: It will cost $27,000,000 more for the remainder of this fiscal year to pay what we gave to the employees of the Federal Government. It will cost between $62,000,000 and $70,000,000 more during the next fiscal year to take care of the provisions of that law with respect to increased wages to the Government employees. There is an increase by virtue of the change in the Veterans' Administration to $82,000,000.

Mr. President, this proposal is presented after the President has sent his Budget message to the Congress, and after both the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives and the Finance Committee of the Senate have considered the tax bill and presented it to the respective bodies.

The press has in many cases misunderstood what this proposal means, and there is argument in the press that it would result in an unreasonable burden on income-tax payers.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. As I understand the Senator's proposal, it is to increase all income taxes by 10 percent.

Mr. COUZENS. A flat increase.

Mr. BORAH. It would apply to the small-income-tax payer the same as to the large one?

Mr. COUZENS. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. Would not that result in raising the larger portion of the taxes from the small-income-tax payer?

Mr. COUZENS. It depends on what definition the Senator would give to the term "small income-tax payer." I shall go into that, if the Senator will wait a moment.

Mr. BORAH. Very well.

Mr. COUZENS. I refer Senators to page 6199 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of yesterday, and to the first table, which applies to a married man with no dependents.

I desire to emphasize that the action of both the House and the Finance Committee of the Senate, and of the Senate, so far today, despite these strenuous times, actually would reduce taxes. In other words, the tax on a man with a net income of $3,000 a year under the present law is $20. The House reduced that to $8. The Senate, under the Harrison amendment left it at $8. Under my proposal it would be raised to $8.80. In other words, a man with an income of $3,000 would pay additional taxes of 80 cents under my proposal.

It is not necessary for me to go down the whole list, but I do desire to have the Senator from Idaho observe that under the existing law the man who has a net income of $5,000 pays $100 in taxes. Under the bill as it passed the House, that was reduced to $80. In these trying times, I can see no justification for that. The Senate, under the Harrison amendment, left it at $80. My proposal would raise it by $8, so that a man drawing an income of $5,000 a year would pay $88 in taxes.

Let us consider the taxpayer with an income of $7,000 a year. Under the present law his taxes amount to $210. The House reduced that to $172. The Senate, under the Harrison amendment, raised it to $177. Under my proposal it would go to $194.70, still some 15 or 16 dollars less than the tax provided for in existing law.

I assume the Senator from Idaho would concede that we had eliminated all those brackets when we had gotten below $7,000. When we come to the man who gets $10,000 a year, the tax under the present law is $480. The House reduced it to $408. Under the Harrison amendment it went up to $465—still some dollars less than under the present law. My proposal raises it to $511.50, which is $31 more than the tax under the existing law on a man who receives $10,000 net income.

Take the man whose net income is $100,000. Under the present law he pays $30,100. The Houses raised his tax to $30,358, or an increase of only $258 per year. Under the Harrison amendment it was raised to $30,810. Under my proposal it is raised to $33,891, an increase of about $3,000 to the man who receives an income of $100,000 per year.

When we reach the million-dollar income, the tax under the present law is $571,100. Under the House bill it is $571,158, an increase of $58. Under the Harrison amendment it is $571,610. In my proposal it is $628,771, or an increase for the million-dollar man of $57,671.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. At what point does the amendment proposed by the Senator effect an increase over present law and over the committee amendment?

Mr. COUZENS. The first increase occurs when the income is $9,000 per year. That is the first jump. In other words, at $9,000 per year the tax is now $390. Under my proposal it is $394.90, a jump of $4.90 a year. From then on, of course, there is an increase over the present law and also an increase over the Harrison amendment and over the House bill.

This is, in my judgment, an emergency time and an emergency measure. Under my proposal it is not intended in any sense to disturb the schedules. This is not a new idea. It has been suggested from time to time, but it is unorthodox so far as a graduated scale for increases is concerned. In other words, it is a 10-percent increase all the way up the line, instead of a graduated increase, which is the orthodox way of fixing surtaxes.

The anticipated revenue, as I said, is estimated at $55,000,000, and it does not even provide sufficient revenue to take care of the increased wages to be paid to the Federal employees alone, which have been approved by the Congress, let alone the increases which have been granted to the veterans.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Has the Senator figures showing what proportion of the $55,000,000 would be raised from income-tax payers whose net income is under $10,000?

Mr. COUZENS. No; I do not think we have those figures. Of course, the proportion is larger in the group of smaller taxpayers, because the number of people is greater than in the group of those in the higher brackets; but we must look at the matter from the individual standpoint, and see what the individual has to pay, and not what the group has to pay, because it is the individual who is affected by the tax.

There has been a great deal of discussion of the effect of low rates of taxation, and I think the Senator from Oklahoma introduced a table several days ago showing that we took in more money with lower rates of taxation than we did with high rates; but the Senator failed to take into consideration the difference in the volume of business. For example, the Bureau of Economic Research shows that our national income in 1918 was $60,408,000,000, while in 1928 it was $89,419,000,000; so with lower rates in 1928 than existed in 1918, obviously we would have more income. We would have had more income under almost any schedule of rates.

Senators will observe that there was nearly a 50-percent increase in the national income from 1918 to 1928. In other words, it seems to me that it is a smoke screen to argue that we take in more money from low rates than we do from high rates without taking into consideration the economic conditions that exist at the particular time.

There is another very interesting fact here.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Since submitting the question to the Senator from Michigan a moment ago, the expert tells me that about one fourth of the $55,000,000 will be raised from income-tax payers whose incomes are under $10,000.

Mr. COUZENS. I have no figures to go by covering that subject. I assume the figure given by the Senator is correct.

The Department of Commerce shows that in 140 cities in 1919 there were bank debits amounting to $455,294,000,000, but in 1928 those bank debits had increased to $806,406,000,000. In other words, there was an increase of almost 100 percent. That in itself is an indication of the increase of commerce when we take into consideration the influence that bank debits have upon commerce, or, vice versa, the influence that commerce has upon bank debits. There was an increase in volume of practically 100 percent. So I want to point out the fallaciousness of saying that lower rates necessarily bring in higher revenue, unless we take into consideration the other economic factors to which I have just drawn the Senate's attention.

The fact that my amendment expires by limitation on January 1, 1935, it seems to me will attract public attention to the emergency, and what the public is having to pay toward settling the Government's debts.

I wish to speak about another thing. I desire to point out to Senators the difference between making appropriations and collecting taxes to raise the money we appropriate. The other day we passed in 7 hours a bill to appropriate $950,000,000 for C.W.A. and relief work. We have now spent over 7 days in trying to raise just half that amount by taxation. Mr. President, it seems to me utter cowardice to pass an appropriation bill carrying $950,000,000 without a dissenting vote, and quarrel for days and days about raising in taxation approximately $450,000,000. Just what kind of statesmanship is it to expend in a few hours $950,000,000, and spend weeks and weeks in trying to raise half that much by taxation?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I much prefer in theory and in practice the graduated method of increasing revenue from the income-tax schedule; but the fate of the amendment which I offered and of that offered by the able Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] indicates that it is not possible to secure the approval of a majority of the Members of the Senate for a graduated increase in the income-tax rates carried in this bill.

I do not wish to go over the ground that I attempted to cover when I spoke in support of the amendment I offered to the income-tax rates. I do wish to say, however, Mr. President, that it seems to me in this critical situation in which the country finds itself at this hour we should not pass this bill without calling upon income-tax payers to meet a part of the burden necessitated by the extraordinary expenditures the Government has had to make in this emergency.

While at first blush it may seem that a flat 10-percent increase in the income tax is inequitable, so far as the principle of graduated taxation is concerned, nevertheless, the effect of the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan is to distribute the burden, because it requires the payment of 10 percent additional of tax figured upon the rates in the pending bill.

As has been pointed out by the Senator from Michigan in support of his amendment, the additional tax which would be paid by those who are referred to as being in the lower income-tax brackets would be practically negligible so far as the individual taxpayer is concerned.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that this is a very reasonable demand to make upon those who are in the fortunate position in these times of distress of securing net taxable incomes. Our income tax contains very liberal exemptions, much more generous than those which are found in the laws of other countries using graduated taxation as a means of raising revenue. It is perfectly absurd to contend that a man who enjoys a net taxable income, after all exemptions, of $1,000,000 would have any reasonable ground to complain if the Government should ask him in this emergency to pay only $57,671 additional tax as is provided in the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan. How can any Senator, how can any taxpayer contend that in the case of an individual who has $500,000 net taxable income it would be an unjustifiable hardship to require him to come forward in this emergency and contribute for the period of 1 year $26,976 additional in an effort to raise the much-needed revenue with which the Treasury must be provided?

A taxpayer with a net taxable income of $50,000, under the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan, would be called upon to pay for 1 year only $1,393.50 additional over what he would pay under the existing law. Whatever may be said about the theory of this amendment, the actual additional burden in the form of tax which, if adopted, it will impose upon the income-tax payer will not, in my opinion, be so onerous that it may be termed unreasonable in times such as these.

Even under the amendment as offered by the Senator from Michigan the net effect will be to reduce the tax collected in the last taxable year under the 1932 law upon those with net taxable incomes of $3,000, $3,500, $4,000, $4,500, $5,000, $6,000, $7,000, and $8,000. Those taxpayers, even if the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan shall prevail, will find that their taxes have been reduced in comparison with those paid under the rates provided in existing law; they will get reductions under the amendment ranging all the way from $10.70 to $11.20. So how can any Senator be concerned about the effect of this amendment upon the taxpayers in the so-called "lower brackets"? After all, an individual in this crisis who enjoys a net taxable income, after all exemptions, of $9,000, is, in my opinion, not a taxpayer over whom we should shed any crocodile tears.

If I had my way about it, as the Senate well knows, we would call upon all individuals with net taxable incomes to contribute a proportionate share of increase in order to meet the burdens of this emergency.

So we may say, Mr. President, so far as the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan is concerned, that all taxpayers up to and including those with net taxable incomes of $9,000 will have a reduction in their taxes as compared to those paid under existing law. It is only after taxpayers with net taxable income of $10,000 that the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan will begin gradually to increase taxes over those payable under the existing law; and the individual with $10,000 net taxable income will only be asked, under the amendment, to pay $4.90 additional tax over that now levied by the existing law.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. I know that the Senator from Wisconsin has given this subject a great deal of thought, and I want to ask him a question: If the amendment of the Senator from Michigan should be adopted, would it have the effect of increasing the income taxes paid by those in the higher brackets as against the income taxes paid by those in the lower brackets in the same proportion as the bill itself provides?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; not in the same proportion. The income-tax payer in the higher brackets would be called upon to pay a 10-percent additional tax over the tax now provided by the bill, just as an income-tax payer in the lower brackets will be called upon to pay a 10-percent additional tax over the tax now levied by the pending bill.

Mr. OVERTON. Perhaps I do not make myself clear. The information I am trying to get is whether the percentage of increase will remain the same? For instance, we will say for purposes of illustration, an income-tax payer is paying 4-percent normal tax; under the amendment now pending he would pay an increase of four tenths, then, of that 4 percent? If he is paying the 50-percent rate, the increase is 10 percent on the 50 percent, which would make, then, 10 times as much additional tax as is being paid by the small taxpayer?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Correct.

Mr. OVERTON. Is that percentage uniform? Is the increase the same?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The increase is the same. To answer the Senator's question in another way, the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan does not attempt to change the rate schedule. All that it attempts to do, and all that it would do, if adopted, would be to levy an additional tax of 10 percent upon the individual over and above what he would pay under the rates contained in the bill as reported by the committee. In other words, the tax is computed under the rates provided in the pending bill, and then 10 percent of that amount of tax is levied as an additional tax by the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. OVERTON. Does it follow that the percentage of increase will be the same as we go from the lower to the higher brackets, as in the pending bill?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The statement made by the Senator is correct. The Senator will find, if he will recur to page 6199 of the RECORD of yesterday, that, for instance, a taxpayer who received, let us say, $3,000 net taxable income, assuming a married man with no dependents, and all earned income, under the present law would pay $20; under the House bill he would pay $8; under the Senate bill, as amended by the amendment offered by the chairman of the committee, he would pay $8, and under the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan, if it were adopted, he would pay $8.80; whereas an income-tax payer similarly situated who had a net taxable income of $1,000,000 would pay $571,100 under the present law, $571,158 under the House bill, $571,610 under the pending bill, and $628,771 under the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I should like to ask the Senator what he thinks about the theory of making a tax bill and then adding 10 percent to the amount of the taxes? In other words, we tax the income, and this amendment proposes to tax the tax on the income. Is that a good theory of taxation?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, as I said at the outset, I much prefer, and would have desired if it had been possible to secure the votes in this Chamber, to levy the increased taxes which I think we are compelled by the necessities of the situation to levy by a graduated increase in the rates of taxation; but such an amendment was defeated, and another amendment which provided a less increase than the one which I proposed was just defeated this morning. I refer to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

The Senate rejected those two amendments and in a final effort to raise additional revenue which I am convinced is desperately needed by the Government in this critical emergency, I am supporting the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan. I was attempting to point out that regardless of its apparent violation of the theory upon which graduated income taxes are levied, yet in its effect in the additional burden which it lays upon the individual taxpayer it does as a matter of practical effect levy a heavier burden upon those in the higher brackets as distinguished from the burden which it levies upon those in the lower brackets.

Mr. LOGAN. May I ask the Senator if it is not true that the effect of the amendment is simply to increase the rate of taxation? Instead of simply providing for a 10-percent penalty on the tax, why should not the amendment provide that the tax rate itself shall be increased 10 percent? Would not that bring about exactly the same result? If the tax rate is 4 percent, why not make it 4.4 percent; or if it is 20 percent, why not make it 22 percent? Would it not bring about exactly the same result that is sought to be obtained in this awkward way?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The same result could be obtained if the necessary increases were made in the rate schedule. But there is one other consideration which may perhaps lead Senators to support the amendment who would not vote for any increase in the schedule rates; that is, the amendment provides that it shall remain in existence for only 1 year. Senators who are convinced that we are coming out of this economic crisis overnight, those who believe we can postpone the day when it will be necessary to increase taxes permanently, can support the amendment without changing the rate and at the same time provide for additional revenue for the period of 1 year.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. The objection is made, as I understand the statements made by the Senator from Wisconsin, that the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan is not on a graduated-scale basis. That is what I want to get clear in my mind. Of course, I readily understand that it imposes an additional tax of 10 percent of the tax which the taxpayer will pay; but it occurs to me that it is graduated to the same extent that the income-tax levies in the bill itself are graduated.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Precisely.

Mr. OVERTON. When we increase them all along the line we graduate the increase just as the rates are graduated in the bill itself.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator has stated it correctly.

Mr. OVERTON. If I am wrong about that I shall vote against the amendment, but if I am right about it I am going to vote for the amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator has stated the proposition absolutely correctly.

Mr. OVERTON. So there is a graduation?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes, in the effect upon the taxpayer.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. COUZENS. I should like to point out to the Senator from Louisiana and other Senators that this is no novel proposal; that Congress on other occasions reduced taxes on a percentage basis. I forget the year, but in one year we reduced the taxes 25 percent without changing the schedule of rates.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator's statement is true. If I remember correctly, it was a reduction sponsored in December 1930 by leaders on both sides of the Chamber, who alleged that a return of about $160,000,000 to income-tax payers would be all that was necessary to stem the tide of the depression and stimulate economic recovery.

Mr. BORAH. But about 90 percent of it got into the hands of the very few.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. LOGAN. My objection to the amendment, and I think I shall vote against it for that reason, much as I should like to see the increase in taxes, is this: It is a tremendous task to make up a revenue bill and requires much investigation and consideration of the matters involved. If we adopt a plan by which we can avoid all of that work by simply passing a resolution or bill providing that we shall increase the taxes provided in some previous measure by 10 percent or 25 percent, it provides an easy way to get out of all that work. For that reason I do not believe the amendment should be adopted.

If it were to provide an increase of the rates, then I could see no objection to it. But as it is, then next year we could say, "We have to increase the taxes again and we will do it by the passage of a little bill that will simply provide an increase of 5 percent or 10 percent of the schedules as they are already established in existing law."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think the Senator need not fear that this would be taken as a precedent. I think the Senator underestimates the resistance of large income-tax payers to increases in their taxes. The Senator can be certain that they will appear in force before any committee which takes up the question of levying any additional taxes.

I also should like to urge upon the Senator's consideration that the amendment, if adopted, can remain in force only 1 year. I am firmly convinced that the emergency expenditures will require increases of tax rates and another tax bill at the next session of Congress.

I sympathize sincerely with the objection of the Senator, in theory, to the amendment. I share it. But, as I said a few moments ago, I have made the best effort I knew how to secure graduated increases in the rates. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has done the same with an amendment which provided a smaller increase. We have failed in that effort. Therefore, if we wish to levy additional taxes upon income-tax payers in this bill, this is our last opportunity to do so.

There is one further consideration that I hope the Senator from Kentucky will bear in mind, and that is if the amendment goes into the bill it will be in conference. It provides taxes which are higher upon incomes than those provided in the bill as it passed the House. Therefore we would have some hope of the proposal for increased rates being adopted by the conference.

Mr. LOGAN. Let me say to the Senator that I had not thought about that when I said a while ago perhaps I would vote against the amendment. I was thinking we were considering it as an original proposition.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No. I am hopeful that events which may occur while the bill is in conference may lead to some increase in taxes upon the income-tax schedules.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I have some of the same misgivings that have been expressed by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN]. While this is not as good as the amendment which was voted for the other day by those of us who hold that view, yet this would mean that a man having to pay a 4-percent income tax would instead pay 4.4 percent, and when he got up to 63 percent he would have to pay 69.3 percent. In that way it would seem to me to provide pretty much the same as the amendment we had under consideration the other day. The only difference I see is that it is a little less hard on the small man. It provides a little less for the small man to pay. It increases his income tax very slightly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It does not provide any increases over existing law until the taxpayer has a net income of over $10,000, assuming that he is a married man and it is all earned income.

Just another word and then I shall conclude, because I appreciate that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is anxious to get along with the bill. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] pointed out, in a question which he asked the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] that one fourth of the increased revenue, if the amendment should prevail, would be derived from taxpayers in the lower brackets. If we were considering a schedule providing a gradual curve of increase in rates, that same statement could be made with equal force because the large number of returns in the lower brackets produce large amounts of revenue.

Mr. President, I sincerely hope that we may have a record vote upon the amendment, and I trust that it will be adopted.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it may be that the emergency which confronts us justifies this kind of taxation, but in my judgment it could not be justified upon any other theory. It undertakes to increase the income taxes by 10 percent, from the lowest to the highest. It is certainly an unsatisfactory method to levy a tax.

The low income-tax payers are paying about all the taxes they can afford to pay. Owing to the emergency which confronts us, I have been quite in favor of levying heavier taxes upon those of greater incomes, and I am now willing to do so. I think, however, that when we increase taxes upon the lower incomes we are discouraging investments; we are discouraging development, and all those things which are essential to end unemployment and to restore business activities. There can be no justification for this kind of a measure unless it is the sheer necessity of raising more revenue.

There is a wiser and more just way. I call attention to an item which it seems to me ought to be considered in connection with the question of raising more revenue, and raising it in a way that will do the least injury to the taxpayer in the sense that he is being taxed at a point where investment is discouraged.

In this tax bill, upon page 26, I find that in the matter of deductions from gross income it is provided that there may be deducted—

In the case of a corporation the amount received as dividends from a domestic corporation which is subject to taxation under this title.

As I understand that exempts from taxation the income derived from dividends upon all stock held in other corporations.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I think that is true, if one corporation is connected with the other as a subsidiary. We have tried to cure that through the holding-company provision as well as the other provision following it, taxing accumulated reserves, and so forth, that are not distributed.

Mr. BORAH. There is a provision in the consolidated-returns section which levies an additional tax of 2 percent that is, in a measure, a remedy for this defect. I admit that. Suppose, however, instead of fixing that tax at 2 percent, we should fix it at 4 percent. In my judgment, from the advice I get from the experts, the holding companies would still have an advantage in this consolidated-returns provision in excess of that which would be covered by the 4 percent, and we would raise the amount which is proposed to be raised here and in a manner far more equitable.

The effect of these two provisions—the section which I have just read and section 141—is to permit the holding companies to escape, in a large measure, taxation upon anything like the same basis that we tax other property and other incomes. The holding companies in the United States pay the largest salaries of any corporations in the United States. They are now deriving the largest incomes of any corporations in the United States. They are deriving them from dividends on stocks which they hold in other corporations; and under the provision I have just read and the consolidated-returns provision they are in a large measure exempt from taxation.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. DILL. Does not the Senator think that the holding company has become almost a menace in this country in its operations?

Mr. BORAH. I think it a serious matter for immediate consideration.

Mr. DILL. I am seriously considering the introduction of a bill that will prohibit the operation of holding companies for public utilities in interstate commerce. I see no way in which we can ever control interstate commerce in this country if those holding companies are not prohibited.

Mr. BORAH. I think holding companies present a problem, and I think they have been greatly encouraged and given a great advantage under our taxing system since 1918. Prior to 1918 we taxed all corporations alike; and all corporations, of whatever nature, had to make reports. After 1918 we began to exempt from taxes the dividends derived by one corporation from stock in another, and the holding companies have increased at a very rapid rate since that time.

The hearings here disclose that they recognize the advantage which they have under the tax laws of the United States. I do not understand why it is not a reasonable and a just thing to do to impose a tax of at least 1 or 2 percent in addition to the 2 percent which is already found in the bill.

The subcommittee which was appointed by the Ways and Means Committee of the House to study the question of tax avoidance has this to say with reference to the matter I am now discussing—that is, the question of consolidated returns—which is a kindred question to the one which arises out of the section from which I quoted a few minutes ago:

Section 141 of existing law permits corporations, which are affiliated through 95 percent stock ownership, to file consolidated returns.

Your subcommittee recommends that this permission be withdrawn.

Bear in mind that upon two different occasions, under two different tax bills, the House has withdrawn this permission. The House has declared against consolidated returns; but the Senate has refused to accede to the action of the House and has placed the section back in the law.

The subject of consolidated returns has long been in controversy. The revenue bill of 1918, as passed by the House, prohibited the consolidated return which had been previously allowed under the regulations of the Treasury Department. The bill as passed by the Senate and finally enacted specifically provided for the consolidated return. The revenue bill of 1928, as passed by the House, denied the right to file consolidated returns, but this provision was eliminated in the Senate. During the consideration of the revenue bill of 1932 a compromise was effected resulting in the levying of an additional tax of three fourths of 1 percent on the consolidated net income. This additional tax was increased to 1 percent by the National Industrial Recovery Act.

It cannot be denied that the privilege of filing consolidated returns is of substantial benefit to the large groups of corporations in existence in this country. This is especially true in depression years, for the effect of the consolidated return is to allow the loss of one corporation to reduce the net income and tax of another, and during a depression more losses occur. Another effect of the consolidated return is to postpone tax. This is because there is no profit recognized for tax purposes on intercompany transactions, and profits on a product of the consolidated group, passing through the hands of the different members of the group, are not taxed until the product is disposed of to persons outside the group.

In the past, when any corporation could carry forward a net loss from one year to another, the consolidated group did not have such a great advantage over the separate corporations. Now that this net loss carry-over has been denied, the advantage of the consolidated return is much greater on a comparative basis.

I have here a statement prepared by some experts which I ask to have inserted in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

The following data have been compiled from the statistics of income prepared by the Bureau of Internal Revenue, Treasury Department, and show the relationship in income and other pertinent information of consolidated groups in comparison with that of separate corporations:

[1] Net loss.

The foregoing statistics disclose some very interesting phases of the operations of consolidated corporations. While approximately 6 percent of all the corporations of the country are in the consolidated group, more than one half of the business transacted by all the corporations of the country was done by consolidated corporations. The percentage of profit made upon gross sales is also very interesting. It is to be noted that the percentage of gross profit made by consolidated corporations upon their gross sales is between 2 percent and 2½ percent in excess of the gross profit made by separate corporations. While Bureau statistics of income do not afford sufficient data to permit of a computation of the net profit from operations, it is a well-known fact that many industries realize a net income from operations of only 2 to 3 percent of their gross sales. It can thus be seen that the margin of advantage enjoyed by the consolidated group is sufficient to put its competitors (single corporations) out of business. The excess percentages of gross profit realized by the consolidated group is also reflected in a like result in their statutory net income.

For example, the percentage of gross profit of the consolidated group for 1928 was 23.67 percent, and of separate corporations, 21.55 percent, or an advantage of 2.12 percent. While the percentage of statutory net income of the consolidated groups was 6.54 percent, separate corporations realized only 4.29 percent, thus giving the consolidated group an advantage of 2.25 percent. The percentages of advantage enjoyed by the consolidated groups for 1929 and 1930 ware as follows: Gross profit (1929), 2.36 percent; (1930), 2.51 percent; statutory net income (1929), 3.33 percent; (1930), 3.29 percent.

The advantage enjoyed by the consolidated groups are translated into totals by comparison of the total net profit and the total sales of consolidated groups with similar figures for separate corporations. While consolidated corporations for 1930 transacted less than 40 percent of the business of all corporations, the statutory net income of this group was 54.61 percent. For the year 1929 the total business was 42.81 percent of the business done by all corporations, yet the statutory net income was 59.68 percent of the total statutory net income of all corporations. For 1930 it should be noted that separate corporations sustained a total statutory net loss of $307,107,855, whereas consolidated corporations realized a statutory net income of $1,858,325,711.

There are those who will contend that the excess margin of profit realized by consolidated groups is due to unity of control and management, thereby resulting in elimination of waste and inefficiency. There are other factors, however, which enable them to realize greater profits than separate corporations. Many of the consolidated groups constitute practically a monopoly in their trade territory, and are therefore able to demand much higher prices for their products. Other groups by reason of the larger resources at their command are liable to undersell their competitors, thus bringing about a condition that enables them to purchase the small competitive concerns at bankrupt prices after which the purchaser raises his product to normal levels.

Mr. BORAH. This statement discloses the remarkable advantage which is given to holding companies through subdivision (p) of section 23, and through the provisions with reference to consolidated returns found in section 141.

By a change of 2 percent in the percentage to be assessed as now provided in the bill, by increasing it to 4 percent, we could raise a large sum of money, and in doing that we should not be taxing small income-tax payers. We should be taxing those who now derive a special advantage by reason of the exemptions, as it were, in the tax law.

If we must raise these taxes, it seems to me we ought to raise them from sources where less injury will be done to our recovery program. I have no doubt but that one of the great items retarding recovery is the taxes which it is necessary to levy—the county taxes, the city taxes, the State taxes, the National taxes. Therefore it behooves us, when we necessarily must make the levy, to make it at a point where it does not weigh against actual investment or the actual recovery program.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire to occupy the attention of the Senate for but a moment on the pending amendment.

There has been some misapprehension with reference to my position on this amendment. Some days ago, when it looked as though we would pass the bill speedily, perhaps that night, after we had debated quite at length the income-tax section of the bill, the Senator from Michigan came to me and said that he would offer this amendment, and he asked me if I had any objection. I told him that I was not authorized by the committee to accept the amendment, but that I would permit it to go to conference.

Since that time quite a great deal of opposition has been raised to the amendment, and, of course, I must stand by my committee action, and the committee made no recommendation of this particular amendment.

In my opinion, if the committee were going to take any action, with reference to these increases, this would be the least objectionable method to pursue, first, because at one time in the past, in 1924, when there was a surplus in the Treasury, we did permit a reduction to the taxpayer of 25 percent of his income taxes. Then, too, this provision would last for only 1 year, and it would result in raising $55,000,000 in revenue. But as I pointed out a day or two ago in my few feeble remarks against the so-called "La Follette amendment", I do not believe the Government should raise more taxes than are required for the orderly administration of the Government.

In view of the circumstances, this not having been recommended by the committee, I hope the Senate will not agree to the amendment.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. FESS. I was led to believe by what I read in the press that the Senator was for this amendment, and I was disturbed, because the Senator had stated in the debate that we should not go beyond what we had already done, because we did not need the revenue.

I agree with the Senator that if it is necessary to raise more revenue this would be the best method of raising it, but I do not want to do it unless we have to have the money.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I was perfectly willing to let the amendment go to conference, if we could have passed the bill the day the Senator from Michigan spoke to me about it. One of the newspapers stated that I had polled my committee. I have not polled the committee. On the contrary, many members of the committee have voiced their disapproval of the acceptance of this amendment, and in view of those circumstances I could not accept it.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. It appears to me it would be reasonable to adopt this amendment and to remove some of the nuisance taxes. In the bill there is provided a tax on furs. Furs are not a luxury—at least not in half of the United States—they are a necessity. Under the bill the Government would be taxing a necessity of life instead of an income. It seems to me that if this amendment should be adopted we could get enough revenue to offset the loss that would be occasioned by doing away with some of the nuisance taxes. After all, a man may be a very poor man, but he may need a fur coat, and under the bill he will have to pay a tax upon it, while a man with an income, who pays an income tax, can afford to pay 10 percent more for 1 year than is provided in the bill up to this time. I should like the Senator from Mississippi to consider that.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I can understand how the Senator's mind is working, and no doubt what he says is quite true—that there would be more revenue if this amendment should be agreed to. There would be more revenue this year to the amount of $55,000,000. Of course, the fur tax will go out of existence on the 30th of June next year. I suggested in the committee that some of the nuisance taxes be eliminated, but the committee did not accept my recommendation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS].

Mr. COUZENS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninety Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS].

Mr. COUZENS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. VANDENBERG (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING]. He is paired with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL]. If the senior Senator from New Mexico were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I merely reannounce the pair between the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] and the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING]. I am not advised as to how the Senator from Florida would vote were he present.

I regret to announce that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] is detained from the Senate on account of illness.

I desire also to announce that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] are necessarily detained from the Senate on official business.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am advised that my pair with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] does not stand upon this particular vote. Therefore, I am at liberty to vote.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I ask for a recapitulation of the vote.

The Chief Clerk recapitulated the vote.

Mr. LEWIS. I am advised that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH] would vote "nay" were he present. He is necessarily absent from the Senate.

Mr. COUZENS (after having voted in the affirmative). I change my vote from "yea" to "nay" so that I may enter a motion to reconsider.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The parliamentary inquiry will be stated.

Mr. BARKLEY. Assuming that the vote is a tie and the amendment is rejected, can the Senator from Michigan change his vote after the vote is counted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If it is a tie vote, the amendment is rejected.

The result was announced—yeas 44, nays 46, as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8617) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes, requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. LUDLOW, Mr. GRANFIELD, Mr. SANDLIN, Mr. BUCHANAN, Mr. MCLEOD, and Mr. SINCLAIR were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 326) referring the claims of the Turtle Mountain Band or Bands of Chippewa Indians, of North Dakota, to the Court of Claims for adjudication and settlement, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. CARTWRIGHT, Mr. CHAVEZ, and Mr. PEAVEY were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 2999) to guarantee the bonds of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, to amend the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. STEAGALL, Mr. PRALL, Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH, Mr. LUCE, and Mr. BEEDY were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATIONS

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DUFFY in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8617) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference requested by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. TYDINGS, Mr. BYRNES, Mr. COOLIDGE, Mr. HALE, and Mr. TOWNSEND conferees on the part of the Senate.

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 7835) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I hope it will be convenient for the Senate now to take up the coconut-oil provision of the bill. The Senate committee has an amendment to the House provision, and I understand the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] desires to offer an amendment before the Senate committee amendment shall be considered. After the amendment of the Senator from Maryland shall have been voted on, I may say that I desire then, if it shall be defeated, to offer an amendment, which I hope will be adopted. I will ask now that the amendment I intend to offer may be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, before the amendment referred to by the Senator from Mississippi shall be taken up, I wish to offer two amendments that have been agreed on by the Treasury Department. I send the first amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 192, after line 25, it is proposed to insert the following new subsection:

(d) Payment of surtax on pro rata shares: The tax imposed by this section shall not apply if all the shareholders of the corporation include (at the time of filing their returns) in their gross income their entire pro rata shares, whether distributed or not, of the "adjusted net income" of the corporation for such year. Any amount so included in the gross income of a shareholder shall be treated as a dividend received. Any subsequent distribution made by the corporation out of earnings or profits for such taxable year shall, if distributed to any shareholder who has so included in his gross income his pro rata share, be exempt from tax in the amount of the share so included.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I have talked to Dr. McGill, the Treasury expert, and he tells me that there is no objection to the amendment except it may be that it ought to be smoothed out somewhat.

Mr. REED. The amendment as presented was written by him.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand that, but they did not have time enough perhaps to perfect it.

Mr. REED. Of course, that may be done later.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That can be done in conference, can it not?

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, yes.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I want to point out that this is one of the most extraordinary amendments that I have ever seen offered. It is offered with the intent of permitting evasion by holding companies of the safeguarding provisions which the committee wrote into the bill. In other words, it permits a stockholder of a corporation to report falsely an income which he has not received. He may report an income from a corporation that is not paying out of its earnings as though he had it, when, in fact, he has not received it; and by so doing, if he is subject to a surtax on his income, he pays that surtax and by that method the earnings accumulated by the corporation avoid the penalty provided in the bill. Mr. President, it is one of the most unusual proposals I ever heard of, to permit a man to report an income which he has not received and to pay on it an income or surtax if he is subject to the payment of such a tax.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I ask what would be the effect on the revenue?

Mr. COUZENS. I have not the slightest idea. Nobody has any idea as to that, for no one has studied this amendment, and it has never been before the committee.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Pennsylvania ought to give some explanation of the amendment, in view of what the Senator from Michigan has said. I hope, however, he will withdraw the amendment, as Dr. MCGILL has been compelled to leave the Chamber, having to go to the Treasury Department. He will be back shortly. Therefore, if possible, I hope we may get through with the other amendment to which I have referred.

Mr. REED. That is all right; there is no hurry about it, and I will withdraw it in a moment.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator desire to explain the amendment in answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. REED. I should like to make a statement in answer to the statement of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. President, it is found by some people who have interests in investment companies that if such a corporation pays out all its earnings, the combination of the American tax with the foreign tax which they might have to pay because of their residence abroad brings the total tax to more than their income. Consequently, the purpose of this amendment is to allow such an individual to pay the full American surtaxes on the earnings of such corporations as if they were distributed; but as they are not declared as dividends, they are not liable for the supertaxes that are levied by foreign countries. It means an increase of revenue to the United States. The whole purpose of the holding-company provision is to stop the avoidance of surtaxes. In this case the taxpayer does not avoid the surtaxes, but he deliberately courts them by paying these surtaxes on his entire pro rata share of the corporation's earnings, although those earnings are not distributed as dividends. The American Treasury gains by it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. REED. Gladly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Has the Senator information as to the amount that will be gained by the incorporation of the amendment in the bill?

Mr. REED. No; I do not think anyone knows how much it will amount to, but it will be something.

So far as the amendment not having been submitted to the Finance Committee is concerned, I am surprised to hear that objection come from the Senator from Michigan, who has just been urging an amendment that was never submitted to the Finance Committee. As a matter of fact, the amendment which I have offered has been passed by the Finance Committee, has been adopted by the Senate, has been adopted by the House, has been signed by the President, and is in the present law. It was omitted, not because anybody objected to it but because it was not thought sufficiently important to be included.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. MURPHY. As I understand the amendment, the stockholder pays taxes on the surplus of the corporation which is not distributed to the stockholder.

Mr. REED. Yes; it is just a book distribution, so to speak.

Mr. MURPHY. Thereby the corporation escapes the penalties imposed on accumulations of surplus beyond the reasonable needs of the business?

Mr. REED. That is correct. The corporation escapes the penalties, but the stockholders have to pay their full surtaxes.

Mr. MURPHY. I understand they pay their taxes; but is the fear indulged that if the corporations do not make distribution and have accumulated surpluses beyond the reasonable needs of the business that then they subject themselves to the penalty tax?

Mr. REED. That is the whole thing; yes.

Mr. MURPHY. Then it is merely to relieve the stockholder residing abroad and subject to an income tax abroad from the payment of such income tax on income that he does not actually receive but only constructively receives?

Mr. REED. That is correct. As I have said, nobody has objected to it in the present law; but it was omitted by the House, and it was through our inadvertence that attention was not previously called to it.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will withhold his amendment.

Mr. REED. If the Senator from Mississippi wishes it to be withheld, I am glad to do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania withdraw his amendment?

Mr. REED. Yes; I am glad to do that.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask the clerk to read, after which I should like to be recognized.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 602, subparagraph (a), at the end of the paragraph, line 15, page 214, after the words "tin plate", it is proposed to insert:

Provided, however, That an amount of coconut oil and coconut oil produced from copra equal to the annual average of same during the past 5 years brought into the United States from the Philippine Islands and of Philippine origin shall not be subject to this tax.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, what I am attempting to do with this amendment is to keep the status quo so far as coconut oil and copra are concerned in relation to their exportation from the Philippine Islands to the United States. Only 3 weeks ago we passed the Philippine independence bill, in which we fixed quotas for sugar, cordage, coconut oil, and various other commodities. As regards the case of sugar, we cut down the quota of sugar which the Filipinos may ship into this country from about a million tons a year to 850,000 tons. They have to shoulder that economic handicap. Now we are proceeding, in spite of the limitations which we place upon copra by the independence bill, to tax that copra. We limit first the amount which they may send in and then tax the copra, even though there is a limitation upon it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I should like to ask the Senator what is the difference between the amendment which he proposes and the amendment which the Senator from Mississippi says he will propose in case the amendment of the Senator from Maryland shall be defeated?

Mr. TYDINGS. There is very little difference except the Senator from Mississippi in his amendment proposes to fix a definite amount of 520,000,000 pounds. My calculations show that the average is closer to 600,000,000 pounds. So, in order to get away from the fact of the actual tonnage received, I define no figure, but provide that importations representing the average for the last 5 years shall be allowed to come in untaxed, and any excess of such average shall be taxed. The Senator from Mississippi fixes the amount in his amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Maryland how the Senator from Mississippi determines the amount that should be admitted duty free?

Mr. TYDINGS. I cannot answer for the Senator from Mississippi, who is momentarily absent from the Chamber.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I shall ask him when he returns.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I do not want to make an oratorical presentation on the subject of liberty, justice, and right, but I want to make the observation that what we are about to do to the Philippine Islands is exactly what England tried to do to the Thirteen Colonies prior to the Declaration of Independence. The Filipinos have no representation in this body. They have no vote in Congress. We are taxing them without any vote. We are limiting the amount of commodities which they may export to this country. We compel them to abide by our tariff laws. I am not going to say that they get all the worst of that, because frequently in cases they get benefits which they would not have if it were not for our tariff and our free market. But the point is that simple justice dictates that we ought not to put a tariff wall around the Philippines of our own making and not theirs, and then deny them the benefits of a situation which we force upon them.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is it not a fact that the balance of trade between the Philippines and the United States is very largely in favor of the Philippines?

Mr. TYDINGS. No; it is not. I have the figures and will look them up before I yield the floor.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I can give him the figures. They imported $40,000,000 and exported $80,000,000.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have the figures here. In 1928 their merchandise imports were $83,000,000 and their merchandise exports $115,000,000. In 1929 their merchandise imports were $92,000,000 and their merchandise exports $124,000,000.

In 1930 their merchandise imports were $78,000,000 and their merchandise exports $105,000,000. In 1931 their merchandise imports were $62,000,000 and their merchandise exports $83,000,000. In 1932 their merchandise imports were $51,000,000 and their merchandise exports $82,000,000.

Mr. CONNALLY. But the Senator is reading the total of their imports and exports.

Mr. TYDINGS. No; I am reading those from the United States. The other countries are carried in the second column. I am reading from the statistical abstract of the United States for the year 1933. In the first column are those from the United States only, in the second column from other countries, and then the total.

Mr. CONNALLY. The testimony before the Finance Committee by the Treasury experts is that we annually export to the Philippine Islands $40,000,000 and annually import $80,000,000.

Mr. TYDINGS. If that testimony was given, it is grossly incorrect. I will give the Senator the component parts in cotton textiles, machinery, and everything else, to show how the totals are arrived at, if he wants me to do so.

But the point is that only 3 weeks ago in this Chamber we entered into an implied understanding with the Filipino people about the means of their obtaining their independence. In that bill we said if they would do certain things we would give them their independence. We wrote into their laws certain economic restrictions upon the things they produce. Now, when the ink is hardly dry upon that document, we come here shooting them in the back.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. TYDINGS. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the Senator turn to the particular agreement that was made in this regard in the Philippine independence bill? I am intensely interested in what the Senator is saying concerning the implied or the expressed obligation which rests upon us in regard to this particular importation, just as I am interested in the bill which we denominate the "sugar bill" in relation to Hawaii, where the conditions are perhaps worse than those here described by the Senator. I am not particularly familiar with the situation and therefore am listening intensely to him. It seemed to me there was an injustice concerning Hawaii that is utterly unjustifiable. I am not very clear as to the other, but am endeavoring at the present time to learn something concerning both.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I am very glad to give the Senator the information, because I consider our covenant with the Filipinos both an implied and an expressed covenant. I base that upon what I shall read. I hold in my hand a copy of the Philippine Independence Act, the title of which act is as follows:

> To provide for the complete independence of the Philippine Islands, to provide for the adoption of a constitution and a form of government for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Section 6 of that bill reads as follows, the title of the section being "Relations with the United States pending complete independence":

> After the date of the inauguration of the government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands, trade relations between the United States and the Philippine Islands shall be as now provided by law, subject to the following exceptions.

Then the exceptions which I have enumerated as to sugar, as to cordage, as to copra, are enumerated. That is the wording of the act itself, that the trade relations between them and us pending absolute independence "shall be as now provided by law." I believe we could not make it much plainer than that, and yet now we are attempting to go back of that understanding and alter that law by putting a new condition of trade relationship upon them.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Until the Philippine people accept the independence, they are a part of he United States.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is true, and then during the transition government they will still be a part.

Mr. BORAH. So the real question is whether it is equitable and just to levy a tax upon a part of the people of the United States on the theory that they are foreigners.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is true. I think the Senator's observation is a large part of my contention.

Mr. BORAH. As stated by the able Senator from California, that is exactly what we are proposing to do in the sugar business.

Mr. JOHNSON. Exactly. May I suggest that we go even farther? It is a question of breaking our faith, I fear. That is the thing that is worrying me more than anything else.

Mr. TYDINGS. May I say to the Senator from California that I am thoroughly in accord with the observations he makes? I feel that in the case of the Philippines our obligation is even stronger than in the other cases, as I now understand them, for this reason: We are about to turn the Philippines loose as a part of the United States. As a condition precedent to the accomplishment of that act, we entered into certain definite arrangements based upon which their transition should take place and ultimate Philippine independence be obtained. We wrote that into the law while their delegation was here. The law was approved by the Congress and the President and accepted by the Filipino mission that was then before Congress, and the Philippine Legislature is now being called into special session to accept and adopt that act, which will mean ultimate Filipino independence.

But, lo and behold, in spite of the fact that the act says "after the date of the inauguration of the government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands trade relations between the United States and the Philippines shall now be as provided by law", and before the commission can get home, we are now writing into a new law, which has nothing to do with Philippine independence, a provision to tax their commodities for the benefit of ourselves in violation of that agreement. I do not think it could be sustained in any court of equity. We cannot expect them to be friendly to us unless we come into court with clean hands. We are certainly violating the implied and, in my judgment, the expressed covenant into which we entered and upon which their independence is predicated.

I think it would be an act which would reflect upon our standing throughout the entire Orient, because every Senator knows that the United States, in its foreign relations in the Far East, is judged primarily by its treatment of the Philippines, which are in the Far East. If we so lately have entered into a covenant with those people, and before they can get home, break it, we being a strong and powerful country while they are weak, how can we expect to promote trade and good will in China and other eastern countries? Those people know that we are breaking our word in this situation.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President——

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. May I ask the Senator when, in his judgment, section 6 of the Independence Act comes into effect?

Mr. TYDINGS. When will it or when does it?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. When does it come into effect?

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course, section 6 came into effect the minute the President signed the law.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes; of course.

Mr. TYDINGS. It is the law of the United States. It is the law under which the Filipinos will seek their independence.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Certainly.

Mr. TYDINGS. The actual commonwealth government provided for in the law will not be set up until this year; but the law is still the law, commonwealth government or no commonwealth government.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes; but the Senator does not get the point I am trying to make. Section 6 of the Independence Act provides that after the date of the inauguration of the government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands trade relations between the United States and the Philippines shall be "as now provided by law, subject to the following exceptions." What does the word "now" mean there? Does it not mean the date of the approval of this act?

Mr. TYDINGS. I think "now" meant the time the act was approved.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The time it was approved?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes. May I say to the Senator that at least that was how all parties, including the President and the Filipino mission, viewed it; and, to support my contention, the President of the United States has written a very strong letter to the Chairman of the Finance Committee pointing out this very thing, that we have "impliedly"—I think that is the word he uses, but I use the word "expressly"—covenanted with them that we will not change this situation pending the transition to independence.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. But is it not true, may I ask the Senator, that the exceptions listed in section 6 of the Independence Act do not come into effect until after the provisional government has been set up?

Mr. TYDINGS. If we should apply a strictly legal interpretation to it, and read it as a contract, I think the Senator's interpretation might be valid; but even if that would be good law, nevertheless I know that the understanding was, and I think the Filipino people accepted the measure in that light, that nothing would be done between now and this fall, when the new government will be set up, which will alter that relationship; and the Senator further knows that this act is not going to be repealed next fall, when the new constitution is adopted by the Filipinos. Does the Senator concede that?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I do not know that I should; but——

Mr. TYDINGS. Wait a minute. I answered the Senator's question; now I want him to answer mine.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Will the Senator restate the question?

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President——

Mr. TYDINGS. Wait just a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Does the Senator from Maryland yield, and if so to whom?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from Nevada if he desires to ask me a question; but, first of all, I should like to have the Senator from Wyoming answer the question which I have asked him.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I ask the Senator to restate his question.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President——

Mr. TYDINGS. Just a moment until I answer the Senator. The Senator from Wyoming says, in effect, that we may tax the Filipino people pending the institution of the commonwealth government.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I have not made any direct statement of that sort; I am asking a question.

Mr. TYDINGS. I ask the Senator if, under this bill, the Filipino people will not be taxed after the institution of the commonwealth government; and I think I am entitled to an answer from the Senator.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is beside the point.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is evading me. He will not answer me.

Mr. McCARRAN. I should like to answer that question.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from Nevada. I will yield to the Senator from California in a moment.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland propounds a question which is based primarily upon a conjecture. In other words, the whole situation is conjectural on the Philippines accepting the measure which we have presented to them providing for their independence. A question such as the Senator has propounded to the Senator from Wyoming must be answered in a conjecture. That is all it could be, because the Philippines have not yet accepted the act. We gave them the very same act heretofore, and they did not accept it; and we have no more guarantee now that they will accept it than we had then.

Mr. TYDINGS. Oh, the Senator is wrong there. I have put into the RECORD the acceptance of this act by practically every man who was opposed to the original act because of certain things in the old measure which are not in the new one.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President——

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. JOHNSON. May I suggest that the question may be resolved in another fashion, too?

This bill constitutes the proposal, the terms upon which independence will be accorded; and it presents as well what the United States will do in case it be ultimately accepted. So we may eliminate whether it has been now accepted or not, because the time of its acceptance has not yet expired. It constitutes our proposal. It is true one party to the contract now has acted; and the query that is presented, if what the Senator from Maryland says is accurate, is whether, having made a proposal in definite terms to the Philippines, we shall now change those terms by a taxing law. Is not that accurate?

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator has expressed the matter in just the right way, as I see it, and much better than I ever could have expressed it; and, if I may pick up his thought where he left off, may I say to the two Senators who have taken part in this debate that I look upon this as a contract made between two governments.

Mr. McCARRAN and Mr. O'MAHONEY addressed the Chair.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have the floor, and I do not yield to anybody.

Mr. McCARRAN. I did not think the Senator would yield for a reply to that.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have the floor. When I finish my statement I will yield, but I do not like to be interrupted at the end of two phrases. I think the Senator who has the floor is entitled to be interrupted only when he has concluded his thought, and I think a little more courtesy might be conducive to better order.

Mr. McCARRAN. I am very sorry that the Senator considers it discourtesy.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I also apologize to the Senator.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not consider it discourtesy from the Senator from Nevada, because I know he is too affable ever to be discourteous to anyone.

Mr. LEWIS. And the Senator, of course, will say the same thing of the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. TYDINGS. Certainly. May I say, however, that we had the sole power to make this contract. We were in the position of a guardian and a ward. We did make the contract. We made it, however, after consultation with the party of the second part, the Filipino people. That transaction has every semblance of a contractual relation to accomplish a certain definite thing. In fact, it is a covenant. It is stronger than a mere assertion of relationship. It has the sanction of our body. We have already sent it through the mails, so to speak; and until it is accepted or rejected or recalled by us it is an offer to the Filipino people of how, why, and when they will get their independence.

It is just as if I had made a contract binding myself, and had sent it to the Senator from Wyoming, who would be the party of the second part. As long as I do not recall that contract—and this one has not been recalled—and as long as he does not accept or refuse it within the time limit specified in the contract, it is my binding offer of what I agree to do.

The Senator implies by his question that we have the right to alter our offer before the party of the second part has actually received it formally in writing.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Now, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator misinterprets my thought. I believe that his delineation of the law is absolutely accurate.

Mr. TYDINGS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. We have made an offer, and I have no doubt that offer stands until it is accepted or rejected; but that is not the question, if I may say so to the Senator.

Mr. TYDINGS. I beg the Senator's pardon. Perhaps in the heat of the debate I misunderstood him, and if I have done so I am sorry.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Until the Filipino people accept that offer we may change, not the terms of the offer but our laws governing trade relations, without in any way affecting this offer. May I ask the Senator if it is not, in his judgment, a fact that we might with perfect propriety, legally speaking, change the present provisions of law having to do with the trade relations pending the acceptance or rejection by the Filipinos, with the understanding that if they do finally accept this offer we are bound by the terms of the offer rather than by any amendment of present law, so that pending the acceptance of our independence offer we have every right to change the general provisions of law so long as we are not changing the offer?

Mr. TYDINGS. If that were to be done, Mr. President, there is only one place where it could logically be done, and that is in the Filipino Independence Act, by amending that act. The Filipino people have no official knowledge of any change in the existing law when we pass an entirely separate measure here.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. If I may take the Senator's time for just a moment, I will say that my first question was directed to him for the purpose of eliciting information from the Senator as to his interpretation of the word "now" in the first sentence of section 6 of the Independence Act. His interpretation was exactly as my own, namely, that we are bound by the provisions of law that were in existence at the date of the passage of the Independence Act. Until the Filipinos accept or reject that act, however, any modification of law now will not be a modification of the offer, it will be merely a modification of the law pending the action by the Filipinos; and I feel that we are both morally and legally entitled to make any change we may desire.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, as I said a moment ago, the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] developed the thought so concisely that any words of mine seem to be superfluous; but I think we have made a formal offer of independence to the Philippine Islands. At least, they think we have. That formal offer is now in transit to the Philippine Islands. Now, before they actually receive it—they are carrying it home with them to sign it over there, where it must be signed under the conditions set forth in the offer—here we are, a strong, powerful Government, simply because we have the might, going back on our word.

Can that bring us any credit? Can it bring us any friendship in the East, or in the South, for that matter? Is that the proper course for a government to pursue? Is justice so foreign to our thoughts that no sooner do we meet a weaker people and deal with them, and their backs are turned, then we go out and undo all the things we promised them we would not undo?

Spain in its palmiest days, in spite of all the stories about Spanish oppression, as far as I have been able to read the history of Spain in the Philippines, never attempted anything to equal what is proposed by this bill. We intervened in the Philippine Islands to eliminate Spanish cruelty, and yet we are inflicting upon these people an economic cruelty and an economic injustice without any cause whatever.

Mr. President, I want to make one more observation. I cannot speak for the President of the United States, because I do not know where he stands on this matter, but I am afraid that if this provision is written into the bill, it may result in the veto of the measure. That may be all right; perhaps Senators do not care about a veto, but certainly, if there is to be no limitation here, if we can tax the Filipino people so shortly after we passed an independence measure, I believe the President would be justified in vetoing this bill.

I appeal to Senators to give a weaker nation the opportunity to secure their independence in terms of the act which we passed here only a month ago. If we will do that, I believe the Filipinos will accept the measure we passed, and Filipino independence will be on its way.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. DILL. Do I understand the Senator's argument to be that if the Filipinos accept the proposal for independence, Congress, during all the next 10 years, will be forbidden to change in any way the taxes upon the products which may come from the Philippines?

Mr. TYDINGS. Legally, no.

Mr. DILL. Morally?

Mr. TYDINGS. Morally, a thousand times, yes.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat, I should like to ask him whether he is familiar with the amendment which has been offered by the Senator from Mississippi, which deals with this subject in a different way, perhaps, but which I understand is more or less acceptable. Is it acceptable?

Mr. TYDINGS. I would much rather have it, and I think it is a step toward justice and fair play for the Filipinos, more so than the bill itself. I feel, however, that the right thing to do is to carry the provision as embodied in my own amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. The amendment which the Senator from Mississippi presents—and I am not familiar with its terms—would be reasonably satisfactory from the standpoint of importations?

Mr. TYDINGS. I should not like to answer that question. I think it is much better, and I think the Senator from Mississippi has tried to reconcile the conflicting interests; but I could not support it.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Maryland a question or two.

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. CAREY. The Senator is aware of the fact that, under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, it is possible for the Secretary of Agriculture to levy taxes on commodities which compete with other commodities. There are on hand in this country a large amount of fats in storage, consisting of butter, lard, tallow, and cottonseed oil, most of which are subject to processing taxes. Does the Senator think it fair to relieve the Philippine Islands from a tax such as the one under discussion when the American farmer is subject to all these taxes?

Mr. TYDINGS. In answer to the Senator's question I will say that I do not think it was fair for the United States to take the Philippine Islands in the first place. They were the islands of the Filipino people. We had no business with them. We took them at the point of the bayonet, and finally bought them from Spain. We then promised them independence. We compelled them to live under our economic set-up, and I cannot see anything but simple justice in letting them go back where we said we were going to send them, under the most favorable conditions, after we have forced our will on them for a period of 36 years.

Mr. CAREY. I cannot see why they should be exempt from the payment of the same tax we are putting on ourselves.

Mr. TYDINGS. They are not the United States of America. They are an appendage.

Mr. CAREY. They are competing with the United States.

Mr. TYDINGS. Certainly; but did we not force them to compete with the United States? Do we not compel them to trade with us? Can they ship their sugar elsewhere? They cannot trade with the rest of the world. They have to trade with us because our tariff laws are their tariff laws.

Mr. CAREY. They are shipping a great deal more to this country than we are shipping to them.

Mr. TYDINGS. We compel them to do it. We would not let them ship to other countries. We would not let them trade with other countries. We compel them to trade with us, and now we are complaining because we got the worst of a deal which we forced upon them.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, does the Senator from Wyoming agree with the statement that a resident of the Philippines cannot ship coconut oil to any other place than the United States? Is that a fact?

Mr. CAREY. I was not aware that they could not ship coconut oil to any other place. Is that true?

Mr. BYRNES. I understood that to be the statement of the Senator from Maryland. I wondered whether the Senator from Wyoming agreed with it.

Mr. CAREY. I thought they could ship it to other countries.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator knows that the tariff laws of the United States apply to the Philippine Islands. He concedes that, does he not?

Mr. CAREY. I concede that; yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does the Senator expect them, when they are a part of the United States, to trade with the United States or to trade with some country which has no tariff relations with the United States?

Mr. CAREY. They will naturally trade here, because they have no tariff to pay.

Mr. TYDINGS. And we do not have any tariff to pay on our exports to the Philippine Islands.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maryland yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. REED. Is the Senator quite certain of his statement that the American tariff law applies to imports into the Philippine Islands?

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator knows that Filipino acts have to be signed in some cases by the President of the United States, and in all cases by the Governor General appointed by the President of the United States. The Senator also knows that since the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act, the Filipino Legislature, at the suggestion of the then administration, passed a new tariff act to conform exactly with the American tariff act. Then, when they came in more direct contact with the countries which had depreciated currencies than we ourselves came in contact with them, they passed a tariff law, imposing rates even higher than did ours, so as to protect the American market in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. REED. That is something very different from having the American laws extend to their imports. Furthermore, I should like to say to the Senator that in the last month of which we have any record, December 1933, the Philippines were importing substantially more from Japan than from the United States.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have not those figures, and I cannot answer them; but I do know this, that everything we make goes into the Philippine Islands without any tariff being levied against it. We have a free market in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. REED. That is quite true, and we have given them a free market here for all their products.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; but we set up the economic system. They did not set it up.

Mr. REED. Furthermore——

Mr. TYDINGS. Is not that true?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. The market, such as it is, if we are getting the worst of it, is the market we created, not that of the Philippine people.

Mr. REED. No——

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator agrees with that, does he not?

Mr. REED. I agree that we have free trade with the Philippines.

Mr. TYDINGS. Who granted that free trade?

Mr. REED. Where would they be if they did not have it?

Mr. TYDINGS. Who made it free? Why are Senators complaining about the result of their own actions?

Mr. REED. I am not complaining about the result of our own actions, but I say that when we impose processing taxes which bear so cruelly on our farmers as does the present tax on hogs, for example, we are only treating the Filipinos as we are treating our own people when we put similar taxes on their products.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maryland yield to me?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. A little while ago the Senator from Maryland quoted some figures, and I am sure he does not want the RECORD to be in error.

Mr. TYDINGS. Has the Senator my book?

Mr. CONNALLY. I have the Senator's book, and the figures in the book do not seem to agree with those he read.

Mr. TYDINGS. Very well.

Mr. CONNALLY. The statistics show that in 1932—and that is as recent as these statistics go—the Philippines imported from the United States $51,000,000 worth of merchandise. They sent us $82,000,000 worth of merchandise. The total export trade of the Philippines with the whole world amounted to $95,000,000, and we took $82,000,000 of it. So the United States is practically the only market the Philippine Islands have had for their exports. I just wanted to correct the Senator.

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Senator will read my remarks in the RECORD tomorrow, he will see that he has said exactly what I stated when I read from that book. I started with the year 1929, and I said the merchandise imports of the Philippines in 1929 amounted to $92,000,000.

Mr. CONNALLY. I asked the Senator to talk about the imports from the United States.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not know what the Senator asked me to do, but he will find in the RECORD tomorrow morning that my remarks were as accurate as the figures in this book.

Mr. CONNALLY. Tomorrow morning the Senator will have the book, and his record will then be right, of course.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator can go into the clerk's office and get the figures now, if he cares to.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Texas asked the Senator from Maryland to state what the imports from the Philippine Islands to the United States were, and what the exports from the United States to the Philippines were. Then the Senator quoted the total exports and imports of the Philippines, without respect to the United States, which was not responsive. The testimony before the Committee on Finance was that the Filipinos export to the United States just about twice as much each year as we export to them.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am sorry the Senator from Texas insists on misinterpreting what I said. I read from the first column, and over the first column is this caption, "From the United States." I furthermore said that the exports and imports from other countries were carried in a separate column, and that the total was shown in the third column.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not concerned with what the Senator said——

Mr. TYDINGS. Wait a moment. I did not read any figures applying to all countries. I read only figures applying to the Philippines and the United States.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Texas is not concerned with whether or not the Senator made that statement. All he is concerned with is getting the facts.

Mr. TYDINGS. If I must approach this bill in absolute frankness, it is nothing more than an attempt to tax a helpless and unrepresented people to satisfy a few people in the United States who have put a little fire under Congress. There is not an ounce of justice in it. It is cowardly for a great Nation like this to have passed an independence bill only a month ago and now shoot the people in the back as they are going home with the document.

I have been approached by people from my own State who were over here by the dozens saying they wanted this tax imposed in order to keep Filipino products out of this country. That is all that is behind it. There is not an ounce of revenue in it. It is a lie on its face. It does not deserve the support of any man who wants to keep faith and to be honest with the Filipino people.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I am interested in the legal phase of the question more than I am in the question of lobbyists and matters of that kind. I believe I understand the Senator from Maryland to say that the Philippine independence measure was an offer to the Philippine people of independence on certain terms, as set out in that particular act.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. LOGAN. Then it is an offer to the Philippine people which must be kept open by the United States until the Filipinos have a reasonable opportunity of accepting it. I believe that is true?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct. The time limit is fixed in the act.

Mr. LOGAN. The time limit is fixed in the act itself, but it is reasonable. The United States of America then must keep itself in position to comply absolutely with the terms of the independence act when the time comes. I think the Senator will agree with that.

Mr. TYDINGS. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. LOGAN. One more question. Suppose the United States should now desire to impose some tax. Could it not do so without interfering with that option, provided the tax would pass out of existence upon the acceptance by the Philippine people of the option which we have extended to them?

Mr. TYDINGS. I think that interpretation, as a legal matter, is very exact.

Mr. LOGAN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. TYDINGS. And I am not arguing against that interpretation. After this fall, when the commonwealth government is set up, that tax would have automatically to stop to stay within the letter of the law.

Mr. LOGAN. I agree fully with the Senator.

Mr. TYDINGS. But if we put it in here, we all know that Congress will not be in session next November, and there will be no provision in the act to cancel a tax when the new government is set up. Therefore we have no leg to stand on if we want to keep our faith with the Philippine people.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. May I now ask the Senator a factual question? Having read the amendment, I learn that the Senator desires to exempt from the provisions of this tax the importations of coconut oil in the original form and also as derived from copra, to the average of the importations for the past 5 years.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is right.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That average, I take it from the figures I have here, is approximately 519,000,000 pounds or 520,000,000 pounds, as set forth in the amendment which is about to be offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. The independence act, however, provides for an exemption of only 200,000 long tons.

Mr. TYDINGS. Of oil.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Or 448,000,000 pounds.

Mr. TYDINGS. Of oil.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. This is also oil, is it not?

Mr. TYDINGS. No; that is oil and copra.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. But is it not oil derived from copra?

Mr. TYDINGS. In the Philippine Independence Act, which I hold in my hand, the wording is, on page 4, section 6, subsection (b):

> There shall be levied, collected, and paid on all coconut oil—

The Senator's amendment comprehends not only coconut oil but copra from which coconut oil has not as yet been extracted, and that accounts for the disparity between the oil and the copra in the amendment pending.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. My understanding is, if the Senator will pardon me for saying so, that the average importation of coconut oil, including the coconut oil derived from copra, for the past 5 years, is 519,000,000 pounds.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have heard that asserted as the correct figure. My amendment does not fix the figure; but if that is the correct figure, that figure would be the sense of my amendment.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Then it seems to me that the amendment which the Senator presents affords the Philippines a larger exception than they would get under the independence act.

Mr. TYDINGS. No; that is not true, because under the independence act they would not have to distill any oil in the islands, and they could ship unlimited copra to the United States, because there is no limitation on copra; but under this amendment they could not send oil into the United States in any form in excess of 519,000,000 pounds. Do I make that plain?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. In the colloquy that took place between the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Maryland I understood the Senator from Maryland to concede that it would be proper to levy this duty, provided it disappeared when the Philippines acquired their independence. Is that correct?

Mr. TYDINGS. No; I think the Senator misunderstood the question of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BORAH. I must have done so.

Mr. TYDINGS. The question the Senator from Kentucky asked the Senator from Maryland was whether, pending the establishment of the transitory government known as the "commonwealth government"—which would be the real acceptance by the Philippines of the law, not the accomplishment of independence—whether in that interval we might not expressly tax them before they had accepted independence. I said that perhaps legally it might be done, but morally I did not think we could do it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it seems to me that aside from the independence act, and aside from all other questions that arise out of it, there is this simple proposition which is most difficult for me to solve, and that is that the Philippines are still a part of the United States.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is right.

Mr. BORAH. And the question that is involved in this controversy is, Shall we treat them as a foreign country when they are now a part of the United States?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is true.

Mr. BORAH. I think that is a pretty difficult problem for Congress to solve. It is simple enough in one way, but quite involved in another way. But I shall not discuss it in the Senator's time.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; and may I say to the Senator from Mississippi, before he asks me whatever he has in mind, that during his absence I so worded my amendment, without naming the figure in the amendment, as to take the average shipments for the past 5 years, so that there could not be any controversy as to whether the figure offered in the amendment was right or wrong.

Mr. HARRISON. That was what I was going to ask the Senator about, because he had in mind offering his amendment without any limitation as to the amount of copra or coconut oil that might come from the Philippines; and I notice, on reading it, that he refers to the average for the 5 years. There is not a great deal of difference between us. However, I do not understand where the Senator gets the high figures that he uses, because in a letter from the Secretary of War, written to me, he mentions 520,000,000 pounds as a very fair figure; and Mr. Ryder, who is the tariff expert for the N.R.A., and who represents the Tariff Commission, says the 5-year average is 520,000,000 pounds, or a little under that, 519,000,000 pounds.

Mr. TYDINGS. I believe that is correct.

Mr. HARRISON. In view of the fact that the Senator is trying to have a 5-year average exempted and that the administration very much opposes the amendment which we want here unless we put some exemption in it, I do not see why, if 520,000,000 pounds is right, we cannot get together on the proposition.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am glad the Senator from Mississippi came into the Chamber at this point. I was hoping that if my amendment carried the same thought as his amendment, we might avoid a controversy as to what was the average for 5 years by leaving that matter open; and then, if the figure of 519,000,000 pounds is right, I shall be with the Senator in this respect.

Mr. HARRISON. I am sure there are a good many Senators here who want to abide by the independence act, but, at the same time, they desire to put a fair limitation on imports. I know I share that view; and if there is no substantial difference between the two proposals, and 520,000,000 pounds can be agreed on as the 5-year average, I hope the Senator from Maryland will offer, instead of his amendment, the amendment that the experts have prepared, which covers the situation quite fully.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I appreciate the position of the Senator from Mississippi. I think he has tried very hard to be fair. Personally, I do not believe we should have any limitations on the importation of Philippine products, other than those contained in the independence act, pending the acceptance of the act and the accomplishment of Philippine independence. I could not vote for the proposition offered by the Senator, however, because I am not certain that 519,000,000 pounds is the correct figure.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. If the Senator is uncertain as to what the averages are, may I ask why he does not adopt a modification of the language of the independence act, and abandon all mention of averages?

Mr. TYDINGS. I should be delighted to do that. I should like to offer that as an amendment, if the Senator from Mississippi would take it, because that refers to coconut oil only and would leave out copra altogether.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. If I may have the attention of the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from Mississippi for a moment. It is a fact, is it not, that coconut oil and its products coming in from other countries than the Philippines pay 2 cents tariff now, and they come in free from the Philippines?

Mr. TYDINGS. I did not understand the Senator.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. There is a tariff on these products coming into the United States——

Mr. TYDINGS. There is no tariff on these products coming from the Philippines at all.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Not from the Philippines, but coming from other countries.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator means from foreign countries?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes; from foreign countries.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. There is a differential in favor of the Philippines of 2 cents a pound?

Mr. TYDINGS. There is no tariff at all on the Philippine imports.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. No. They have the advantage over foreign countries of 2 cents a pound.

Mr. TYDINGS. And we have the advantage in the Philippines over all foreign countries, too.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I cannot see the difference between putting a processing tax upon coconut oil and upon copra and processing copra into coconut oil, and putting a processing tax on hogs or any other things manufactured in the United States.

Mr. TYDINGS. But is not the processing tax put on hogs for the benefit of the hog growers? Let me ask the Senator that question. I do not say that it is, because I did not support it, but I am asking the Senator, Is not the processing tax put on hogs for the benefit, in thought at least, of the hog growers?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is this tax put on for the benefit of the copra growers? Then where is the analogy?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The purpose of this tax is not to discriminate against the Philippines.

Mr. TYDINGS. O Mr. President, the purpose of this tax is to destroy the Philippines.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Wait a moment; I have the floor. It is not for the purpose of discriminating against the Philippines, because it leaves the Philippines in the same relative position with their competitors in which they previously were. The purpose of this tax is to raise the price level in the United States of domestic articles that compete with Philippine products. The purpose is to raise the price of butter, if you please. It is a price-raising tax.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. Why cannot that all be dealt with under the Agricultural Adjustment Act?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I do not see why it cannot; but why not deal with it here?

Mr. MURPHY. There is no processing tax on coconut oil.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Or on copra.

Mr. MURPHY. Or on copra.

Mr. BORAH. There is none, but why could there not be one?

Mr. BARKLEY. Those products are not included in the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, if there is a processing tax upon hogs, why cannot a competitive tax be levied upon coconut oil if such oil comes in competition with our product?

Mr. BORAH. Jute bags are not a basic commodity, and yet there is a processing tax on them because they are supposed to come in competition with something in the way of cotton bags.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, if the Senator from Minnesota will yield further, I think they call it a compensatory tax. Would the Senator agree that if the Filipinos are citizens of the United States, there could be levied upon them a compensatory tax; and if they are not citizens of the United States, there could be levied tariff duties upon their exports into the United States?

Mr. BORAH. My contention is that they are part of the United States, and that the Agricultural Adjustment Act has the same application to them as it has to producers in the State of Idaho.

Mr. BYRNES. They must be one or the other.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. May I say to the Senator from Idaho that the Philippines buy about $16,000,000 worth of our cotton goods every year, and, of course, assuming that the processing tax is passed on, they are already paying the cotton-processing tax.

Mr. BORAH. I was simply speaking of the legal right to treat those people as citizens of the United States.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is the big point.

Mr. BORAH. What we are asked to do, I say, is an almost impossible thing, and that is to treat citizens of the United States as foreigners. We have an act by which we could treat them as citizens and deal with them the same as with other citizens of the United States, and that is the Agricultural Adjustment Act. There is no reason why these matters should not be dealt with under that act. It may be that it would require an amendment. I have not the act before me.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. I may say to the Senator from Idaho that the Secretary of Agriculture suggested that this matter should be dealt with under the Agricultural Adjustment Act and that we might fix quotas, and processing taxes, and so on.

Mr. BORAH. Did he suggest it?

Mr. HARRISON. He did suggest it.

Mr. BORAH. Did he suggest it seriously? [Laughter].

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; he suggested it very seriously; but personally I could not see where there would be much chance in the Senate in securing the adoption of the proposal.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, the amendment reads as follows:

> There is hereby imposed upon the first domestic processing of coconut oil, * * * a tax of 3 cents per each pound thereof processed, which shall be paid by the processor.

If that is not a processing tax, I do not know what it is.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to show how much benefit this will be to the steer raisers in the United States. This tax will make a thousand-pound steer bring 5 cents more for the man who raises it. By actual calculation it is worth 5 cents to the man who owns a thousand-pound steer.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. It is estimated that it will raise the price of butter at least 2 cents a pound. What I cannot understand is that there should be so much argument against levying a processing tax upon a product imported into this country and paid for by the American people. They would pay that tax.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator speaks of "the American people", but those are American people who are in the Philippines.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes. I mean people who live within continental United States.

Mr. BORAH. That is different. I wish we had never gotten outside of continental United States.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. So do I.

Mr. President, I wanted to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this is not treating the people who live in the Philippine Islands any differently than the people who live within the confines of continental United States are treated. We are having processing taxes levied upon one thing or another right along, and I cannot see where the argument of the Senator from Maryland holds true.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] used rather aggressive and intemperate language a while ago in denouncing those who sponsor this tax. I do not regard that as argument; and I hope nobody else does. In the matter of taxes, I think the people of continental United States are entitled at least to a portion as much of the interest of their representatives in the Senate as are the Filipinos. I have always believed in Philippine independence. I voted for the bill presented here by the Senator from Maryland and others in favor of Philippine independence. I am perfectly willing for the Philippines to be independent. I do not regard the levying of this processing tax as any injustice on the people of the Philippine Islands.

The Senator from Maryland says there is not a nickel's worth of revenue in the provision. If he knew what happened before the Finance Committee, he would not make that statement. American interests as there represented testified that they have to have coconut oil whether it bears a tax or not. If they do, it means a lot of revenue for the Treasury, because if they have to bring it in, they have to pay the tax.

I ask gentlemen whose minds are so sensitive about putting a tax on people, Are we not taxing the American people by processing taxes? Does not every one of us who wears a cotton shirt pay a processing tax to the Government for the privilege of wearing the shirt? Are we not paying the processing tax on the food we eat?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think that observation of the Senator is essentially a correct and sound one, but may I call to his attention the fact that the Filipinos buy $16,000,000 worth of cotton goods a year from us, and therefore pay the processing tax on cotton.

Mr. CONNALLY. How much do they buy?

Mr. TYDINGS. They buy $16,000,000 worth.

Mr. CONNALLY. Very well.

Mr. TYDINGS. So that they pay just as much tax upon their cotton goods as anybody in the United States pays upon such goods today.

Mr. CONNALLY. Why should they not?

Mr. TYDINGS. Nobody is complaining about that.

Mr. CONNALLY. What is there about a Filipino that is so sublimated as to make him better than an ordinary American citizen who has to sweat down in the cotton patch in the South or in the cornfield in Maryland to make a living, whereas the Filipino sits under a coconut tree and fans himself and lets the coconuts raise themselves. [Laughter.]

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I thought the Senator was inferentially saying that the American people paid a tax that the Filipinos did not pay. I merely arose to say that he was in error, and that the Filipino people pay the same tax that the American people pay.

Mr. CONNALLY. Oh, yes; the Senator from Maryland keeps talking about the Filipinos buying some cotton. If they wore more clothes, they would buy a great deal more cotton than they buy now. Of course, they buy a little cotton, and yet they sell the United States $82,000,000 worth of products a year out of the whole $95,000,000 worth which they sell the entire world. We afford them practically the only market which they have. They ship us twice as much stuff as we ship them; and yet, because we want to put a little, measly tax on some of their coconuts, which grow while they sleep, gentlemen get all "het up" and wrought up about Philippine independence; they beat their breasts and wave the flag and talk about the poor Filipinos. We gave the Filipinos independence last spring, and they would not have it. If a little processing tax on a few of their coconuts is going to keep them from accepting independence, they have not got any business with independence. A nation that would sell its aspiration for liberty and for independence, as their proponents here on this floor talk about the independence and freedom for the Philippines, for a little, measly tax on a few coconuts has not much business with independence, if that is the kind of political aspirations and ambitions its people have.

Processing taxes! We are taxing our people on almost all products. The Senate passed a bill here the other day which says to the cotton farmer, "If you raise above a certain number of bales of cotton, we are going to put you in jail." Yet if a Filipino sends over a few more coconuts than we think he ought to send over, he is outraged, and his torchbearers here on the floor are outraged.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If I understood the Senator correctly, he indicated that this tax will produce a substantial revenue.

Mr. CONNALLY. I said the testimony before the committee was that manufacturers in this country have to have coconut oil in order to make soap; that such oil would have to come in whether we put a tax on it or not; and I said if that were true it would bring in some revenue.

Mr. VANDENBERG. May I suggest to the Senator in that connection that if there is anything invidious about the amendment it could be substantially cured by a further amendment which would remit the proceeds of the tax to the Philippine government itself.

Mr. CONNALLY. We have given them a good deal of money and I do not suppose giving them a little more would hurt anything.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It would, at least, remove the argument that we are taxing them against their will and robbing them of the proceeds.

Mr. CONNALLY. We have taxed nearly everybody against their will; we are now taxing people against their will.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes; but not without a spokesmanship in connection with levying the tax.

Mr. CONNALLY. I would not care if we gave them the tax back, as the Senator suggests.

Let us see what else we are doing to the American farmer. We tell him by law how much he has to cut down his cotton production. If he does not do it we are going to put him in jail or otherwise punish him. Every time we cut down our cotton production we cut down our cottonseed. We do not have as much cottonseed oil to sell the next year as we have now. In the meantime we fill up the gap which we have created in our own product by letting the Philippines send over here larger amounts of oil and more coconuts. What good does it do to reduce our own production of oil if we are going to permit the Philippines or the Africans or the people in Borneo or Java or the other islands of the seas simply to fill up the gap we are trying to create, by their shipping us some more of their oil that does not require any labor to produce? That is the situation we are facing. There is no use ignoring the facts. Senators may look wise and put their glasses out on the end of their noses and peer over them and talk about all of these abstract questions, but I am stating facts.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I want to ask the Senator a question which I submitted a few moments ago. Could not all this be done under the present Agricultural Adjustment Act?

Mr. CONNALLY. It is a long process to have the Department of Agriculture tinkering with the Philippines. It might be done. I have great respect for the opinions of the Senator from Idaho, but whenever I am trying to do something and a man comes up and says, "This is fine; but why not do it some other way?" I always have a suspicion as to whether he wants me to do it at all or not.

Mr. BORAH. I am thinking of the fact that the Agricultural Adjustment Act covers exactly this condition of affairs. Why should we legislate in this bill in addition to what we have already done by the Agricultural Adjustment Act?

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator's suggestion is logical, but we are not legislating now with reference to the Agricultural Adjustment Act. We have not got it up now, but we have this other matter up, and as long as we have it up why not do it? Why put off till tomorrow what we can do today?

Mr. BORAH. I am contending that it has already been done.

Mr. CONNALLY. But it has not already been done.

Mr. BORAH. Why has it not already been done? The Secretary of Agriculture has the power under the Agricultural Adjustment Act to do what it is proposed here shall be done.

Mr. CONNALLY. On coconut oil?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not think coconut oil is mentioned.

Mr. BORAH. Neither are jute bags.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator for his interruption, but I do not agree with him.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. FESS. The Senator made a statement a moment ago that is interesting to me.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am flattered if the Senator from Ohio is interested. [Laughter.]

Mr. FESS. In referring to the testimony given before the committee he made an interesting statement. I am concerned in whether the statement is true that coconut oil must come in anyway, whether there is a tariff on it or not.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is what the Senator's Ohio constituents, Procter & Gamble, testified before the committee.

Mr. FESS. What is the Senator's opinion as a member of the committee?

Mr. CONNALLY. As a member of the committee, I think some of it will come in anyway. I do not think all of it will come in. That is my opinion. I regret to take issue with the distinguished Senator's constituents, Procter & Gamble, who are now more interested in the Filipinos than they have ever been before in their lives.

Mr. FESS. Let us omit Procter & Gamble.

Mr. CONNALLY. All right; I will omit them. I hope to omit them when the vote comes.

Mr. FESS. What I want to know is this: Do we have to have the articles we are now importing in order to produce soap products in the United States? Is it something we are compelled to have, whether we put a tax on it or not? If we do not have to have it, that is one thing. If we do have to have it, that is another and entirely different thing.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator in all frankness that the issue was a contested issue. There were experts before the committee who said we could get along entirely without coconut oil. They said there is an interchangeability between all of the vegetable oils and fats as well as animal oils and fats, and that we can make just as good soap, and even better soap, without them as we could with them.

On the other hand, there were experts who talked just as glibly on the other side, who said they would have to have coconut oil to make certain kinds of soap. For instance, one of them said that in the matter of silk textiles, silk stockings particularly, they need coconut-oil soap because it is better for the silk-texture goods.

But the opinion on the issue was not unanimous. The committee had to reach its own conclusion based on its common sense. My view is that, of course, some of the coconut oil will continue to come in. It will still pay a tax, but how much I do not know. I believe some of this oil will be excluded, because the Senator knows that whenever we put a duty on any article there is a certain deterrent effect, and to some extent it will lessen imports.

Mr. FESS. I think the Senator from Texas may have misinterpreted my question as representing some local interests.

Mr. CONNALLY. I did not mean to infer that the Senator was doing that. If I did that, I did the Senator an injustice. I do not mean the Senator is influenced by Procter & Gamble. I merely meant it was their representatives who testified to the point that they had to have coconut oil.

Mr. FESS. The Senator will recall that when we were discussing long-staple cotton I questioned the protective element in it, although being an uncompromising protectionist on the ground that, no matter what tariff is put upon it, we would have to import it anyway. That introduces an element that is quite important, and we have the same point involved here as to coconut oil.

Mr. CONNALLY. I think the Senator is correct. We are going to bring in some of this coconut oil even if it does pay a processing tax. There are certain kinds of soap which it is said require coconut oil. But as a general proposition the chemists and experts testify that there is a very considerable interchangeability among all these oils, and that therefore if the oils were kept out they would use domestic oils to take the place of the coconut oil.

Mr. President, in the committee this tax was reduced from 5 cents to 3 cents. It is not a prohibitive tax. It is a moderate tax. It is simply carrying out the principle of the new system we have adopted. If we limit our own people, if we tax our own people, if we put a processing tax on our own people, why should not the Filipinos themselves bear a small tax now and then in order to help us to carry out the program for the rehabilitation of American industry and American agriculture?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] if he will withhold his amendment temporarily so that I may offer an amendment which I think will clear up the situation?

Mr. TYDINGS. Is the amendment offered on behalf of the committee?

Mr. HARRISON. No; I am not offering it on behalf of the committee. The Finance Committee took action on the matter, but I am not offering the amendment on behalf of the committee.

Mr. TYDINGS. I will withdraw my amendment temporarily.

Mr. HARRISON. It makes no exception at all. I think it is due the Senate to read a letter relating to it.

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator have the amendment read before he reads the letter, so we may understand what it is all about?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes. I ask that the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed, on page 214, to strike out lines 3 to 15 and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

(a) There is hereby imposed upon the first domestic processing of coconut oil, sesame oil, palm oil, palm kernel oil, perilla oil, sunflower oil, whale oil, fish oil (except cod-liver oil), or marine animal oil, or any combination or mixture containing any such oil if there has been with respect to such oil no previous first domestic processing within the meaning of this subsection, a tax of 3 cents per pound of such oil, which tax shall be paid by the processor. Under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, the tax provided in this subsection shall not apply to the processing (1) of coconut oil brought into the continental United States from the Philippines on or before the date of the enactment of this act or produced from copra brought into the continental United States from the Philippines on or before such date, or (2) of 520,000,000 pounds of coconut oil of Philippine origin which is brought into the continental United States from the Philippines as coconut oil, or which is the product of copra of Philippine origin brought into the continental United States from the Philippines, during each period of 12 months after the date of the enactment of this act, or (3) of the following articles if the product of American fisheries, or if produced in the United States: Fish oil, whale oil, and marine animal oil. For the purposes of this section, the term "first domestic processing" means the first use in the United States, in the manufacture or production of an article intended for sale or intended for further manufacture, of the article with respect to which the tax is imposed. For the purposes of the exemption granted by this subsection, the amount of coconut oil producible from copra shall be regarded as 63 percent by weight.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire to make a brief statement.

When this matter was before the Committee on Finance I voted against the amendment that is written in the bill because, even though my people are very much interested in cottonseed oil, and I had been appealed to to vote for it, I thought it was a violation of the independence act that we had passed for the Philippines; and I was fearful that it might invite a Presidential veto of a very important bill if we did not at least provide an exemption of the average importations from the Philippines of copra and coconut oil. So I talked to the President about this matter, and I received from him this letter, which I desire to read:

I am advised that H.R. 7835, the revenue bill, now under consideration before your committee, contains a provision imposing an excise tax on coconut oil.

Now that the Philippine independence bill has been approved, and insofar as the United States is concerned represents definite commitments to the government and the people of the Philippine Islands, the provisions of section 6 will govern future trade relations with the islands. Paragraph (b) of this section contemplates that there shall be no restriction placed upon Philippine coconut oil and copra coming into the United States until after the inauguration of the government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands. It is my view that the imposition of an excise tax on coconut oil would be a violation of the spirit of this section of the independence act, and that such provision should be eliminated from the revenue bill.

May I respectfully suggest that your committee be advised of the language which I used in regard to the economic phase of the independence bill in my recent message to the Congress.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, whose letter is that?

Mr. HARRISON. That is from the President of the United States.

So I received a communication from the Secretary of State opposing this provision that was written into the House bill. That is true also of the Secretary of War. The Secretary of War has sent several communications to me. So I started out to ascertain what was the average importation from the Philippines of coconut oil and copra, it appearing to me that if we should exempt the average from those countries the Philippine government and the Philippine people would have no cause of complaint against us on this account.

In a letter from the War Department, the Secretary of War says in one paragraph—although I say again that he is opposed to any limitation; he does not want us to restrict at all the importations from the Philippine Islands—Secretary of War Dern says:

General Cox informs me that in view of the position taken by me regarding the proposed excise tax on coconut oil he stated that he was not authorized to agree to any proposal not in accord with the views previously expressed by me. He pointed out, however, that in case a quota should be established for the Philippine Islands, it should be fixed at not less than 520,000,000 pounds of combined coconut oil and copra equivalent as the minimum amount that would preserve the substantial interests of the islands at the established level of the coconut industry.

Here are the figures with reference to the average for the past 5 years:

The 5-year average from 1929 to 1933 of coconut oil and copra transformed into coconut oil is 519,964,199 pounds—practically 520,000,000 pounds.

Mr. WALSH. The 5-year average?

Mr. HARRISON. That is the average for the 5 years from 1929 to 1933, inclusive.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Did I understand the Senator to read in the caption that that was oil and copra together?

Mr. HARRISON. These are the imports of copra converted into oil on the basis of a yield of 63 percent.

Mr. TYDINGS. My understanding is, as I attempted to point out to the Senator the other day—I may be in error—that that is the copra only, and does not include the oil.

Mr. HARRISON. No; this is copra transformed into coconut oil. The coconut oil is 63 percent of the copra.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is true; but what I am pointing out to the Senator is that the Filipinos themselves send in the oil already extracted from the copra, and the Senator's figures do not comprehend the oil shipments.

Mr. HARRISON. According to these figures, may I say that the imports of copra converted into oil for those years, 1929 to 1933, were 195,000,000 pounds plus. The imports of coconut oil itself were 324,045,000 pounds.

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think the Senator is reading about the amount of copra from which oil is extracted after it gets into the United States.

Mr. HARRISON. I am reading the total combined imports of oil and copra converted into coconut oil.

Mr. TYDINGS. What are the combined figures? The Senator read the heading as copra.

Mr. HARRISON. Five hundred and nineteen million nine hundred and sixty-four thousand pounds from 1929 to 1933, inclusive.

Mr. TYDINGS. And the Senator asserts that that is not only the oil which comes in each year, but the average of 63 percent of the copra which comes in?

Mr. HARRISON. That is quite true.

Mr. WALSH. It seems to me that is very clearly stated.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; and these figures I had prepared by Dr. Ryder. The members of the Finance Committee will remember him as one of the experts from the Tariff Commission, and he was designated by the N.R.A. as their expert. I had him look into this matter, and these are the figures which are presented to me in addition to what the Secretary says. He analyzes each one:

Second, 520,000,000, or 232,000 long tons, which is the average annual import of coconut oil from the Philippines in the 5-year period from 1929 to 1933, plus the oil content of the annual average import of copra from that source in the same period. Statistically, a quota of this size seems to be warranted, and it will probably be demanded by the Philippines as a matter of justice. It comes nearer than the 3-year average of 1931–33 to the usual annual imports in the years preceding 1929, when business conditions were fairly normal. Although 2 years of large imports, 1929 to 1932, are included, this is more than offset by the fact that imports were lower than usual in 1931, and much lower than usual in 1932.

So it seems to me that if we exempt the 5-year average importation of coconut oil and copra from the Philippines, the Philippines are not hurt, and have no cause to object. That is what this amendment does. It broadens the provision to take in perilla oil, I believe, and it excludes some other kinds of oil.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator's amendment permits so much coconut oil and copra transformed into coconut oil to come in each year.

Mr. HARRISON. Free of tax.

Mr. BORAH. Free of tax. That would be satisfactory, I suppose, to the Filipinos; but what protection would that afford to those whom we are seeking to protect under this bill?

Mr. HARRISON. I cannot answer that question. I feel quite sure, though, that if we should not exempt the amount of Philippine products that we are bound under the independence act to permit to come in here without the imposition of this tax, it would be a very just cause for vetoing this bill; and I am sure no Senator here wants to undergo the risk of having the bill vetoed.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am rather inclined to think that we ought not to do anything to prevent the bill from going through; but the Senator's amendment accomplishes nothing in the way of protection of the dairy interests of the United States.

Mr. HARRISON. It does this: It includes all these other oils. It is quite true that to the extent of 520,000,000 pounds annually of this coconut oil and copra they are exempt.

Mr. BORAH. If we should reject the Senator's amendment and the Finance Committee's provision also, there would still be power in the Secretary of Agriculture to deal with this matter the same as he deals with other matters. I have read the Agricultural Act lately.

Mr. HARRISON. He does not think so. He thinks it would require legislation to do that. That is his opinion.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from Idaho that the situation is a rather remarkable one, because the act of Congress providing for levying the cotton processing tax referred to by the Senator from Maryland, provides that an exporter is entitled to a refund upon all goods shipped to any foreign country, including the Philippine Islands; so that in the case of the processing tax upon cotton, the tax is not carried to the consumer in the Philippines. I have just checked it up to show that I was accurate in my recollection, and the Filipino is in the status of one who is not a citizen of this country, though the Senator contends that he is entitled to that status as to this matter of taxes.

Mr. BORAH. I think he is; but, before I sit down, let me say that I see no virtue at all in this amendment of the Senator from Mississippi. I should much prefer not to legislate at all on the subject than to legislate in a way that does not accomplish anything in the way of protection to the dairy industry, which we are seeking to do. The Senator's bill permits the oil to come in to the full extent to which it has been coming in, and that is exactly what the people who are supporting this tax are complaining of.

Mr. HARRISON. I can appreciate that, may I say to the Senator. It does permit the average annual importation of the last 5 years of coconut oil to come in; and I cannot understand how we can keep it out, in view of what we have already done in the independence act.

Mr. BORAH. Then the better thing to do would be to reject any legislation at all upon the subject.

Mr. CONNALLY and Mr. WALSH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator from Idaho that this amendment affects other foreign countries as well as the Philippines, and while this amendment would largely destroy the provision in the bill, it would affect a lot of islands from which this oil comes, such as the South Sea Islands, and so forth.

Mr. BORAH. Oh, yes; but that is not what we are seeking to do by this amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. I agree with the Senator. This amendment emasculates the Senate bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to inquire what percentage of the total importation of oil is included in the 520,000,000 pounds referred to.

Mr. HARRISON. For the 5-year average the annual imports from the Philippine Islands of copra converted into oil, on the basis of the 63-percent yield, amounted to 195,919,000 pounds; the imports of oil as such amounted to 324,045,000 pounds.

Mr. WALSH. Is the Senator giving the figures of all importations from all parts of the world?

Mr. HARRISON. I have those figures. From sources other than the Philippine Islands——

Mr. WALSH. That is what I want.

Mr. HARRISON. Imports of copra converted into oil on the basis of the 63-percent yield, for the 5-year average, amounted to 149,136,000 pounds. The Senator will notice that is a little less than half of what it was from the Philippines. The total combined imports of oil and copra converted into oil amounts to 149,162,000 pounds, for that average.

Mr. WALSH. So the larger percentage of the importations of oils of this character comes from the Philippine Islands?

Mr. HARRISON. There are about 150,000,000 pounds from all other countries and about 520,000,000 from the Philippines.

Mr. WALSH. In other words, about two thirds or three fourths of all the oils imported come from the Philippines?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, just a word about some of the other oils included in the Senator's amendment. He puts no qualification on the tax on palm oil. It so happens that in the manufacture of tin plate it is impossible to use any other oil than palm oil, and the Committee on Finance, wisely, I think, inserted an exception to take care of palm oil used in tin-plate manufacture.

If any domestic fat or grease or oil could be used as a substitute, that would be all well enough; but the effect of this could not be to reduce the importations of palm oil by one teaspoonful, as it would be to raise the cost of all the tin cans which are used in the United States. It seems to me clear that the exception ought to be carried into this amendment.

Furthermore, all of us are anxious to protect the dairy farmers of the United States. Probably, of all varieties of agriculture, they have received less benefit from what has been done by the Congress in the last 12 months than any other group of agriculturists.

In my own State, which supplies a very large part of the dairy products shipped to the city of New York and to the city of Philadelphia, prices are below the cost of production. The cost of feeds has been raised, and here we are asked to raise them more by putting a tax on cod oil, and those people will get absolutely no protection from this amendment if it shall be agreed to.

Any dairy farmer who looks to the action of this Congress for relief must know that if the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi shall be agreed to he will get no relief whatsoever.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania has called attention to helping the dairy industry. I might say that the tax proposed would also aid the hog grower and the producer of beef cattle. In fact, about one third of the coconut oil is used for oleomargarine, rather than for soaps. That one third represents fats, which were formerly furnished from both dairy and beef cattle. So the producer of other livestock, as well as the dairy farmer, would be benefited by this provision of the bill.

I do not think anyone has called attention to the fact that there has been a large increase in the storage of fats in this country. These represent fats which are not sold, for the reason that there is not a market; and I want to insert in the RECORD some figures, which I have, showing the amount of fats in storage in the country on the 1st of January of this year. There were in storage: Cottonseed oil, a billion pounds; lard, 132,000,000 pounds; tallow, 256,000,000 pounds; butter, 111,000,000 pounds; other greases, 87,000,000 pounds.

So it is not only the dairy producer but other livestock men who will benefit by this legislation.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, what is the total of the amount in storage of those fats?

Mr. CAREY. I have not the total here. I have given the figures as to the various items. It is possibly a billion seven hundred million.

Mr. MURPHY. And we are asked to let in from the Philippines 519,000,000 pounds. Mr. President, a processing tax is about to be imposed on cattle. There is a processing tax on hogs and there is a processing tax on cotton. The purpose of the processing taxes is to provide money with which to pay benefits to the cotton grower, the hog grower, and the beef grower in consideration for their reduction of the supply.

We are exerting every effort, through the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, to bring agricultural supply in line with demand. Yet, in the face of that effort, we are asked to permit the Philippines to send in 519,000,000 pounds of cottonseed oil and copra, which are not to be process taxed, while taxes are imposed on cotton, on lard, and on beef.

Mr. CAREY. And on butter.

Mr. MURPHY. And a tax may be imposed on butter. We are asked to permit unrestrained competition in the amount of 519,000,000 pounds, and permit that amount to defeat our efforts to raise the prices of other fats with which those oils are interchangeable.

There is a great deal said about our obligation to the Filipinos. I wonder what our obligation is to our own people. For 3 years we have had a price on hogs that has meant bankruptcy for the hog farmer. In my State last year there were filed 6,000 petitions in foreclosure, which means that 6,000 Iowa farmers will leave their homes, driven out because they cannot make enough to pay interest.

These oils' being interchangeable with our fats is responsible, in considerable measure, for the depression of prices, and permitting 519,000,000 pounds to come in from the Philippine Islands and defeat our efforts to raise those prices would be to prolong suffering on our farms and to make more difficult the task of the Agricultural Administration to increase prices.

I think the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi ought to be defeated, and I think the amendment of the Senator from Maryland ought to be defeated.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Iowa a question before he takes his seat. Is not the impairment of the economic independence of the American farmer a rather high price to pay for the political independence of the Philippines?

Mr. MURPHY. I would say that, in my opinion, it is.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I had hoped to have an opportunity, at the time the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] was stating certain figures a few moments ago, to make some inquiry about the amounts of fats and greases which are produced by the packers, and the amounts produced by the renderer; that is to say, the plants which render the contents of the refuse heaps, the butcher shops, and the garbage cans of hotels and other institutions in the country. I should like to ask about that, because I do not have, and have not been able to find, the most recent figures.

For 1931, according to the Bureau of the Census, the total tallow production in the United States was 590,000,000 pounds. Of that amount, the total produced in the packing houses was 254,000,000 pounds and the total produced by the various rendering plants was 336,000,000 pounds, the latter being between 55 and 60 percent of the total. Can the Senator advise me whether that ratio still obtains for the more recent years?

Mr. CAREY. I am sorry I cannot answer the Senator's question. I can give some figures as to the amount of fat there is in a steer, the amount produced from an animal in the packing house.

Mr. STEIWER. I have seen those figures. It seems to me that we are proceeding upon a false premise if we assume that the imposition of this 3-cent tax on oils would necessarily benefit the livestock producers of this country.

Evidently, from the best information we can obtain, the greater benefit will go to the renderers who use the refuse heaps and the contents of the garbage cans.

It seems to me that if we are not to support the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi, but are to adhere to the amendment offered by the Senate Finance Committee, we might very well also impose the tax upon tallow produced by these local rendering operations. It would seem also that we ought to take some heed of the fact that we have trade treaties with foreign countries, which impose upon us a duty not to levy internal taxes which are discriminatory in their character.

In the Senate committee amendment, and indeed, as I construe it, in the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi, it seems to me that those trade treaties are all violated in that we seek to place a tax upon the foreign fish oils which we do not place upon the domestic fish oils. These considerations ought to cause us to hesitate before we accept too eagerly either of the proposals which are before the Senate at this time.

I also want to call attention to a consideration that disturbs me somewhat, and that is that neither of these amendments provides any duty upon the importation of foreign tallows. The duty in the act of 1930 is one half of 1 cent per pound. That duty has proved to be very effective. The importation of foreign tallows into America at this time is only nominal, but it is believed by those with whom I have advised that the addition of a 3-cent tax upon the competitive oils and greases in this country, if it results in an increase in price even of as much as 2 cents per pound, will make a very fine market in America for the foreign tallow.

I want to ask someone who is a proponent of these various proposals, what benefit will accrue to the agriculturalists of America; what benefit will the packers receive; what benefit will the cattle or hog raisers receive; and, so far as that is concerned, what benefit will the tallow renderers receive if we agree to these amendments and do not provide an adequate tariff to prevent the introduction of the foreign tallow?

I have not at hand the figures, but I am told that in various countries of the world there are very abundant supplies; that they have on hand surpluses, just as we have on hand surpluses of oils and fats in this country, and that those foreign surpluses will immediately find their way to our shores if we attempt, through the levying of a processing tax, to raise the level of practically all the fats and greases in this country, and do not provide the necessary tariff protection against importations.

I shall be very glad, indeed, if the proponents of these various measures will point out to us how and by what means we may reasonably expect benefits to American agriculture if we do not, by careful and comprehensive planning, provide taxes and tariff duties all the way around, so that we may insure a reasonable chance of a higher price level for our domestic oils and fats. If the 3-cent tax in any event is to be ineffective in raising the domestic price level, it would be far better to adopt the substitute amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. In my opinion, it would serve as well as the committee amendment and would not subject this Nation to the humiliating charge of having betrayed the people of the Philippines.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I have no disposition to discuss the case on its merits, because this whole question of the effect of oil and fat imports on the oil and fat prices in the United States by this time certainly ought to be understood very well by all Members of the Congress. It is fairly well understood by all the producers of fats and oils throughout the country. It would be difficult to find any large number of intelligent producers of oil, either animal or vegetable, who do not thoroughly understand how their market is manipulated and, in fact, controlled by the large importations of foreign oils and fats.

For instance, anyone who is familiar with cottonseed, cottonseed oil, and the products thereof knows very well that whether or not the imported oils and fats be commercially interchangeable, these large importations enabled the large importers to make the market for the cottonseed, the cottonseed oil, and its products. And I am speaking in literal language—the large importers of the oils from the Philippines daily, directly and indirectly, fix the market price of the cottonseed and of the oil derived from the cottonseed in the South, and in precisely the same way the importers fix, not in theory—they can fling a lot of theories before the public men of the country and they will wear themselves out arguing about theories—in reality they fix the markets for these products for the American farmer, and all farmers have enough information and enough intelligence to know it.

Mr. President, I want to address myself now to the amendment that the distinguished Senator from Mississippi has proposed. Frankly, this amendment should be defeated or else there should be levied no tax upon any imported oils and fats, and why? For the very simple reason that if you permit 519,000,000 pounds of coconut oil to be brought into the country free of the tax, you have disturbed competitive conditions and the competitive relationship of every other processer in the country who does use and must use other oils or other fats on which the processing tax is levied.

Let me illustrate, and it is but an illustration: A large quantity of another southern product is used in soapmaking. It is used to make a particular kind of soap, but it is used in connection with imported whale and fish oils. If the whale and fish oils are to be taxed 3 cents and coconut oil is to go free, you have disturbed the relationship, you have disturbed the whole structure of these competitive processes, because you have made one pay a tax; that is to say, his raw material pays it, and the other pays no tax. The same thing is true of your palm oil as it relates to the manufacture of tinplate.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Without this amendment, as I read it, with the recent laws we have passed we create further discrimination against our domestic interests producing these products and in favor of the foreign products.

Mr. GEORGE. I think so. I was coming to that. Now that is all I want to say on this point. I repeat, it is obviously unfair to tax the raw material of one processor and to leave untaxed the raw material of another processor; and if this amendment of the Chairman of the Finance Committee is to be adopted, I shall vote against the imposition of a single penny of tax on any foreign oils or fats. That is the only fair way to deal with the problem.

Now, Mr. President, what is there unfair about taxing the Philippine products? The grower of cotton has had his production cut 30 to 40 percent under an acreage that has been cut during the last several years systematically and progressively.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. We contribute no money to the Philippine Islands to run their government or to improve their internal conditions whatsoever. We take nothing out of the Federal Treasury and give it to the Philippine Islands. They are a self-supporting country. They get none of our taxes whatsoever.

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, well, all the State of Maryland gets out of the Federal Treasury is placed in the Federal Treasury by the State of Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes.

Mr. GEORGE. Every average State does that. I am not arguing it on that basis.

Mr. TYDINGS. But I want to call attention to the implied assumption of the Senator from Georgia that the Philippines were enjoying the fruits of our domestic policy. They pay their own way 100 percent.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, that is exactly what they will do if this amendment prevails. Your dairying interests, the producers of seed in this country used for the purpose of extracting oil had their production actually limited. Why? The purpose has been, however it may result, to raise the price of their products. And the producers of the oil-bearing seed in the United States are our own citizens, for whom certainly we have the same degree of affection that we have for the little brown brethren on the other side of the Pacific.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. Not now, because I am going to come to the Senator's question. We have taken away from our own producers, in the hope of helping them, 40 percent of their production, and at the same time we propose to allow the Philippines to send into this country the high average, the abnormal average, of coconut oil which has been coming in during the last 3 or 5 years. Every American producer of competitive oil has had his production cut progressively during the last several years. He has had it cut 40 percent for 1934 directly by act of the Government, by act of the Congress, and by administrative act.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I will yield in just a moment. However, a production which has not been progressively cut in the Philippines but which has been abnormally stimulated, under the pressure of economic necessity, I grant you, is to be permitted to come into this market to take the place made by the withdrawal on the part of the American producer of his product from the market, and entrench itself in that market and to hold it against the American producer hereafter. Now I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me ask the Senator if the effect will not be that, while we are cutting down, our farmers will not get any more for their small production than they have obtained in the past, and the Filipino will have a larger market than he has ever had?

Mr. GEORGE. Exactly; our farmers will get less, because their competition will be more direct, will be stronger, from a tropical product grown on the basis of wages and conditions there existing.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator has just been discussing the surplus of cotton and the need for cutting down cotton production. May I call his attention to the fact that in the year 1932 the Filipinos bought $8,438,000 worth of cotton cloth made from cotton produced by the farmers of this country?

Mr. GEORGE. I appreciate that fact, but I also appreciate the fact that the nation now making the greatest inroads in trade of the Philippine Islands is not the United States. The statistics for recent months show that Japan is making greater inroads into the markets of the Philippine Islands than the United States.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. TYDINGS. The policies we are pursuing are calculated to accentuate the inroads which Japan is making on our trade with the Philippine Islands.

Mr. GEORGE. We have not thus far adopted any very drastic policy toward the Philippines.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to point out to the Senator that in the independence law we limited their quota of sugar below what they have heretofore been sending; we limited their quota of cordage below what they have been exporting to the United States; we limited their quota of coconut oil below what they have been exporting to this country; and it is only natural that they should look to other places to sell the surplus which we have driven out of the United States.

Mr. GEORGE. The independence law has not become effective, and not a single restriction in that law has become effective. I am emboldened to ask if one of the purposes of the Philippine independence law is not to defeat the just demands made by the American farmers? There are occasions when we grow very warm for independence for the Philippine Islands, but the American farmer is paying the cost of the warmth of our enthusiasm.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. It might be noted in that connection that the independence of the Philippines made no headway in Congress until it was found that there ought to be independence in order that we might tax the Filipinos.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, Mr. President; it was found that the competition from the Philippines was unfair to the American farmer; and if my friend from Kentucky wants to maintain the contrary, he is, of course, welcome to take that side of the issue.

Mr. BARKLEY. My point was—and I have stated it before—that independence of the Philippines as a matter of principle made no headway in Congress; it only made headway when it was found we needed the taxes, and we could not tax them without turning them loose and making them free.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I do not want to defend the Congress against that accusation. There may be more or less merit in the Senator's suggestion. I myself have been quite willing to vote for independence of the Philippines. I am quite willing to vote for the independence of the Philippines immediately, or at any time, upon any reasonable terms.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; I yield for a question.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think it would be a splendid thing, in order to draw the line clearly, if we would put a tax not of 3 cents a pound on this oil but a tax of a dollar a pound, and actually shut it out, so that the American farmer would be sure of getting the market. What is the use of going half-way about it? If we want to shut this oil out and give the American farmer the market, let us make the tax so high that the Philippine product cannot get in at all.

Mr. GEORGE. O Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland is too good a man to indulge in any such argument as that. The cotton producer of the South has not only had his production limited but he has had a processing tax levied upon his product; and if the theory of the Agricultural Adjustment Act is correct, if it will work in principle, the Filipinos can pay the 3 cents processing tax and get more dollar value out of their exports into this country than they will get at the present ridiculously low price of their product in this market.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I do not want to interject extraneous issues, but one reason we have limitation on cotton acreage and the processing tax is because the N.R.A. has driven up the price of everything the farmer has to buy until we have actually created a situation where we are giving him fake remedies in place of repealing the law that is causing his trouble.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I do not want now to stop to discuss whether they are fake remedies. I voted for the law referred to. I do not know whether or not the Senator from Maryland voted for it.

Mr. TYDINGS. No; the Senator from Maryland did not vote for it, thank Almighty God!

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator from Maryland did not vote for it. I voted for it. We were trying to do something for the American farmer, and I have no apology for having voted for it. Even if it turns out to be wrong, still I voted for it, and I voted for it in good faith. But the fact is that we not only have limited the production of the oil producers in the United States but we have put a processing tax upon those same producers, and it is obviously fair to put a processing tax upon the products of the Philippines. If that shall be any result comparable to what we were led to expect and believe, this market here will be worth more in dollars to the exporters of oil in the Philippines than the wide-open competitive market we have had, in which the coconut oil has gone down to the lowest level in, perhaps, the whole history of that industry.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. May I suggest to the Senator that while we are demanding that our farmers here at home reduce their acreage, many of the coconut plantations in the Philippines are owned by American corporations, for whom we will be making a contribution if we let this stuff continue to come in?

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator from Texas is quite right on that point.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no desire to get into any disagreement with the Senator from Georgia with reference to the effect of the processing tax, and the comparative merits of the American cotton grower and those of the Philippine coconut grower, but, as a matter of fact, the effort to tax coconut oil coming from the Philippines was inaugurated here long before there was any processing tax and long before the Agricultural Adjustment Administration was created and prior to the advent of the present administration. The Senator recalls that, I presume?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; I recall that.

Mr. BARKLEY. We have had this matter up for a long time.

Mr. GEORGE. But that is not material to what I am now saying.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is not material, except that it is now being used as at least additional evidence why this tax ought to be levied.

Mr. GEORGE. It is additional evidence.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator for a question.

Mr. FESS. I should like to have the opinion of the Senator, because of his ability as a student of constitutional law, as to whether the A.A.A., or the legislation authorizing it, would apply to the Filipino product under the relationship existing between our Government and the Philippine Islands?

Mr. GEORGE. If I understand the Senator's question, I will reply that I do not think so, unless it was made applicable to a product grown there as well as to a product grown here.

Mr. FESS. It has been stated frequently that it would apply.

Mr. GEORGE. I think it would apply if it were made applicable to the product grown in the Philippines as well as the product grown in the United States, that is, if such product were declared to be a basic agricultural commodity under the act.

Mr. FESS. Suppose we had cane sugar as one of the basic commodities on which the A.A.A. operates; would the law, without specific provision to that effect, apply to the sugar produced in the Philippines?

Mr. GEORGE. I have not made such a close study of the language of the act as would enable me to answer the specific question raised by the Senator from Ohio. I am, however, disposed to think it would apply, although the phraseology of the act itself might exclude it.

Mr. FESS. I have my doubts about it.

Mr. GEORGE. Generally speaking, our tariff legislation and legislation of a kindred kind have applied to the Philippines unless there were some express exception; unless there were some words limiting their application.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. Very well.

Mr. STEIWER. I have the act in my hand. If the Senator will permit I would like to read just a sentence appearing in section 10:

> The provisions of this title shall be applicable to the United States and its possessions except the Philippine Islands, Virgin Islands—

And so forth.

Mr. GEORGE. Of course, that would seem to settle the question.

Mr. President, the truth is that during the World War, when the price of fats and oils went very high, some of our good American citizens invested American money in the Philippines in the production of the oils which are now being brought into the United States. I am not quarreling with the motives that induced the American investor to put his money in the Philippines or into this particular industry, but I am trying to point out the real situation.

By legislation, and by administrative acts pursuant to the legislation, we are restricting our producers, cutting down the quantity of oils and fats they may produce. We are imposing upon our producers of oils and fats a processing tax. At the same time we do not, nor does this amendment, propose to restrict the importations from the Philippines even as we have restricted production in the United States on the part of our own producers of other vegetable oils. We are doing this not alone for the Philippines, but we are doing it also for those American capitalists who put their money into the Philippine Islands and into the production of coconut oil when, during and following the World War, the price of the oil went very high. They will be in a large measure the beneficiaries of our failure to legislate properly for our own producers in the United States.

Not only that, Mr. President, but the Philippine Islands now have a preferential of 2 cents on coconut oil. They will have a preferential of 2 cents on coconut oil even if this bill should pass, because the full tariff applies on imports of coconut oil from every other country where it is produced except the Philippine Islands, our Pacific possession or territory. So the oil product of the Philippine Islands, coconut oil and copra, can come into the United States. It will have a differential of 2 cents in its favor. It can pay the 3-cent processing tax. If the same tax is put upon all other imported oil and fats, it will be at no disadvantage. It will have the preferential of 2 cents under our tariff act. That satisfies my own conscience that I am dealing fairly with the Philippine Islands and fairly with our own producers in the vote I am going to cast.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. Not now. I do not want to argue with the Senator. I am afraid that no amount of light would help the Senator on this question.

Mr. TYDINGS. Inasmuch as the Senator's remark was personal, may I say that it looks to me as if he himself is moving in complete darkness.

Mr. GEORGE. I did not intend my remark to be personal, if my good friend from Maryland will permit me. Mr. President, nearly every dark cloud has a silver lining, and I am going to say in all kindness to my friend from Maryland that inasmuch as he is moved on account of his desire to permit no discrimination against the Philippine people, I can appreciate it and understand it, although I cannot fully sympathize with it under the facts in the case.

The Philippine Islands will be permitted to send their coconut oil into the United States with a 2-cent preferential under our tariff. If all other oils are taxed 3 cents, it must follow that their oil will still come into this market. If it comes in restricted quantities, and the American producer of oils has himself restricted his production to the point where the market is profitable, the Philippine producer will have an equal or greater dollar return for his coconut oil than he has under existing conditions. His oil will come into the United States. The tax of 3 cents will not exclude coconut oil, nor will it exclude the other oils which are necessary—and some of them are necessary. A part of oil importations will necessarily come into the United States. There will be some additional tax laid on the consumers of the products into which the oils go.

I think I have been as reasonably consistent in desiring moderate and reasonable tariffs as, perhaps, any Senator. I would be glad to see us turn our face in that direction, but the fact is that we have not turned that way. If our highly protected market is to be maintained and a burden placed upon our own producers, it seems altogether reasonable and right, when we are called upon to assume additional restrictions as producers in the United States, that neither the Philippine Islands nor any other possession under the American flag should be allowed to come in, fill the gap in the market which we leave as we withdraw, entrench themselves, capture that market, and keep it.

Mr. President, if we were called upon to discriminate against the Philippine Islands, deny them essential justice in a matter vital to their welfare, I would do as I have done in the past—I would vote against it. I have voted against proposed oil tariffs. But when it is proposed to tax all oil, when it is remembered that the proposal grows out of the general program of increasing prices in the domestic market for the benefit of imports of the Philippines as well as our domestic production, and when it is remembered that the Philippines will have, even if the amendment stands, a preferential of 2 cents under our tariff act, I do not see how we are abusing the Philippines by voting for it. But I am certain that if 519,000,000 pounds of coconut oil are to be admitted free of duty, it would be fair and just, in order not to disturb and to handicap users of other competitive oils, that that tax be not imposed upon any foreign oil.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I am very much opposed to this exemption of 520,000,000 pounds of coconut oil. If that amount of coconut oil is exempted from this tax it will mean that the coconut oil will come into direct competition with dairy products, and the tax will afford no help to the dairy interests.

We use annually, according to the figures I have obtained, about 200,000,000 pounds of coconut oil in the manufacture of oleomargarine, which, of course, comes into direct competition with dairy products, into direct competition with cottonseed oil and other ingredients that go into oleomargarine manufactured here in the United States.

It seems to me that in view of the argument which the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] made about the 2-cent tariff on coconut oil from other countries being effective, and the Philippine Islands having that advantage, there should be no objection to this 3-cent tax on coconut oil coming from the Philippine Islands; and I hope the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi will be defeated, especially the part of it which provides for the exemption from tax of 520,000,000 pounds of coconut oil from the Philippines.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. RUSSELL in the chair). The Senator will state it.

Mr. STEIWER. Is the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] the pending amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. STEIWER. Would an amendment to that amendment be in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would be.

Mr. STEIWER. I send to the desk an amendment to the amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the comma at the end of clause 2 it is proposed to insert:

But not more than 260,000,000 pounds thereof shall be brought into the continental United States in the form of coconut oil.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, the purpose, and the only purpose, of the proposal which I now make is to insure that at least one half of the total amount of importations permitted under the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi shall be in the form of copra and not in the form of oil.

Of course, the reason for that is to insure that we shall retain our share of the crushing industry in this country. The amendment can have no other effect. It does not affect the total amount of importations which shall be permitted under the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi. It does not affect the rate of tax. It has nothing at all to do with the importation of this oil except to insure, as I say, that 50 percent of it shall come into this country in the form of copra, and that American labor here in the United States may have the opportunity of crushing the copra into the oil, which, of course, is the product with which we are concerned.

I hope the Senator from Mississippi may look with favor upon that amendment, and that it may be written into the law as a part of the protection for American labor and American industry, and in order that the Filipino crushers, 80 or 90 percent of whom are foreign and foreign owned, may not take the crushing industry away from us under the limitations of this act.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator that in one of the communications from one of the representatives of the Philippine government it was stated that they were afraid that action upon the part of the Congress might deprive them of this industry in the Philippines, namely, the industry of crushing the copra and making coconut oil from it.

I do not know just what effect this amendment would have. I do not know just what percent of the crushing is done in the United States. I have read the figures as to the amount of copra that comes into the United States, but the Senator desires to cut down the amount one half, as I understand. I do not know what the status quo is now. Does the Senator know?

Mr. STEIWER. I do not know exactly. I believe that there is a little more oil than copra imported—that is, not of course more in pounds, because the copra is heavier than the oil, but in terms of equivalent amounts of oil—at the present time there is a little more oil than copra imported. I think that has been true for several years last past.

Mr. HARRISON. That is why I asked the Senator the question, because this is a very delicate matter. It is loaded with dynamite. I do not want to see us do something here that will impel the President to veto the revenue bill. I am sure that if we do not make a reasonable exemption for the Philippines and carry out in spirit what we have already done in the Independence Act, there will be every justification for a veto. I know he would not want to do that, but I know the Senator's feelings. I know he does not want us to put something in the bill that will bring about that result.

Mr. STEIWER. No; of course I do not; but let me call the Senator's attention to the fact that in the Independence Act, to which considerable attention has been paid during the debate this afternoon, there is a limitation of 200,000 long tons of oil per year from the Philippines and no limitation at all upon the importation of copra from the Philippines; so that, in the light of the Independence Act, even this provision would permit a considerable reduction in the amount of copra received, and a considerable increase in the amount of oil, as against the Independence Act.

Mr. HARRISON. That is why I asked the Senator if he knew exactly what the amount was. I think, if we can hold the status quo, we shall be carrying out in spirit the Independence Act; but, if we fix the percentage of copra from the Philippines that must be crushed in this country at a larger amount than is now crushed in this country, it would seem to me that we are not holding the status quo.

Mr. STEIWER. May this amendment be permitted to go to conference, and let us ascertain the amount. It is a matter of figures. Let us ascertain the amount.

Mr. HARRISON. I am inclined to think that an amendment like that, going to conference, would be in conference in such a way that we might then arrive at the real facts on it.

Mr. STEIWER. I should think so.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to bring out one thought.

Of course, Senators who are familiar with conferences—and all of you are—realize that the House bill made no exemption of coconut oil from the Philippines. The Senate Finance Committee's recommendation makes no exemption at all of coconut oil coming from the Philippines. If this amendment should be voted down, and the Senate committee amendment should be adopted, there would not be in conference between the House and the Senate any question of any exemption from the Philippines. In other words, what would be in conference, so far as coconut oil is concerned, would be the difference between a 3-cent tax and a 5-cent tax on coconut oil, and the bill would have to go to the President incorporating a tax somewhere between those figures.

So I sincerely hope that whatever we do here we shall leave the subject in conference so that we can get together upon something that will not violate the Independence Act, and at least try to benefit the people in this country who are interested in the matter. So I shall not object to the Senator's amendment if he desires to add it to my amendment.

Mr. STEIWER. I thank the Senator; and I shall be very happy to have the matter voted upon on that basis.

Mr. HARRISON. While I am on my feet, let me say—I do not see the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] here, but I see the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] here—that the Committee on Finance did make an exception of palm oil, which goes into the manufacture of tin plate. I shall not object to a modification of the amendment to make that exception, carrying out the action of the Senate committee, so that that matter can be in conference, if the amendment shall be adopted.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I shall not re-echo what the Senator from Mississippi has said, that this matter is surcharged with dynamite; but to some of us it is surcharged with difficulties and perplexities.

We are in a very singular situation with regard to this bill at the present time.

First, there is a suggestion made by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], to which there seems to be some real substance, I think, that under the act granting independence to the Filipinos we have undertaken to do certain things, and have made certain promises, and that these will be violated in spirit, probably, if we proceed in the manner in which the bill has been written either by the House or by the Senate committee.

I hoped, and I labored under the delusion, that the amendment presented by the Senator from Mississippi was in the nature of a compromise which might be reasonably acceptable to all parties to the controversy. I see, as we discuss it here upon the floor, that it is not of that character, and that it yields everything in the nature of a tax that might be imposed either by the bill of the House or by the measure that has been presented to the Senate, and leaves the situation as it has existed without change, and accomplishes nothing for those who are entitled to our efforts.

Every man of us here is sympathetic, of course, with the American farmer. Most of us in the past 10 years have stood upon this floor and voted for some very bizarre legislation in the hope that we might aid agriculture and those engaged in that basic industry.

All of us are sympathetic with our dairymen, and all of us would wish, wherever it be possible, to render such assistance as we can to them in any matter of consequence or any matter of importance at all. We all, of course, equally want to be just to any industry that exists, and we want to keep faith in any promise that we have made to any wards of this Nation and to any peoples who have been under our guardianship or our tutelage and a part of our Nation.

So there are difficulties and there are perplexities; and recognizing them, as we must, we can only act that the welfare of all concerned be preserved as best we can preserve it. Instead of the Harrison amendment presenting a way out, it simply proceeds upon the theory that such oils as have been permitted heretofore to come into this country will be permitted in the future to come in, in like fashion.

The Senator from Georgia demonstrates that those products thus coming in from the Philippines have a preferential rate of 2 percent, which will enable them to be exported into our mainland without real injustice or real hardship to those who send them to us.

It is probably a difficult thing for us therefore to determine what is best to be done, but as we view the whole picture today our perspective becomes clearer. The Senator from Oregon presents an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi, which, it is admitted upon the floor here, no one understands in detail, but which ultimately would be determined in the conference which it is expected will be held upon the bill.

Mr. President, when we get into the last analysis upon this proposition, we are confronted with the bare fact of the controversy. It is whether we are going to tax coconut oil and copra coming into this country from the Philippines or whether we are not. The amendments of the Senators from Maryland and Mississippi will preclude any tax. If we adopt the bill which has been presented to us by the Finance Committee, and the bill which has come from the House, the tax will be imposed.

Phrased another way, the question comes to us as to whether the aid which will be accorded agriculture and our dairymen will be accorded under this bill, or whether, under the circumstances which exist, there is a moral obligation upon us not to accord any aid at all because of the Philippine Act.

Mr. President, I voted for the Philippine Act. I have that delicate sense, I think, which the Senator from Maryland expresses so very ably here, of not desiring, under any circumstances, to break a moral obligation which may rest upon us respecting the Filipinos. If we are breaking one in this bill, I would prefer not to participate in it. But, as I have listened to the arguments this afternoon, as I have listened to the Senator from Georgia in his very able presentation, I am not at all clear that we are guilty of the breach of any obligation, moral or otherwise, in passing the bill or adopting the amendment that was presented by the Committee on Finance.

In the final analysis, if I have to determine as to whether I will follow a course such as has been mapped out here today in relation to the particular method of rendering aid to the people of the United States, or the course of giving them no aid whatsoever, my course is just exactly as plain as that which was so eloquently portrayed by the Senator from Georgia. Our farmers and our dairy interests require our assistance. But one way have we of according it. That way, not wholly without doubt, I take.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The junior Senator from Pennsylvania sends an amendment to the desk, which the clerk will state.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to state the amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I have no desire to be captious; the Senator from Mississippi, of course, can accept these amendments, but they are not in order in the form of amendments, because they would be in the third degree. The Senator from Mississippi, however, can accept an amendment such as that just offered.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I will modify my amendment, if I may be permitted, as follows: At the end of clause 3, before the period, to insert a comma and the following words: "or (4) of palm oil used in the manufacture of tin plate." This is in accordance with the recommendation of the Committee on Finance.

The amendment proposed by Mr. HARRISON, as modified, was ordered to be printed and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On page 214, strike out lines 3 to 15 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(a) There is hereby imposed upon the first domestic processing of coconut oil, sesame oil, palm oil, palm-kernel oil, perilla oil, sunflower oil, whale oil, fish oil (except cod-liver oil), or marine-animal oil, or any combination or mixture containing any such oil if there has been with respect to such oil no previous first domestic processing within the meaning of this subsection, a tax of 3 cents per pound of such oil, which tax shall be paid by the processor. Under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, the tax provided in this subsection shall not apply to the processing (1) of coconut oil brought into the continental United States from the Philippines on or before the date of the enactment of this act or produced from copra brought into the continental United States from the Philippines on or before such date, or (2) of 520,000,000 pounds of coconut oil of Philippine origin which is brought into the continental United States from the Philippines as coconut oil, or which is the product of copra of Philippine origin brought into the continental United States from the Philippines, during each period of 12 months after the date of the enactment of this act, but not more than 324,000,000 pounds thereof shall be brought into the continental United States in the form of coconut oil, or (3) of the following articles if the product of American fisheries or if produced in the United States: Fish oil, whale oil, and marine-animal oil. For the purposes of this section, the term 'first domestic processing' means the first use in the United States, in the manufacture or production of an article intended for sale or intended for further manufacture, of the article with respect to which the tax is imposed. For the purposes of the exemption granted by this subsection, the amount of coconut oil producible from copra shall be regarded as 63 percent by weight, or (4) of palm oil used in the manufacture of tin plate."

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Mississippi not to crowd this amendment to a vote tonight. I am just as anxious as he is to make headway with the bill, but the discussion today has developed the fact that a great many Senators are in grave doubt as to how they ought to vote, not only on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi, but on the committee amendment, as well. I am included in that number.

I had no doubt at the beginning what I was going to do about this matter. I believe I had a misconception of the condition which exists, and I was in favor of the pending amendment. I have always been in favor of doing what the amendment suggests, without giving it any particular attention, beyond the fact that it seemed to me that as all the dairy interests of the country and all the farmers of the country were asking for it, they were entitled to it.

As I go into the matter deeper, as I have listened to the debate, I am in doubt, not as to the merits, not as to how I would vote if I followed my inclination, but I am in doubt as to whether the Government of the United States has any honorable right, when we consider the relationship we have with the Philippines, and the act purporting to give freedom to the Philippine Islands, to pass such a law; whether we are not obligated not to do what these amendments propose. I noticed in listening to other Senators, and in talking with them, that there are a great many of them who have the same doubt.

I would not want to cast a vote here which would be unjust or which would in any way be repugnant to the honorable position we ought to take in regard to the Philippine Islands. I have always felt that we had no justification, in honor, for levying a tax upon the products of the Philippine Islands while we were holding those islands under our Government without their consent. I am wondering whether we are not about to do that, and whether the act we have passed at this session of the Congress is not absolutely contradictory to the step we are asked to take now.

I doubt very much whether there is anyone here who would not like to levy the proposed tax on this oil. I would. I concede that I would vote to do that if I were free to vote my convictions. I have said many times that I was going to do so, but when I am confronted now with the condition which seems to confront me, I am wondering whether we as a Government have a right to take these steps.

We certainly have to keep our word to the Filipinos, even though it may be very much against our interest to do it.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. I wish to say that the Senator has expressed my sentiments thoroughly. I should like to put a tax on this product. However, it is a most reasonable request the Senator makes, and consequently I ask, if there be no objection, that this matter go over until tomorrow morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

Mr. HARRISON. There are some amendments I should like to have adopted in order to clarify the bill. One is to correct a typographical error.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 167, line 24, after the word "under", to insert the article "a."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. I send another amendment to the desk, which I ask to have agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 212, after line 15, it is proposed to insert the following new section:

SEC. —. Venue for appeals from Board of Tax Appeals: (a) Section 1002 of the Revenue Act of 1926 is amended to read as follows:

VENUE

"SEC. 1002. (a) Except as provided in subdivision (b), such decision may be reviewed by the circuit court of appeals for the circuit in which is located the collector's office to which was made the return of the tax in respect of which the liability arises or, if no return was made, then by the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

"(b) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (a), such decision may be reviewed by any circuit court of appeals, or the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, which may be designated by the Commissioner and the taxpayer by stipulation in writing.

"(c) Section 1002 of the Revenue Act of 1926, as amended by this section, shall be applicable to all decisions of the Board rendered on or after the date of the enactment of this act, and such section, as in force prior to its amendment by this section, shall be applicable to such decisions rendered prior thereto, except that subdivision (b) thereof may be applied to any such decision rendered prior thereto."

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, this is an amendment that is suggested by the American Bar Association and by the Treasury Department; and the explanation of the venue amendment, briefly stated, is as follows:

The amendment is proposed in order to remove doubt now existing in certain cases as to the proper court in which to appeal from a decision of the Board of Tax Appeals. Under existing law an individual must appeal from a decision of the Board of Tax Appeals to the circuit court of appeals for the circuit whereof he is an inhabitant. This rule leads to uncertainty in many cases, which uncertainty would be eliminated by the adoption of the proposed amendment.

This amendment fixes the circuit for appeal in accordance with the collector's office in which was filed the return which is the basis of the appeal. The existing law is further amended so as expressly to grant permission to the Commissioner and the taxpayer to reach an agreement and stipulate that any circuit court of appeals will have jurisdiction, or to stipulate that the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia will have jurisdiction, regardless of whether or not the court so stipulated would otherwise have jurisdiction to review the decision.

Mr. REED. I have looked into this amendment, Mr. President. I believe it will bring about a considerable improvement over the present situation. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi permit me at this time to bring up the amendment which I previously offered?

Mr. HARRISON. I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania will not bring it up at this time, because the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS], who raised the question about it, is not now in the Chamber, and he probably would desire to be heard on it. So I hope the Senator will wait until the Senator from Michigan comes in.

Mr. President, I send to the desk a clarifying amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 222, line 21, it is proposed to strike out the words "benzol or naphtha (other than gasoline)" and to insert in lieu thereof "any of the foregoing (other than products commonly or commercially known or sold as gasoline)."

Mr. REED. What is the effect of that amendment, Mr. President?

Mr. HARRISON. The amendment is suggested by the Treasury Department. It is designed to remove an inequity in the gasoline tax. The committee amendment heretofore agreed to tax gasoline, benzol, benzine, naphtha, and any other liquid of a kind used or sold for use as a motor fuel, but exempts benzol or naphtha (other than gasoline) sold specifically for a non-motor-fuel use. A natural gas, butane, sold chiefly for the lighting of homes, has recently been used as an airplane fuel, and under the bill, since it is sold compressed in cylinders in a liquid form, all butane might be held taxable because of this minor new use.

Because of this and the possibility of similar cases arising, I propose an amendment to extend the tax-exemption on sales for non-motor-fuel uses to all the taxable liquids except gasoline, as has already been done in the case of benzol and naphtha. This is only a matter of common fairness, since this excise tax was designed primarily to reach motor fuels.

The Treasury Department approves this change.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This being an amendment to a committee amendment which has previously been agreed to, it will be necessary to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment was heretofore agreed to. Is there objection to the reconsideration? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, what is the effect of this amendment? Is it an exemption from the tariff duties or the excise tax?

Mr. HARRISON. It is an exemption from the excise tax, not from the tariff. It has nothing to do with the tariff at all.

I offer another amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 224, line 5, after the word "gasoline", it is proposed to insert "or lubricating oil."

Mr. HARRISON. This merely clarifies an error in the gasoline and lubricating-oil provision. The clarification is recommended by the Treasury Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, there is an amendment still remaining on page 237, in section 611, Stamp tax on sales of produce for future delivery. I call the attention of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] to this amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield to me?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I understand that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] wishes to be present when this amendment is considered. He stated to me yesterday that he had decided to make some objection to the amendment, and asked me to have him advised when the amendment was reached.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to pass it over at the instance of the Senator from North Dakota for the present anyway.

I offer an amendment, Mr. President, which was suggested by the State Department and on which the Senate Finance Committee acted favorably.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 237, after line 20, it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. 612. Termination of tax on use of boats: Section 761 of the Revenue Act of 1932, as amended, shall not apply to the use of any boat after June 30, 1934.

Mr. HARRISON. That is a matter concerning which the Secretary of State sent down a communication, and the Senate committee took action. The explanation of it is that they want to repeal the tax imposed on the use of boats. There is already a protective tariff on boats built abroad.

Mr. REED. The committee was unanimous on it?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; the committee was unanimous on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] is here, and I desire to bring up again the amendment which I offered on page 192, which is lying on the clerk's desk. I ask to have the amendment stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 192, after line 25, it is proposed to insert the following new subsection:

(d) Payment of surtax on pro rata shares: The tax imposed by this section shall not apply if all the shareholders of the corporation include (at the time of filing their returns) in their gross income their entire pro rata shares, whether distributed or not, of the adjusted net income of the corporation for such year. Any amount so included in the gross income of a shareholder shall be treated as a dividend received. Any subsequent distribution made by the corporation out of earnings or profits for such taxable year shall, if distributed to any shareholder who has so included in his gross income his pro rata share, be exempt from tax in the amount of the share so included.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be necessary, before this amendment is considered, to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment was heretofore agreed to. Is there objection to reconsidering the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, just a word of explanation of this amendment.

The holding-company section has been put in to prevent tax avoidance by means of what is called the incorporated pocketbook. Rich men have incorporated companies and put their securities in those companies, and have not declared in dividends a large part of the earnings which were received; and we have put in what is called the holding-company section to reach such cases.

The provision I am now offering will take care of the exact opposite of those cases. It will allow the stockholders, if for some reason they want to accumulate their surplus in the corporation, to do so, provided they pay the full amount of surtax which they would have to pay if all the earnings were distributed in dividends. My amendment will thus bring to the Government somewhat higher revenue than if it were not adopted. The effect of the holding-company section without this amendment is to compel the distribution of a large part of the corporate earnings.

There may be reasons—and there are, in some cases—why the stockholders do not want to have such dividends declared, but are nevertheless willing to pay the same surtax that they would have to pay if every cent were distributed. That sounds like a peculiar condition, but I can instance it in one case that perhaps will do for all.

A certain citizen of Great Britain, who is subject to the British income tax, has all her assets in a company in this country. If she has dividends declared out of that company, she will have to pay both the American surtax and the British supersurtax; and the two together in her case amount, under these new rates, to more than her income. In other words, she would be better off if the corporation did not earn anything than if the earnings were declared in dividends.

This amendment will permit her to leave the earnings in the company, and at the same time pay the American Treasury the full amount it would get if they were all declared and reported as dividends received by her.

The same provision is in the present law—that is, the law which will be superseded by the pending bill. The present law contains a provision in effect the same as that which I am now offering. The Treasury at first thought it would simplify things to leave out the provision, and it is true it does not apply to a great many cases; but it seems to me it will be a matter of simple justice, and it will net the Treasury a little more money than it would otherwise get—enough to compensate for the additional printing involved in including this provision in the bill, no doubt.

The amendment I have sent to the desk has been prepared by the legislative drafting clerk after consultation with representatives of the Treasury. I am not authorized to say that the Treasury desires the inclusion of the amendment, but I think I can fairly state that they do not object to having it included in the bill.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, it is true that this provision is in the existing law. It first appeared in the bill passed in the Seventy-second Congress, I find, but the language is somewhat different. It also appears that two or three cases have arisen in the Treasury Department under this particular provision.

The representatives of the Treasury Department have told me they prefer not to have it in the bill, that it is a cumbersome provision and will be very difficult of execution. I do not know what they have told the Senator from Pennsylvania and I have no desire to contradict what he has stated; but after the amendment had been twice offered and twice withdrawn I took occasion to confer with the experts of the joint tax commission and with Treasury officials, and there is a difference of opinion among them. It is very unusual that we should be asked to enact legislation for two or three cases. The draftsmen tell me it is almost impossible to write the provision in proper legislative language that will cover the situation. I think it a perfectly absurd and objectionable provision to put into a tax law, but they may be able to work it out in conference and frame it in more understandable language.

I fail to understand the explanation of the Senator from Pennsylvania when he says that it would be better if this lady's domestic corporation did not make any money at all, and yet under his proposed amendment he wants to permit her to add to her income whatever share of her earnings there may be in the corporation, and pay a tax on it. We do not know whether there will be any tax. We do not know whether there will be any surtax. We do not know whether they will exercise this option when taxes are high or whether they will suspend operation of the privilege until taxes are low. It is a privilege for two or three people, as I understand, who live in Great Britain.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am perfectly certain the Senator from Michigan wishes to represent the Treasury viewpoint accurately. I have just asked Dr. McGill, the assistant to the Secretary who is present on the floor of the Senate, and I believe I remember his words accurately because he spoke only a moment ago. He said that the attitude of the Treasury is that this suggestion is fair; that it would be difficult to administer if there were a great multitude of cases coming under it, but there are not a great multitude; that the cases will be few. I was impressed by his words in saying that the purport of the amendment is fair.

I agree with the Senator from Michigan that it may well be that between now and the conference we will be able to decide upon an improvement in the wording. It seems to me it is clear, but if anybody can suggest an improvement I will join with him in urging its adoption.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I do not want to get into any controversy about what Dr. McGill said, but this very afternoon he told me—and I do not think he is a member of the "brain trust"—that they preferred not to have the amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I do not want Dr. McGill to be placed in that attitude here. It is his opinion that the amendment would appertain to one particular case, and he was not advocating the adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the legislative draftsmen tell me that in order to complete this action it is necessary to insert the same language in another place. Accordingly I send to the desk another amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 60, after line 14, to insert the following new subsection:

(d) Payment of surtax on pro rata shares: The tax imposed by this section shall not apply if all the shareholders of the corporation include (at the time of filing their returns) in their gross income their entire pro rata shares, whether distributed or not, of the adjusted net income of the corporation for such year. Any amount so included in the gross income of a shareholder shall be treated as a dividend received. Any subsequent distribution made by the corporation out of earnings or profits for such taxable year shall, if distributed to any shareholder who has so included in his gross income his pro rata share, be exempt from tax in the amount of the share so included.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be necessary to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to. Without objection, the vote is reconsidered, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I hardly have sufficient audacity to offer for consideration tonight an amendment of the sort I am now going to propose, because I think it is in the mind of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] now to take a recess. The amendment may go over for consideration until tomorrow.

I propose, on page 85, line 16, to strike out the sentence reading:

Despite the provisions of section 117 (a), 100 percent of the gain so recognized shall be taken into account in computing net income.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will lie on the table.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, as bearing on the coconut-oil tax, I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD two short editorials and a brief memorandum showing the purpose of the proposed amendment.

There being no objection, the editorials and memorandum were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Newark (N.J.) News, Apr. 6, 1934]

UNFAIR TO FILIPINOS

One of the reasons for the misbegotten Philippines independence bill was to get rid of the competition of coconut oil. It is the most important article of trade from the Philippines. One of its main uses is in the manufacture of soap. Large quantities are bought for that purpose. Although the ink on the independence bill is hardly dry and the Philippines Legislature has until next October to decide whether to accept it, the general revenue bill now before Congress proposes a tax of 3 cents a pound on coconut and other oils. No time is being wasted in grabbing for the benefits promoters of the bill were seeking.

How little thought of the interests of the Filipinos there has been in the independence negotiations is made clear by Governor Murphy, of the Philippines, who, in a cable protesting adoption of the tax, reports that 4,000,000 Filipinos would suffer from it and our trade with one of our largest markets would be seriously harmed. Five members of President Roosevelt's Cabinet have expressed themselves as against the tax.

Secretary Dern specifically warned against taxation of Philippine imports prior to independence. "We still have obligations to these people", he said. "An excise tax is equivalent to a tariff, and we have no right to apply the tariff to these islands until they are free." If we are set upon defending some of our commercial interests from competition with these islands, which have been our wards, we might at least be decent enough to wait until they have their independence and have had a chance to adjust themselves economically to the new state of affairs.

AN UNWISE TAX

There should be no compromise with the proposed coconut-oil tax in the pending revenue bill.

It is a tax that would mulct consumers of many millions, and yield the Government little. The difference would flow into the pockets of the cottonseed crushers, packers, and processors of dairy products.

It is a tax that would prostrate a basic industry in the Philippine Islands, and thus destroy a profitable foreign market for American farm products and manufactures.

It is a tax that would violate the United States' 3-weeks-old independence pledge to the Filipino people, and endanger success of our peace policy in the Far East.

The following shows the comparative purchases of American cotton goods from the United States by the Philippine Islands and Japan for the years 1931, 1932, and 1933:

1931

Total amount of cotton goods purchased by the Philippines, ₱32,802,095. Of this amount, purchases from United States amounted to ₱16,221,271. Purchases by the Philippine Islands from Japan ₱10,106,079.

1932

Total amount of cotton goods purchased by the Philippines ₱33,523,234. Of this amount, purchases from United States amounted to ₱21,147,596. Purchases by the Philippine Islands from Japan ₱6,112,523.

NINE MONTHS IN THE YEAR 1933

Total amount of cotton goods purchased by the Philippines ₱24,078,467. Of this amount, purchases from United States amounted to ₱13,719,858. Purchases by the Philippine Islands from Japan ₱6,002,731.

Of course, Japan is gaining in her trade with the Philippine Islands, due fundamentally to rate of exchange and cheaper labor, as shown by figures for the month of September 1933, when their sales to the Philippine Islands amounted to ₱795,455, and American sales amounted to ₱1,363,737. There are no textile industries in the Philippine Islands, comparatively speaking.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the coconut-oil controversy has gone over until tomorrow, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD several letters which I have received from the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of Agriculture relating to the question.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, D.C., March 30, 1934.

Hon. PAT HARRISON,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR HARRISON: Secretary Wallace asked me to send you this memorandum prepared in our Bureau of Agricultural Economics on the fat and oil situation and proposed import quota.

Yours very truly,

MARY HUSS,
Personal Secretary to Secretary Wallace.

THE FATS AND OILS SITUATION AND PROPOSED IMPORT QUOTA

The continued production of large quantities of vegetable and animal fats and oils in the United States in the face of declining exports and reduced consumption without corresponding reductions in imports has resulted in enormous stocks of fats and oils in this country. Prices fell 50 percent from 1929 to 1932. The recent advance in the prices of raw materials extended to fats and oils, and this advance was accompanied by increased imports in spite of the very large stocks on hand. Any further improvement in prices and any curtailment in domestic production is likely to bring increased imports. The proposal to establish import quotas is offered as a measure for protecting the Agricultural Adjustment program and making it possible for the United States to use up some of its surplus stocks before receiving larger imports from other sources.

The program of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration may curtail the domestic production of fats and oils, including butter, lard, and cottonseed oil, by as much as 900,000,000 pounds within a year. Assuming a normal production season, the Adjustment program may reduce butter production by about 200,000,000 pounds, lard production 400,000,000, and cottonseed-oil production 300,000,000. These estimates are, of course, only approximate, assuming a reduction of about 10 percent in butter, 15 percent in lard, and 25 percent in cottonseed with some allowance for a carry-over of seed. This reduction in supply would provide an opportunity for consuming a considerable amount of the excess stocks of fats and oils unless it were offset by a reduction in exports and increased imports.

Before the depression the exports of fats and oils were declining and imports increasing. Exports declined from 1,390,000,000 pounds in 1923 to 1,090,000,000 pounds in 1929, whereas imports increased from 1,467,000,000 to 2,174,000,000 pounds. Lard is the most important item exported from the United States, and recently foreign barriers have been increased against its sale abroad. The exports of all fats and oils declined from an average of 1,015,000,000 pounds in the 5-year period 1926–30 to 800,000,000 pounds for the period 1931–33. Exports of lard have continued in considerable volume but at very low prices. Some curtailment in exports is to be expected with a reduction in hog production. The average of imports declined from 1,787,000,000 pounds in the predepression period to 1,580,000,000 in the depression period. However, the increase of about 460,000,000 pounds from 1932 to 1933 indicates the promptness with which importation may expand in response to a curtailment in domestic production unless some restraint is placed upon importation.

The consumption of fats and oils in the United States is likely to increase with improvement in the general economic situation. Consumption declined from nearly 8,980,000,000 pounds in 1929 to about 8,149,000,000 in 1932. Apparently this decline was due primarily to reductions in the industrial uses. The apparent disappearance into consumption from all sources averaged 8,571,000,000 pounds in the period 1926–30 and declined to an average of 8,306,000,000 in the 3-year period 1931–33. Since the improvement in economic conditions in 1933 has increased consumption to 8,238,000,000 pounds, it seems likely that a continuation of the improvement might increase consumption to about 8,500,000,000 pounds in the 12-month period beginning with July 1934. This increase in consumption might be offset, however, by a reduction in exports without absorbing any of the surplus stocks unless the total supply is curtailed through reduced production and/or reduced imports.

Stocks of vegetable fats and oils in the United States at the end of 1933 were more than double what might be considered a normal quantity of stocks on hand at the end of a calendar year. The accumulation of excess stocks began with the large cotton crop of 1926. The stocks at the end of 1925 amounted to 881,000,000 pounds, and the average for December of the years 1923–25 was 862,000,000 pounds. The cottonseed-oil stock has accumulated at a rapid rate since 1925. Increased production of animal fats in the face of some curtailment in exports and consumption has contributed to surplus stocks. Increased imports of coconut, palm, and marine oils have also contributed largely adding to the accumulation of surplus stocks. Increasing stocks were a contributing factor in causing prices to decline from 1925 to 1929 and also in the depression since 1929. A large proportion of these surplus stocks must be moved into consumption before there can be any material improvement in the fats and oils currently produced in the United States or in foreign countries.

IMPORT QUOTAS

An import quota based upon the average imports of the 3 years 1931–33 is proposed as a means of preventing importations from increasing at a rapid rate, while the United States reduces the production of domestic fats and oils, and at the same time of preserving a fairly well-balanced supply of imported fats and oils for consumers in the United States. It is believed that importations in the next fiscal year, the equivalent of the average of the past 3 years—together with the stocks on hand and domestic production—would provide an ample supply of fats and oils for all purposes, without undue increases in prices to consumers or without denying them supplies for essential uses. The imports of all fats and oils, including the raw materials, averaged about 1,580,000,000 pounds in the period 1931–33. This is 324,000,000 pounds in excess of the imports in 1932, but nearly 150,000,000 less than the imports in 1933 and 214,000,000 pounds less than the average of the period 1926–30. It should be observed, however, that the larger imports in 1933 were accompanied by a material increase in stocks, and that in the period 1926–30 stocks increased at the rate of more than 100,000,000 pounds per year, with consumption at a high level.

Although it is impossible to estimate exactly what would be the effect of imposing such quota limitations upon imports, it seems likely that it would tend to hold in check importations into the United States, would result in some curtailment in stocks, and contribute something toward an improvement in the economic position of domestic fats and oils. If domestic production were reduced 900,000,000 pounds and exports 200,000,000 pounds, holding imports to 1,580,000,000 pounds would provide for an increase of about 250,000,000 pounds in consumption over that of 1933 and a reduction of 600,000,000 pounds in stocks. This would be a material contribution to an improvement in the fats and oils situation.

Amendment proposed to the bill (H.R. 7835) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes, viz: On page 196, strike out lines —— to ——, inclusive, and insert the following:

(a) Having due regard to the welfare of domestic producers and to the protection of domestic consumers and to a just relation between the prices received by domestic producers and the prices paid by domestic consumers, the Secretary of Agriculture may forbid processors, handlers of animal and vegetable fats and oils and/or the raw materials thereof, and others from importing fats and oils into continental United States for consumption, or which shall be consumed, therein, and/or from marketing, transporting, receiving, or processing fats and oils, from the Territory of Hawaii, Virgin Islands, Puerto Rico, Philippine Islands, the Canal Zone, American Samoa, the island of Guam, and from foreign countries, including Cuba, respectively, in excess of quotas based on average importations and receipts therefrom into continental United States for consumption, or which was actually consumed, therein, during the 3 years, 1931–33, inclusive, and may allot such quotas and readjust any such quota or allotment, from time to time, among processors, handlers of animal and vegetable fats and oils and/or the raw materials thereof, and others.

(b) All provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act as amended necessary to carry out the foregoing powers shall be applicable insofar as they are not inconsistent with the foregoing provisions.

(c) There shall be levied, assessed, and collected upon such amount of animal or vegetable fats or oils, in excess of any such quota or allotment, imported into, or received in, continental United States, a tax at the rate of 5 cents per pound. Such tax shall be paid prior to the release of such excess amount of animal or vegetable fats or oils from customs custody or control. The tax provided by this subsection shall be collected by the Bureau of Internal Revenue, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, and shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, March 26, 1934.

The Honorable PAT HARRISON,
Chairman Finance Committee, United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR HARRISON: I wish to put before the committee of which you are chairman the information that the Connally amendment to H.R. 7835 pending before the committee has led to serious expressions of apprehension on the part of the diplomatic representatives of many countries with which we have extensive commercial dealings.

The representatives of the Governments of Great Britain, of Canada, of Belgium, of the Netherlands, of China, and of Norway have all made to the Department statements to the effect that the proposed new excise taxes would be of great concern to them and would work serious injury to their trade with the United States. As you know, the government of the Philippines has likewise shown great concern.

I wish to put before the committee my judgment that these proposed taxes would not carry substantial benefit to any important branches of American industry or agriculture. On the other hand, they would be very likely to lead to such new complications in various branches of domestic industry and in our trade relations with other countries as to accentuate the difficulties now faced by American agriculture. They would be likely to interfere gravely with plans for developing new trade interchanges between ourselves and the rest of the world.

Though I know what study has been made of the subject by your committee, I wish to transmit a copy of a memorandum prepared in the Department of Agriculture upon the economic aspects of the proposed excise tax, which indicates in more detail the grounds for the conclusions I have stated above. I would not again take the time of your committee in connection with this matter did I not hold the opinion that the imposition of this tax at the present time will create new obstacles in the attempt to work out a permanent program for American agriculture which will at once provide a satisfactory standard of return for American agricultural producers and also keep clear of further extension of Government activity in this field.

Sincerely yours,

CORDELL HULL.

Enclosure: "Memorandum upon the economic aspects of the excise tax imposed upon various animal and vegetable oils by the internal revenue bill as reported to the Senate by the Senate Finance Committee", prepared by the Department of Agriculture.

MEMORANDUM UPON THE ECONOMIC ASPECTS OF THE EXCISE TAX IMPOSED UPON VARIOUS ANIMAL AND VEGETABLE OILS BY THE INTERNAL REVENUE BILL AS REPORTED TO THE SENATE BY THE SENATE FINANCE COMMITTEE

The oils upon which an excise tax of 3 cents per pound is imposed by the internal revenue bill as approved by the Senate Finance Committee are coconut oil, sesame oil, palm oil, palm-kernel oil, sunflower oil, imported whale oil, imported fish oils, and imported marine-animal oil. In this memorandum consideration will be given to two major economic questions which arise in connection with the proposed tax. These questions are:

(1) How far will the proposal result in a benefit to the domestic industries producing oils and fats?

(2) How far will the proposal injure other domestic interests?

Effect on domestic oil-producing industries

The oil- and fat-producing industries which it is claimed will be advantageously affected by the proposed excise tax are those producing cottonseed oil, dairy products, soybean oil, fish oils, and inedible animal oils. The probable effect in each of these industries is discussed below.

THE COTTONSEED-OIL INDUSTRY

One of the most important groups urging the imposition of the proposed tax upon imported oils are the cottonseed oil crushing and refining industries. Nevertheless it is difficult to see how those industries would be materially benefited. Any increase in the edible uses of cottonseed oil which might result from the imposition of the proposed tax would probably be so small as to have little effect in increasing its price. In fact, the only edible use in which a material increase might possibly be expected would be in the margarine industry. Even in this industry, however, the increase would probably not be quantitatively very significant unless, as seems unlikely, an all-cottonseed-oil margarine should be developed. Some increase would doubtless result from the substitution of animal-oil margarine, containing 20 to 30 percent cottonseed oil, for vegetable-oil margarine, containing only a small admixture of cottonseed oil with coconut oil.

The only important inedible use of cottonseed oil is in soap making. At one time a large proportion of the production of cottonseed oil went into the soap kettle, but that was in the early days when its production was much smaller than now and before methods of refining it for edible uses had been perfected. With the perfecting of such methods, cottonseed oil was gradually drawn away from the lower-price soap industry into higher-price edible industries, particularly into the production of lard substitutes and salad oils. In recent years, as a rule, only off-grade cottonseed oil, not suitable for refining, and cottonseed oil foots, have gone into soap. Cottonseed oil of edible grade would go into that use in large quantities only if the price of cottonseed oil should fall to the level of soap oils or if the price of soap oils should rise to the level of edible-oil prices. If the latter should happen, it would, of course, result in a considerable increase in the cost of soap to the consumer. It would, moreover, result in a radical change in the character of the soaps used by the American people. This is true because imported soap oils have peculiar characteristics for soap making which in general are not possessed by cottonseed oil.

In conclusion, in regard to cottonseed oil, it should be stressed that so far as the proposed tax on the various imported oils included in the pending proposal should result in a rise in the price of cottonseed oil, it would increase the cost of lard substitute, the principal cottonseed-oil product, and handicap it in competition with lard. At the same time the reduction in the competition with lard would be of little benefit to the hog industry as long as the United States remains on a heavy export basis as to lard.

THE DAIRY INDUSTRY

It is claimed that the proposed tax on coconut oil will benefit the dairy industry by increasing the price of vegetable-oil margarine, which is made principally of coconut oil, and hence result in an increase in the price of butter. There can be no doubt that the excise tax of 3 cents a pound on coconut oil will tend to discourage the manufacture of vegetable-oil margarine in the United States. But in the absence of any other restrictions on the production of margarine, it will not necessarily greatly reduce the total amount of margarine produced in the United States, inasmuch as there will be a tendency for animal-oil margarine to replace vegetable-oil margarine. Any beneficent effect upon the dairy industry, however, could come only through a reduced production of margarine, although it has been estimated by experts that even the total elimination of margarine would not increase the price of butter by more than 1½ to 2 cents a pound. It is obvious, therefore, that the proposed tax upon coconut oil can have but little effect upon butter prices.

THE SOYBEAN INDUSTRY

The proposed tax will probably not materially affect the soybean-oil industry except through an increase in the price of sunflower oil. Both soybean and sunflower oil are drying oils, either of which may be used for mixing with perilla oil as a substitute for linseed oil. However, any increase in the price of soybean oil, causing an increase in its production, would cause a disproportionate increase in the output of soybean cake. The resulting fall in the price of soybean cake would necessarily have a detrimental effect on the market for corn and other livestock feeds with which soybean oil is more or less interchangeable.

So far soybean oil has been used to an almost negligible extent for edible purposes, and, owing to difficulties of refining, it is doubtful how quickly edible uses can be developed. In soap making its position is about the same as cottonseed oil, except that of the two, cottonseed oil is preferred.

THE FISH-OIL INDUSTRY

Fish oils are used mainly in paints and varnishes and in soap making, although in the latter use they are usually hydrogenated. By taxing all the oils covered in the bill it is probable that the demand for and the price of fish oils might be to some extent increased. The fish-oil industry, however, is a small marginal-cost industry, and any benefit which it might obtain by the proposed tax would be out of all proportion to the burden and inconvenience which it would impose on the oil-using industries and on the ultimate consumer.

THE INEDIBLE ANIMAL-OIL INDUSTRY

Since the supply of inedible oils is insufficient to meet the demand for hard oils in soap making, the proposed tax on palm oil, which is more or less interchangeable with inedible animal oils, will almost certainly lead to an increase in the price of those oils. This, however, would not result in any material benefit to the livestock industry, inasmuch as an increase in the supply of inedible fats and greases would involve either an increase in the production of livestock, thus lowering meat prices, or an increase in the recovery of inedible fats by the packing and rendering industries. At existing prices there is a considerable potential supply of waste animal fats which are not now recovered, but it is extremely improbable that a greater recovery would at all affect livestock prices. It is also improbable, even if the tax on imported oils should be made much higher than is proposed, that the domestic output of inedible oils would be increased sufficiently to replace entirely the palm and whale oils now used in domestic soap making.

THE BURDEN OF THE PROPOSED EXCISE TAX ON DOMESTIC INTERESTS

The proposed excise tax of 3 cents a pound upon the various oils enumerated in the internal revenue act as reported by the Senate Finance Committee would result in a burden to various industries of the United States and to ultimate consumers far out of proportion to any benefits which may be conferred upon industries which it is intended to assist. Injury would result particularly as follows:

(1) American crushers of imported materials from the oils taxed will be severely hit by the tax. This is particularly true of the copra-crushing industry located chiefly on the Pacific coast. This industry represents an investment of about $6,000,000, and the equipment of the industry could be converted for use in the crushing of domestic oil-bearing materials only with difficulty and at great cost. Moreover, the plants located on the Pacific coast are not well located so far as accessibility to supplies of domestic oil-bearing materials is concerned.

(2) Probably even more disastrous would be the effect upon the coconut-oil-crushing industry of the Philippines, which has been developed chiefly to supply the American market. In this industry is invested about $5,000,000 of American capital.

(3) How far the manufacture of vegetable-oil margarine, in which there is invested from $75,000,000 to $100,000,000 by independent companies, would be able to continue operations under the handicap of a 3-cent excise tax on its principal raw material, coconut oil, cannot be foretold, but it seems likely that the industry would be materially injured and that the tax would greatly accelerate the recent trend toward increasing control of margarine production by the large packers. The packers produce largely animal-oil margarine, the production of which would probably be increased by the tax. Between 1925 and 1931 the share of the packers in total margarine production increased from 28 to 39 percent.

(4) In the soap industry the proposed tax would be specially onerous and disturbing. It would cause an increase in the price of soap to the consumer and would probably lead to a decline in the consumption of soap, particularly in view of the availability of substitutes for soap in many uses. More important, however, are the readjustments which it would compel the soap industry to make. It would find it necessary to change the character of the soap produced, inasmuch as there are no satisfactory domestic substitutes for such oils as coconut and palm kernel, which are used practically interchangeably in soap making to supply hardness, solubility and lathering qualities. These oils are particularly necessary in the production of toilet soap, white laundry soap, soap powder, and textile soap for laundering rayon and other fabrics.

Tallow does not meet the same requirements as coconut oil because it lathers much more slowly and is soluble only in very hot water. Moreover, domestic oils such as cottonseed oil and soybean oil, because of their tendency to rancidity and for other reasons, are not satisfactory soap oils, especially for toilet and textile soaps. Palm and whale oils, however, are somewhat similar to tallow for soap-making purposes, although palm oil can be used advantageously only in making colored soaps and whale oil only in the lower grades of toilet and laundering soaps. Insofar as the tax should reduce the imports of these oils, the demand for inedible tallow and other inedible oils and fats will be increased. It is unlikely, however, that the supply of such oils and fats could be expanded sufficiently to replace entirely imports of palm and whale oil. If this should occur it would entail a serious hardship upon soap plants on the eastern seaboard making advertised brands of soap, which obtain their distinguishing name or characteristics from palm oil.

The situation in the soap industry is as follows: For certain of these imported oils there is no domestic substitute. Either they must continue to be imported over the tax with corresponding pecuniary burden to consumers or else, if they are not, the soap industry will have to discontinue the manufacture of the soaps for which they are peculiarly adapted, with consequent burden both to the industry and to ultimate consumers. For certain other imported oils on which the proposed tax is to be imposed, there are domestic substitutes, which, however, are not available in sufficient quantities entirely to replace the imported oils, and which, moreover, could not be substituted without considerable burden to some branches of the soap industry.

(5) The burdensome effects of the tax would also extend to many other domestic industries in which the imported oils are used. These include the tin-plate industry, in which considerable palm oil is used, and the leather and rubber industries, in which considerable quantities of coconut oil are used. In the tanning of white leather, for example, coconut oil, on account of its lauric-acid content, is regarded as virtually indispensable.

BURDEN TO EXPORTING INDUSTRIES

An important aspect of this tax proposal is the burden which it would entail for our exporting industries, including some of the most important branches of American agriculture. The tendency of the tax will be not only to reduce the total imports of the taxed oils but also to lower the prices received by the foreign producers for such quantities as they can continue to export to this country in spite of the tax. The result will inevitably be a decline in foreign purchasing power for American exports. In part this may be reflected in a reduction of the volume of our exports to the oil-producing areas themselves; in part it may be reflected indirectly in reduced exports to other countries from which these oil-producing areas import commodities.

Precisely what will be the resultant decline in foreign purchasing power for American products there is no means of foretelling. It is worth noting, however, that the value of our imports of the various oils which it is now proposed to tax averaged during the period 1928–32 some $57,274,000, having reached the high total of $81,145,000 in 1929. Should the adoption of this proposal be followed by agitation for increased import restrictions on other fats and oils, as it may well be, it is significant also to note that the value of our imports of animal and vegetable oils and fats of all types during the period 1928–32 averaged $125,668,000, and in 1929 attained the high total of $193,335,000. Moreover, the tax will tend to encourage tariff and other economic retaliation in foreign countries, a development possibly more significant for our export trade than the direct loss of purchasing power which would be entailed.

Furthermore, the imposition of the tax might well serve to encourage other industries in the United States to press for similar severe restrictions on imports which compete with their products. This has a special application to raw materials. A large part of our imports consist of raw materials. For some of these, substitutes can be found which, while more costly and less satisfactory, are at least technically within the range of possible production. If it is to be our policy to force this sort of substitution with respect to those particular uses for which certain of our imported oils are admittedly best suited, it is not unlikely that we shall be increasingly urged to do so with respect to other products. All of this would add still further to the present low state of international trade and would be at direct variance with the program now getting under way for the restoration of our foreign trade by tariff negotiation and in other ways.

Especially would it tend to burden important branches of our agriculture. Those branches which are still dependent on foreign markets, such as cotton, tobacco, wheat, and fruits, would face additional difficulty. It is a fair question, for example, whether the adverse effects on prices received for cotton might not greatly outweigh any benefits arising to the growers from higher prices for their cottonseed. For the hog industry additional difficulties would arise in the export field. Our lard exports would be subject to increased competition in foreign countries owing to enhanced foreign production of lard substitutes brought about by reduced world prices of the oils used in manufacturing lard substitutes in consequence of the diversion of these oils from the American market. In this connection it is well to remember that in some European countries such products as butter, oleomargarine, lard, and lard substitutes are more closely linked by intersubstitution than in the United States. The diversion of vegetable oils to other markets, and the consequent depression of world-market prices of them, would not only tend to retard our lard exports but would at the same time lower the world-price base upon which it is sought to erect an elevated domestic price structure for those domestic products with which the domestic oils tend to compete.

It will not be convenient here to enumerate the main items in our export trade with all of the overseas areas which would be directly affected by the proposed excise tax. The Philippines, from which we import practically all of our coconut oil and about three fourths of our copra, will suffice as an example.

In 1932 about 61 percent of our exports of iron and steel sheets (galvanized) went to the Philippines; about 30 percent of our exports of dairy products (chiefly condensed and evaporated milk); some 27 percent of our exports of cotton manufactures; and nearly 10 percent of our exports of wheat flour. Altogether, in that low-trade year, we exported nearly $45,000,000 worth of products to the Philippines, including $9,881,000 worth of cotton manufactures, $4,060,000 of petroleum products, $3,200,000 worth of vehicles, $2,448,000 worth of tobacco products, $1,810,000 worth of dairy products, $1,741,000 of industrial machinery, and $1,718,000 of wheat flour. It is especially noteworthy that agricultural products constitute an important part of our exports to the Philippines, amounting in 1932 to nearly $7,000,000, or, in other words, to 15.4 percent of the aggregate value of our exports to all countries of tobacco and dairy products, wheat flour, fruits, and vegetables. Inclusion of other agricultural products and consideration of the importance to our farming industry of such items as cotton manufactures, leather, and other commodities composed of agricultural raw materials, still further enhances the importance of the Philippine trade for American agriculture. For cotton manufactures and for condensed and evaporated milk, the Philippines are, indeed, our leading market.

Nor would the burden to American interests be confined to loss of market outlets. Continuing with the Philippines as an illustration, it is worth noting that an American investment of nearly $5,000,000 in coconut-oil-refining plants in the Philippines will be jeopardized by the tax, and perhaps much also of another $5,000,000 invested by Americans in Philippine coconut plantations. American shipping interests will likewise suffer. Freight earnings on traffic with the Philippines will be reduced. Copra and coconut oil, because they make good ballast, are especially desirable as cargo. Without them, freight charges on other cargo would have to be increased and trade thus obstructed. Shipping earnings will tend to be reduced owing not alone to the decline of the traffic in copra and coconut oil but also to the decline in other traffic. Part of this burden will fall on foreign shipping interests, with a corresponding decline in foreign purchasing power. But since about 38 percent of our inbound, and 55 percent of our outbound, trade with the Philippines is carried in American vessels, much of the burden will fall directly upon American shipping.

EFFECTS UPON PHILIPPINE RELATIONS

Reference has just been made to the manner in which our commercial relations with the Philippines would be affected. So great is the importance of the coconut industry (including oil-crushing) in Philippine economy and so great her dependence upon the United States as an outlet, that it can scarcely be doubted that a severe blow would be dealt to the islands and that American industries engaged in Philippine trade would feel the effects of it.

There is, moreover, another aspect that should be emphasized. Any sudden and drastic curtailment of our imports of copra and coconut oil at this time would add greatly to the difficulties that already characterize our political relations with the Philippines. In January 1933 the Hawes-Cutting bill, providing for Philippine independence, was enacted into law. Subject to certain stipulations and conditions, it provided for independence at the end of a transitional period of 10 years. This 10-year period was to have started from the adoption of a constitution, at a time which, under the procedure laid down in the act, could not have been earlier than May 17, 1935. But it was provided that the act must be accepted by the Philippine Legislature within 1 year from its enactment. Instead of this, on October 17, 1933, after extended debate in which there was vigorous criticism both of the conditions imposed during the transitional period and of the genuineness of the independence that was to be granted at its close, the Philippine Legislature rejected the terms of the act. In rejecting them, a way was left open for a reversal of this action if a sufficient modification of the act could be secured before its lapse. A new independence mission was sent to the United States to press for such modification. On January 17, 1934, however, the act formally lapsed. Reenactment of the bill with modifications is now pending in Congress.

Much of the Philippine opposition to acceptance of the Hawes-Cutting Act was to the trade provisions. These provided for a transitional period in which Philippine industry would have opportunity gradually to become accustomed to the loss of free trade with the United States. They provided for quota limitations on the quantities of sugar, coconut oil, and cordage to be granted free entry into the United States. They provided also for an export tax, beginning with the sixth year, on all those products destined for the United States that were subject to duty when imported into the United States from foreign countries.

This tax was to be equal to 5 percent of our import duty during the first year and to increase 5 percent each year until it reached 25 percent of the duty during the last year prior to independence. On sugar and cordage the duty-free quotas were below actual imports in 1932 by considerable margins. On coconut oil the duty-free quota of 200,000 long tons was, however, nearly double the actual shipments to the United States in 1932; while copra continued to be admitted free and without limit as to quantity.

The Filipinos have regarded these trade provisions as both burdensome and inequitable. Sugar and cordage would be handicapped at once by the quotas; while the exports of both, as also of coconut oil and cigars, would, they have contended, be completely stifled by the export tax even before the arrival of independence. As to equity, they have pointed significantly to the fact that imports into the Philippines from the United States were to continue to be admitted without restriction or tax throughout the transitional period—a provision which they have regarded as peculiarly one-sided and unjust. In addition it is well to remember that other legislation is pending which would restrict imports of sugar from the Philippines. It is into this situation that the tax on copra and coconut oil—the second largest Philippine export—would be injected.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 23, 1934.

Hon. PAT HARRISON,
Chairman Committee on Finance,
United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR HARRISON: In connection with the proposed excise tax on coconut oil (sec. 602 of the revenue bill, H.R. 7835), reference is made to the views of the Committee on Ways and Means as set forth in that committee's report to accompany H.R. 8687 entitled "A bill to amend the Tariff Act of 1930" (H.Rept. 1000, 73d Cong., 2d sess., Mar. 17, 1934). The following statement appearing on page 15 under Modern Procedure would appear to be pertinent to the provisions of section 602 of H.R. 7835:

"Particular notice should be taken, moreover, of the fact that the President may seek from other countries promises that their excise duties shall not be such as to nullify the results of their promises to modify their tariff duties. * * *

"In order that the necessary reciprocity may be accorded, the President is empowered to promise that existing excise duties which affect imported goods will not be increased during the term of any particular agreement. It should be carefully noted, however, that the President is given no right to reduce or increase any excise duty."

Under the provisions of section 17 of the Philippine independence bill, which has now passed both Houses, the act will become effective when accepted by concurrent resolution of the Philippine Legislature or by a convention called for that purpose. Section 6 thereof will govern future trade relations between the Philippine Islands and the United States. The proposed excise tax on coconut oil will, therefore, immediately become an infringement of the implied agreement between the two countries.

I am bringing this to your attention in the hope that it may be possible for your committee to give further consideration to this subject with a view to eliminating from the revenue bill the provisions for an excise tax on coconut oil.

Very sincerely,

GEO. H. DERN, Secretary of War.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
WASHINGTON, April 4, 1934.

Hon. PAT HARRISON,
Chairman Committee on Finance,
United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR HARRISON: On my return to Washington General Cox, Chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, advised me of the conference which took place in the office of the Secretary of Agriculture on March 30, 1934, relative to an amendment to section 602 (a) of the revenue bill (H.R. 7835). He informed me that this conference was held at your suggestion and that there was present, in addition to the Secretary of Agriculture and certain representatives of his office, a representative (Mr. Feis) of the State Department.

General Cox informs me that, in view of the position taken by me regarding the proposed excise tax on coconut oil, he stated that he was not authorized to agree to any proposal not in accord with the views previously expressed by me. He pointed out, however, that in case a quota should be established for the Philippine Islands, it should be fixed at not less than 520,000,000 pounds of combined coconut oil and copra equivalent as the minimum amount that would preserve the substantial interests of the islands at the established level of the coconut industry. He also expressed the view that the establishment of a quota would be an infringement of the implied agreement contained in the trade-relations provisions of the Philippine Independence Act approved March 24, 1934.

My views are fully set forth in my previous statement and letters addressed to your committee on this subject. I still feel that it would be unwise to either establish a quota or impose a tax on coconut oil at this time.

The table attached hereto contains certain information relative to coconut oil and copra shipments from the Philippine Islands to the United States over a period of several years. It will be noted that since 1927 the average shipments to the United States for any 3-year period is well above 540,000,000 pounds, except for the 3-year periods, including the 1932 shipments, which were abnormally low both for coconut oil and copra. The reason for these low shipments in 1932 has been attributed to the prevalence of leaf miner pests, which in 1931 and 1932 greatly reduced the size of the nuts for the crop which was shipped to the United States in 1932. The average for the 5-year period 1929–33, which includes the high and low years, is nearly 520,000,000 pounds. This figure is accordingly taken as the established level of this trade for several years past. However, the establishment of a quota at this or any other level would be out of line with the policy set forth in the Independence Act, which places no limitations on these shipments until the commonwealth government of the Philippine Islands is established under that act.

It is accordingly recommended that coconut oil be not included in any quota that may be established against foreign oils as it is mainly received from the Philippine Islands which, under existing laws, is treated as domestic territory. If, however, it should be decided to assign a quota to the Philippine Islands at this time, it is suggested that it be such as not to infringe the terms of the independence act. A quota of 200,000 long tons of coconut oil and an additional amount of copra based on the average copra shipments to the United States during the 3-year period, 1931–33, would, under existing commitments of the United States, be the minimum that should be considered.

In conclusion, I desire to reaffirm my former recommendation against the enactment of any legislation that would in any way alter the provisions of the independence act governing future trade relations between the United States and the Philippine Islands. The establishment of a quota or the imposition of a tax on Philippine coconut oil at this time would have this effect.

Very sincerely,

GEO. H. DERN, Secretary of War.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF INSULAR AFFAIRS,
Washington, April 7, 1934.

Hon. PAT HARRISON,
Chairman Committee on Finance,
United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR HARRISON: With reference to my conversation with you yesterday, I am enclosing herewith a copy of a suggested amendment to section 602 of H.R. 7835 as reported by the Senate Committee on Finance.

If this amendment could be added to subparagraph (a) of section 602, it would be in conformity with the spirit and the implied agreements of the Philippine Independence Act approved March 24, 1934. This, in my opinion, is the least that should be done at this time and would be in accord with the position taken by the Secretary of War on this subject.

Very sincerely,

CREED F. COX, Chief of Bureau.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, APRIL 10, 1934

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite Spirit, we know that Thou art the High and Holy One before whom the angels and the archangels veil their faces saying, "Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God Almighty." Heavenly Father, read our hearts; they feel emotions which are unutterable and cannot be spoken. We praise Thee for the measureless sweep of Thy merciful providence. We rejoice that Thou hast said, "The sun shall not smite Thee by day, nor the moon by night." O Love Eternal—no mortal tongue can reach and the stretch of our imagination dies away in wonder. At Thy holy altar may we surrender ourselves to Thee, and may our dedication to the cause of our fellow men be complete. May we help folks who have been disfranchised of their right to rest, peace, and joy. Bless all happiness makers whose tongues carry sweetness and sow contentment along their way. Keep us from those sins that bruise the soul. Heavenly Father, deal patiently with us and ever allow dreams and visions, ideals and expectations to supply the forces that urge us on and on to final triumph. In the name of our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on next Friday, April 13, the one hundred and ninety-first anniversary of the birth of Thomas Jefferson, at the conclusion of the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, I be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes on the subject of Thomas Jefferson.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, if there is any Democrat that believes in Thomas Jefferson, he should have the opportunity to speak.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, on what day is this address to be delivered?

Mr. SHANNON. On Friday.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I looked in the encyclopedia, and it is stated there that Thomas Jefferson was born on April 2.

Mr. SHANNON. That is according to the old calendar. According to the new calendar it is April 13. The difference in dates is due to the difference in the two calendars. It is April 13 in the new calendar and April 2 under the old calendar.

Mr. LUCE. Why did not the gentleman accept the luckier day of the two?

Mr. SHANNON. The calendar fixed the date for me.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

THE NEED OF A FEDERAL AUTHORITY IN CALIFORNIA, ARIZONA, AND NEVADA

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein House Resolution 290.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Speaker, an amusing story was recently published in California newspapers concerning the Arizona navy which was described as stemming the dirty-dun and swarthy-saffron waters of the Colorado River to the Arizona side of an inaccessible canyon and conveying the State's army to defend the sacred soil and precious rights of the great State of Arizona at the point where the Metropolitan Water District of Southern California proposes to divert a portion of the river for the domestic supply of water for Los Angeles and other neighboring cities. The navy consisted of a single-motor launch and the army was comprised of a corporal and four privates from the National Guard of Arizona.

This story provoked many a laugh and served to divert for the moment the bitter contest that Arizona has carried on for some years against what Arizona deems an intrusion and an encroachment upon the rights of the State and her claims to the waters of the Colorado. Many comical references continue concerning the Arizona army and navy and the enemy, consisting of the sentries and workmen of the Metropolitan Water District of Southern California. Beneath this newspaper mirth lies an embittered controversy that has already been expensive to the parties involved.

It is not my purpose to discuss the rights and arguments of each State, and it is not my purpose to convince you that Arizona is wrong and that California is right. To the average citizen the whole controversy is too complicated, and the whole matter lies buried in great heaps of legal opinions, the fine-spun arguments of many able and high-priced attorneys, the declarations of State officials, county and municipal officials, until it requires a Chinese philosopher and a Philadelphia lawyer to even follow with uncertainty the tangled legal threads. It is a continuous battle of words and a free fight in which many have engaged. As a citizen of southern California, it is my purpose to establish an unbiased and competent authority that will give to Arizona every drop of water and every spark of power to which she is entitled, and at the same time enable southern California to proceed with the unmolested development of that to which she is rightfully entitled.

I crave for no advantages over either of our neighboring States, but am seeking a way out of this dilemma by a procedure that will assure fair dealing and undeterred development in all the States concerned.

I desire at this time to call attention to House Resolution 290, introduced by myself on March 3, 1934, and to emphasize to the Members of Congress the necessity and benefits of my proposal. The resolution requests the Secretary of the Interior to furnish the House of Representatives a comprehensive plan for the improvement and development and coordination of the rivers and other water resources of the States of California, Arizona, and Nevada by a Federal authority, with the additional function of promoting subsistence homesteads and the encouragement of home ownership.

The program, as outlined in House Resolution 290, would provide for an authority with a wide jurisdiction over the controversial problems of the three States and also over the numerous other projects within the States. The proposed C.A.N.A. (California, Arizona, and Nevada Authority) would have supervisory and administrative capacity not only over the rivers and other water resources of these great States but also over the kindred problems and uses of water, such as irrigation, reclamation, development, and distribution of power, navigation, flood control, reforestation, erosion, preservation of game and fish, and recreational areas. In addition to the development of the river and other water resources to their greatest capacity and use by the populations of the three States, it is urged that such an authority is necessary to secure correlation and coordination of these resources and thereby to avoid endless and expensive litigation and other contests over these resources, thus avoiding endless delays and affording the machinery for the expedition of this development. The homestead idea is an additional feature that is entitled to careful consideration.

A Federal authority removes the involved controversies from the prejudices, fears, and grasping designs of local and interested communities and places them on a broader basis of public and general welfare. It places jurisdiction in a tribunal free of personal and local influence and affords all parties to such controversies an equal and impartial opportunity. The Boulder Dam project is yet uncompleted, and yet its entire path of progress has been disturbed and delayed by conflicting interests. With the development of the great Boulder Dam project, there are certain to continue after its completion numerous other problems and disputes that will be prolific of expense and delay and injurious to many citizens in the States concerned.

The prosperity of California—and especially of southern California—is indissolubly linked with that of Arizona and Nevada. In California the adjoining States find profitable markets. Through California these inland States reach the California ports and thereby the markets of the world. Our development and progress go hand in hand. There is no sound reason why California should seek any advantages over the inland States. What rivalry exists is usually of a local nature, and I am convinced is not shared by the majority of the population of either of the States, the prosperity of all being so closely intertwined and interlinked. In my estimation such an authority, as proposed in the resolution introduced by me, will be a long step in the orderly and efficient development of the three States and the benefits and prosperity will be shared by all.

But the situation involves much more than the controversies between the States. Because of their arid nature, water is queen in the Far West. Out in these open spaces numerous watersheds require the protection from fires and erosion. Great areas of forest by an efficient program and direction may be restored and new ones developed. Numerous valleys, fertile with alluvial soil washed down by infrequent rains, are dominated with sage and cactus awaiting the water, the plow, and dominion of man, ready to yield abundantly to his numerous requirements of food, clothing, and shelter. To develop these vast resources, to furnish homes to our increasing population, to prepare for the best ultimate results, a plan should be devised now to supervise and develop these great potentialities. We should not delay this important program until vast riches of soil and timber and water have been wasted and depleted.

Along with the growth of these three States, numerous new projects are certain to be promoted and developed. In fact, important development already has been made in each of these States. As this development proceeds, projects crowding one upon another will raise endless local and domestic disputes that will deter and thwart the march of development. Already in the State of California, the rights and claims of rival and adjoining districts and projects have jeopardized growth in some localities. Some have more water than they can use to best advantage and others have too little. By this lack of water farms and ranches and orchards decline and the community itself becomes stagnant and sometimes dies and becomes the graveyard of the hopes and ambitions of industrious citizens who dreamed of the dependency and comfort of home. A Federal authority to supervise or administer these conflicting projects and do justice to all would redound to the peace and progress and prosperity of all.

The financial benefits to California, Arizona, and Nevada would reach a tremendous amount, saving millions of dollars in interest, eliminating the costs of refinancing and much litigation, and stabilizing investments. The investor would have a much greater assurance of the soundness of his investment under the direction of a Federal authority. The dangers of poor engineering and uncertain private financial promotion would be eliminated to a large degree. Under the supervision of such an authority the depreciation of irrigation-district bonds would be reduced to a minimum because of the additional protection and supervision of the distribution of water and the unhampered development of power where available and usable.

In its present financial straits, the State of California and its political subdivisions have placed an exceedingly heavy burden upon their taxable wealth. The cities and the counties of the State are staggering under the tax load. Two water districts alone are authorized to expend nearly $400,000,000, the Metropolitan Water District of Southern California, two hundred and twenty million, and the Central Valley project of California, $170,000,000. If either of these great projects should become insolvent and be unable to meet its interest- and sinking-fund obligations, the tax resources, the income and the credit of the State, might become seriously impaired.

The State of California obtains its revenues from franchises, corporations, licenses, and sales taxes, and the lesser political divisions by a direct tax on real estate and personal property. But the bankruptcy of either of the two great projects of California would bear so heavily upon the taxable wealth of the respective communities as to reduce greatly the income of the State itself. To place these and similar projects under a Federal authority would lift a great load from numerous localities, reduce the rate of interest, lower the cost to those participating in the project, and afford greater security to the investor.

Arizona and Nevada have similar domestic projects of great promise, but private capital is difficult to secure and in any event at greater cost than under Federal authority. Both of these States have great potentialities that await development and an increasing population. The lands await water; the mines, industries; and the farms require power. The mineral, agricultural, and horticultural possibilities of these States have been but scratched and their productive capacities can be multiplied many times. A Federal authority would be able to survey, estimate, plan, and develop these vast resources in an orderly and conservative program and avoid much of the waste and fruitless effort of poorly planned pioneering.

The provision in this resolution to authorize the Federal authority to purchase and improve and resell lands is of vital importance, in my opinion. Why should a favored few be the beneficiaries of a comprehensive Federal program that is carried on at the authorization and by the credit of all the people? Why should not the fruits of such a plan be enjoyed by the largest possible number of citizens? Why should the owner of a ranch of thousands of acres be the recipient of a colossal fortune and the thousands of forgotten men be deprived of a home and a place in the sun?

Such a program will preserve for all the people the vast benefits of hydroelectric power, so essential to a land devoid of coal, so vital to the farm and its many irksome labors, so needful to the mine and factory, where no other source of power is available, so necessary to supply the comforts of home and to relieve the drudgery of the wifehood and motherhood bending at their household duties. Electricity is the boon of our generation, the greatest gift of the ages to toiling humanity, and its blessings should be placed within the reach of every individual and every home.

Navigation in this area is limited to the streams of central California. The control of floods and the conservation and proper distribution of its waters are of primary concern to every part of these three great States. The problem of reforestation and erosion also is of much moment and involves large and scattered areas. The utilization of the mountains, deserts, canyons, streams, and artificial lakes for recreational purposes is one of the important social and economic values of this mountain West. The preservation of fish and game is of importance to this and future generations.

Our country is suffering from two major ills, the concentration of wealth in the hands of a privileged few and the decline of home ownership. The home is the foundation of the school, the church, and the state. The home builds stability of citizenship. The home has made America great. The decline of the home is a menace to society and civilization and the greatest shadow on our future. It is our patriotic duty to encourage and to cherish it.

To former generations the inviting West was the open door of opportunity and of a home. It may have been a simple cabin, crudely carved from nearby forests; its chimneys reared from the nearby rocks; its lights from the dim, flickering candle of tallow of nearby herds. The clothes of the occupants were homespun and ill-fitting—his cap from the fur of the nearby streams and woods; his food from the fields, the gardens and orchards, and the wild woods; but this rugged life developed an independence of spirit, a freedom from want, and a courage and a self-reliance that have been the marvel of the world. All the centuries depict no such an epic as has been achieved by the pioneer of America.

But another day has dawned; new problems confront us. The prairies of freedom, the abundant forests of yesterday, are no more. The young man and the young woman of today are denied the opportunity of their ancestors. It is incumbent upon us to reopen the door of opportunity to ourselves and to our posterity and to restore the home to its former prestige, that America may march onward to a greater destiny—a destiny that will afford every citizen a full and abundant life, of which our President so eloquently speaks.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I desire to include in my remarks a copy of the resolution I have discussed.

House Resolution 290

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, requested to send to the House of Representatives a comprehensive plan for the improvement and development of the rivers and water resources, the agricultural, horticultural, mineral, and industrial resources of the States of California, Arizona, and Nevada with a view of giving to Congress information for the direction of legislation which will provide for the maximum amount of flood control, reforestation, prevention of erosion, preservation of game and fish, recreational facilities, navigation, irrigation, and the development of hydroelectric power and the distribution thereof; and for the correlation and the coordination of Federal, State, county, municipal, and district projects in said States, including the Boulder Dam, the Roosevelt Dam, the Coolidge Dam, the Parker-Gila project, the All-American Canal, the Central Valley project of California, the Metropolitan Water District, the Humboldt River, and other projects established or contemplated; and furthermore, that said plan provide for a Federal administration, including authority to utilize public lands, to purchase private lands, to reclaim, drain, irrigate, and improve said lands, to subdivide and resell the same in order to establish subsistence homesteads and to encourage home ownership.

LOTTERY

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a radio address delivered by me.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include an address entitled "Lottery", delivered by me in part from radio station WOR of Columbia Broadcasting Co., March 25, 1934, and over a Nation-wide hook-up from radio station WEAF of National Broadcasting System, April 5, 1934.

"Hands off!"
"Let it alone."
"Don't touch it."
"It's dynamite and will blow you up."

These warnings were sincere. They were given to me, in the words quoted, by personal friends of mine in the House of Representatives, when they learned of my intention to offer in the present Congress the measure which has become entitled "H.R. 7316: A bill to authorize the raising of funds by lottery for the purpose of providing additional means of defraying the cost of Government, including expenditures authorized for veterans and their dependents, and for other purposes."

Now, as a man, lawyer, and holder of political office, I am open—I trust at all times and always appreciatively—to the honest advice of my colleagues and constituents. In this instance there could not be any doubt they had my political fortunes at heart. But I believed their warning a mistaken one. It is reassuring to be able to report that since the statement of the purpose and character of the bill which I was privileged to make in the House, these colleagues have declared themselves for the measure.

What caused honest gentlemen to reserve their attitude? I have not asked them, yet I know. They have perceived, with me, that participation in an orderly lottery, conducted by Government for public benefit, is not gambling.

Let us take a moment and look at gambling. What makes it evil? Why is the straight-thinking element of society against it? Why is it outcast of the law? What does it do to human beings, to their circumstances, their character, their lives, that is hurtful or destructive?

One of the few men who really know the unwritten story of the elder Rockefeller's personality once told a brilliant correspondent why the oil master never drank. In determining his attitude toward a proposal or a policy, this man related, whether of business procedure or individual conduct, it was Mr. Rockefeller's way to set down privately two opposing columns of facts and figures. In one column he would enter the items favorable to it, in the other the items unfavorable to it. The column which yielded the greater total supplied his decision to be for or against it.

"I am perfectly sure", the informant said, "that early in his youth Mr. Rockefeller, breaking ground for a business career in a day of general drinking by business men, set down in one column the items of profit he could expect to earn by investing certain sums of money in social whisky, and in an opposite column the assessments he should expect to pay as penalties; that with his bookkeeper pen he cast the totals, and had then and there his lifelong decision."

I know of no more satisfactory method to answer the question, "Why is gambling evil?"

Let us set down in the profits column these items: Money (or other valuable consideration) which may be won; agreeable excitement of making the wagers; pleasure of anticipating success; thrill of winning; benefit of using the winnings. In the opposing column we enter: Money bet; time spent in betting; distraction from vocation; questionable associations formed through the indulgence; formation of a costly habit; emotional stress of striving to "beat the game"; mental and spiritual depression of losing money whose loss could not be afforded; temptation to obtain dishonestly the means to continue betting; temptation to dissipation as a false refuge of the loser and an unwise jubilation of the winner; lessening appreciation of things earned and increasing appetite for things won; gradual weakening of the bettor's character.

Certainly the answer to our question: "Why is gambling evil?" is expressed by the total of the second column, and we deliberately take our place with the straight-thinking element of society opposing the evil.

So what?

This: When you are reflecting upon what I have said, if you do, ask yourself, frankly, is participation in an orderly lottery, operated by government for the public benefit, gambling?

If you will do that in the calm spirit of inquiry, unswayed by any preconceived bias and uninfluenced by tradition, I believe you will come and stand beside me and my colleagues of the House who themselves came to warn and returned to pledge their support, being the genuine type of men who are not afraid to reconsider opposition.

Presumably every American school boy and girl knows that the first regular Congress of the United States held its sessions in the city of New York. But how many Americans know that lottery money provided a roof for that Congress to meet under?

The year was 1789, and the new Nation's legislative body had no quarters of its own. In this public dilemma the young metropolis came forward with an offer of its city hall, which was quickly and gratefully accepted. But the building was unsuitable in arrangement and appointments for the purpose, so the municipality remodeled and repaired it. The deficit was £13,000, as money was then reckoned in America, a huge obligation in the final decade of the eighteenth century.

The city treasury was utterly unable to shoulder the expense. It was a post-war period of hard times and high taxes—words freighted with significance to us of today. So the city laid its problem before the State legislature.

That body's response was to enact a law authorizing New York City to set up and conduct a public lottery to raise £13,000. The preamble of the act explained that a public emergency existed which could not be met through ordinary sources of revenue. The lottery was a quick success, and the city paid its bill.

I have not anywhere read of the self-respecting sturdy American patriots of that day taking shame to themselves because their country's lawmaking body "had its rent paid" by citizens' contributions made in the form of lottery participation. I have not learned that the guiding sense of social propriety, which may God preserve to us, was damaged by any of the lottery participation that created funds for the building of churches and public edifices throughout our country. Yet it may be that some zealous goalers of the public will cried out against the spectacle and called it "gambling"; as perhaps others previously did when the lottery in an emergency fed and clothed the Continental Army which won our independence. George Washington discerned the value of the lottery and purchased the first ticket for the relief of his suffering soldiers.

Remarkable to relate Elwood Washington, a living kinsman of the Father of our Country, has lately communicated to me his approval of my bill and with the blood of the greatest American coursing his veins in a spirit not of a gambler but of the true patriot has proffered to purchase the first ticket to be issued under this bill. We have had always, doubtless always shall have, sincere conscientious objectors who counsel extremely because they have not considered to think straightly. From that befuddlement emerged the eighteenth amendment upon its tragic reign of mischief.

The passage by Congress of last year's Economy Act led me to propose the present bill for a Government lottery. The Economy Act did two concrete things: It fixed the attention of the country upon the economically grave fact that $1,000,000,000 was then the annual disbursement cost of the Veterans' Administration, the actual figure being $966,838,000, and it permitted the cutting down of that cost to about $500,000,000. Since then $100,000,000 of the billion has been restored by the President, and lately Congress added $83,000,000 more, so that the current disbursement stands well nigh $700,000,000 a year. Here I shall quote a particularly pertinent Associated Press dispatch published under Washington date in the morning newspapers of January 30 last:

"Gen. Frank T. Hines, Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, told a Senate appropriations subcommittee today that 486,926 veterans had been taken off compensation rolls under the Economy Act. He said that the principles of the revised act and regulations issued under it were 'sound and should be continued.'

"Appearing on proposals to amend the economy sections of the independent offices bill in the interest of former soldiers, General Hines said that many veterans undoubtedly would be restored by review boards and President Roosevelt wanted studies continued to eliminate inequalities.

"The average monthly payments to nonservice disabled, he said, had increased in 4 months from $13.35 to $23.83."

I need not, I think, elaborate the fact that every dollar is sorely needed if our war-impaired citizen soldiers and their dependents are to receive the full measure of their country's help; the attitude and actions of the President toward this decent obligation of ours speak more forcefully than could I.

But neither can we ignore the fact that the Government is seriously impeded in its recovery campaign by having to take out of the Treasury what approaches even now $1,000,000,000 yearly for veterans' relief. The only revenues that flow into the Treasury are those created by taxation of one type or another. Nobody hands money to the Government as a gift.

But hosts of citizens, many thousands of persons monthly, would cheerfully and gladly contribute small sums of gift money to their Government for this decent obligation, if they were permitted to do so by participation in a federally authorized and federally operated lottery.

It is my considered judgment that upon a basis of the Government taking 40 percent of a $2 ticket and devoting 60 percent to participation awards, or prizes, the annual yield to the Treasury for veterans' relief would become not less than $1,000,000,000. France, with a population half our own and a national spirit certainly not superior to ours, estimates that her newly established lottery will return the Government $500,000,000. France is now 1 of 30 or more countries gathering needful revenues through government lottery, and it is to be noted that French veterans are not going uncared for. England, while proposing to ban other lotteries, has before Parliament a proposal to revert to the governmental lottery as an emergency source of operating income. I do not think that prim adherence to a doubtful tradition will qualify us to hold ourselves either holier or wiser than they.

Only 2 percent of American citizens pay an income tax. The ability of that one fiftieth of the adult population so to pay cannot sagaciously be made the perennial justification for increasing their levy in the richer brackets, since it is chiefly from the nonpaying portion of the public the residents of those brackets derive their incomes.

Yet we dare not for a moment turn our faces from the fact that now and henceforth, in a measure never before approached in the peace-time annals of the country, our Government must be supplied with larger and steadily larger financial support.

Through crucial necessity and not at all by choice the President and Congress have committed the Government to rehabilitation expenses staggering in their proportions. The millions of taxpayers, depleted in vitality by long confinement to depression's sick bed, stumble under triple loads of Federal, State, and community assessments. Some of them less Spartan than the rest would like furtively to contemplate themselves as the unfortunates Markham meant in his throbbing lines about "the long, long patience of the plundered poor." Self-pity need never to go visiting to be fed.

Nevertheless, America is still the richest country in the world, and Americans are still the warders of vast stores of hoarded wealth. I look upon a Government lottery as an ideal way to tap that timid treasure for the public good.

Charles Pickett in the Harvard Law Review (May 1932) says, "The theory behind the lottery laws is that people should be protected from dissipating their money by gambling against odds which usually are not fully appreciated." Such protection may be the theory, but a theory very far from working out. Our lottery laws in the Nation and the States are comprehensive and not gentle, yet they do not prevent Americans from sending $200,000,000 out of this country yearly in their purchase of participation in foreign sweepstakes. They do not prevent countless churches and charitable organizations from holding bazaar drawings which are lotteries in every detail but name. They prohibit, but they do not prevent.

Now, I do not believe that the adult person who indulges in the mild and pleasing dissipation of buying a chance in a Government lottery is thereby a gambler, a victim, and in need of protection against "odds which are not fully appreciated." The picture does not paint itself to me that way. What purchaser of such a lottery ticket does really seriously expect to win one of the prizes? Or is made cast down or irrational by failure to win? I have not heard of such. Have you?

As for the odds, the bill which I have introduced in the House of Representatives authorizes the Veterans' Administration, with the approval of the President, to conduct a lottery to raise funds not exceeding $1,000,000,000 in any one year, which shall be covered into the Treasury as a miscellaneous receipt. Remember the words, "not exceeding", for I shall refer to them again.

And as for the billion dollars, hearken to this: "During the past 2 years no less than a billion dollars have been kept from going out of this country in support of foreign lotteries. This was the startling statement made August 23, 1933, by Horace J. Donnelly, Solicitor of the Post Office Department." Note that the years mentioned by Mr. Donnelly were the leanest of recent times. Mr. Donnelly also stated that operators of lotteries, foreign and domestic, many of them dishonest, did not confine their activities to the large cities, but preyed upon those located in every section of the country.

It may be remembered, too, that the President recently transmitted to Congress, "for its information", copies of a report on stock-market regulation prepared for him by Assistant Secretary of Commerce, Mr. John Dickinson. Read the report: "It must always be recognized that the average man has an inherent instinct for gambling. If abolished in one form, it seems always to crop out in another. In America the man of average income has, perhaps, turned to the stock-market exchange because of the prohibition of various forms of gambling. If the speculative tendencies of our people could be turned into other channels, this instinct might be satisfied without far-reaching economic consequences."

Mr. Dickinson appeared upon the hearings on the stock-market regulation bill before the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, of which I am a member, and in the course of his testimony said that he did not oppose in principle a national lottery. Mr. Richard Whitney, president of the New York Stock Exchange, at the same hearings, agreed that a Federal lottery might take care of the little fellow and "keep him out of a lot of trouble."

I honestly believe that a national lottery would control in large measure the gambling evil. Incidentally, if I am any judge of our lovable chairman, Mr. RAYBURN, and the level-headed, straight-thinking members of the House committee, the country will get a good and acceptable stock-exchange regulation bill.

My bill authorizes the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to prepare and issue rules under which the lottery shall be conducted. The Administrator is given power to appoint, employ, and fix the compensation of the necessary officers, employees, and agents, but no salary shall exceed $8,000 a year. The Postmaster General is authorized to place the post office and postal machinery and facilities at the service of the Veterans' Administration for operating the lottery.

The forging or counterfeiting of tickets or the selling of false tickets is made punishable by maximum fine of $10,000 or maximum imprisonment for 5 years, or both. (Death was the extreme penalty provided by the New York Legislature in 1790 to protect the integrity of the congressional lottery tickets, and that was before the racketeer as a figure in American crime had being.)

The final section of the bill provides: "All pensions, allowances, and other benefits accruing to veterans and their dependents which existed prior to the 20th day of March 1933 shall be restored immediately upon the enactment of this act."

While the measure as introduced leaves the details of operation to the Veterans' Administration, assisted by the other specified Government agencies, certain suggestions toward carrying out the lottery may be offered tentatively in this discussion of it.

I think, for example, that a monthly drawing, 12 yearly, would best serve the purpose of the adventure.

I would propose one grand award of, say, not more than $120,000, and specify $500 as the minimum award. Rather than fixing a number of capital awards at amounts spaced closely below the principal prize, I should favor a very much greater number of awards graded upward from the minimum figure. In other words, I would afford participants more chances to win substantial but not extravagant slices of good luck instead of offering bigger purses with less possibility of winning at all. With fantastic prizes, such as, say, a quarter or half million dollars, I would have nothing to do.

The setting in the bill of a limit to the revenue to be raised in any one year practically determines in advance the odds against the participant to win. It being an ascertained fact that a Government lottery, once established beyond its introductory period, receives a stable volume of patronage, the participation hazard resolves itself thus: To produce $1,000,000,000 revenue as the Government's 40-percent share for the veterans, there would be sold $2,500,000,000 of tickets. The price of a ticket being $2, the total of tickets sold in the year would be 1,250,000,000, or, monthly, 104,166,666 tickets. The odds against winning an award can then be determined by the participant by dividing the total number of the offered prizes into the figure "104,166,666." Thus, if the total number of offered prizes for the month should be 5,000, the participant by dividing 5,000 into 104,166,666 would learn that his ticket had 1 chance in 20,833 to win a prize. But no figuring known to the brain of man could tell him which prize, whether the $120,000 jumbo, or a modest $500 one, or some less splendid or more substantial intermediate award. Since the total of tickets to be sold is limited and publicly known, his chance of winning could not be less than 1 in 20,833; should the month's sale total fall below the limit, his chance of winning would be arithmetically better.

While the foregoing calculations are not of material importance, they are adventurously attractive. And they serve to supply the reason, too, why none of us ever seriously expects to win an award in a lottery or ever is cast into gloom by not winning, though we do know that in such a lottery as is here discussed a certain percentage of all the tickets have to win in every drawing. I look upon it as a game quite worth its inexpensive candle. We all of us who play it will get some fun building tinted castles in Spain, some of us will get awards, the veterans will get what is decently coming to them from their countrymen, the Government will get a billion-dollar gift from its citizens, and the heavily burdened taxpayers will get a hand up in distress.

I think it may be highly desirable to make the higher awards payable partly in spot cash and partly in short-term annuities. If, for example, Joe Mack's family's ticket wins and calls for $15,000, it would mean they would be paid the Government's check for, say, $5,000 and additionally $1,000 a month for 10 months. The wisdom of such a form of redemption seems to me obvious.

I would be opposed to the sale of tickets to persons under 18 years of age.

I suggest that tickets be purchasable at post offices only, and that payments of awards be made by post offices of sale. I believe this manner of handling would be the surest safeguard against racketeer invasion for purposes of counterfeiting and other frauds.

I would make half tickets at $1 available to the public.

Periodically there come times when the people of a country decide to give theory in government a vacation and sit down in the kitchen with facts. When they do this, history begins the writing of a new chapter. Behind such occasions, though we may not confess the fact until after the chapter has been finished, is the normal social yearning to reprove by making a change that, after all, life and liberty are worth while only as affording opportunity to human beings to pursue happiness. We do not seriously demand to capture, but you shall not too long—at one stretch—forbid the pursuit.

We have sent the theory in government of compulsory abstinence from liquor away upon a long vacation, and we are still sessioning in the kitchen. We have decreed leaves of absence to quite a number of historic means and manners which, we agreed, were cluttering the trails of our discountenanced pursuit. It may be that for a while at least we are of majority opinion that government by theory has become a lot of tall grass for shapes to crawl in.

What do you think?

CANADA AND PREFERENTIAL TARIFFS

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD on Canadian reciprocity and to include a statement made in reference to the New England situation by the Foreign Trade Club of Boston.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, one of the most remarkable developments of the past several years in connection with the growth of business in Canada has been its promotion by law enactments of its home business at the expense of business in the United States.

Laws or regulations have been promulgated to attract the installation of new manufacturers, and the use of Canadian facilities for transportation by rail or water, with such great success that they must marvel at our own simplicity in allowing the necessary discriminations without any attempt on our part to retain what was our own.

In 1928 an official representative of the Canadian Government told me at Buffalo that over 1,200 American business firms were represented in Canada, over half by factories established there, and others by offices sufficiently representative so that they could secure the advantages furnished by their Government through its laws and regulations.

An investigation of the causes of this movement of American business can readily be seen upon investigation; for instance, American western wheat was gradually drawn to the Canadian markets, principally because Canadian wheat inspection was such that the shipper gained financially by shipping that way. This, as the years rolled by, practically made, during the fall and summer months, Montreal the great market for American western-grown wheat. On the other hand, Canadian wheat was almost all shipped abroad from United States ports, as most of it came into the market after the close of navigation on the St. Lawrence River. It will be noted that we accepted the Canadian inspection on their bonded wheat, contrary to their practice with ours.

Although this would indicate a fair exchange in tonnage between the two countries, leaving out the wheat inspection, the Canadian being in doubt as to what our policy might be in the future, as we had requested through the State Department that our inspection should be recognized as we recognize theirs, started a building program at the ports of St. Johns and Halifax, established during the winter months an exceedingly low rate of freight from the grain elevators to these ports, so as to care for the closed St. Lawrence season, then followed 2 years ago by placing a prohibitive tariff in the United Kingdom on Canadian wheat shipped through the United States ports, unless each individual car was consigned to a legitimate purchaser in the United Kingdom from the Canadian point of shipment. This resulted in taking away of cargo from our shipping to United Kingdom points, and of course materially affected the business of our North Atlantic and Pacific ports, as it covered millions of bushels of grain annually.

As a result, the Canadian ports are rapidly increasing in size and facilities, and even now Montreal is making a survey and proposing the doubling of the amount of grain-elevator space at that port in order to accommodate the additional business expected, and many of the largest grain dealers in the United States now have subsidiary offices in Canada in order to secure the advantages offered.

However, you cannot operate a ship profitably on grain alone; you must have other inbound cargo, and more profitable cargo outbound, so what do our Canadian friends do but start to get these necessary shipments. Their plan was to attract American manufacturers to open subsidiary companies in Canada. To do this they were obliged to offer an attraction; this they did in a number of promotion ways in which cheap sites and cheap taxes were a small factor. They agreed with manufacturers who would establish Canadian factories that they would only require a minimum part of the finished product to be made in Canada providing the assembling was done there. This allowed the manufacturer to make at his home factory the vital parts of his product in the United States. After these factories were established they gradually raised the minimum required by successive tariffs until he was forced, in order not to lose his investment, to enlarge his plant until most of the product was made in Canada, the penalty being that unless he complied he could not receive the benefit of the various tariffs or other regulations.

The principal way of attracting business was by the manipulation of their tariffs. They were careful not to be foolish like we have been and tie themselves up in most-favored-nation tariffs. They prepared a tariff, then negotiated treaties with many European nations trading preferential tariffs, both nations giving discounts, and further, made a British Empire agreement for another still lower tariff to British possessions. We must not forget they were after cargo for the grain ships, so they limited the preferential tariff with foreign nations so that it would only be applicable to ships delivering goods to or taking goods from Canadian ports.

These are only a few of the high spots of Canadian discrimination which we have let come into existence with hardly any resistance on our part; there are many smaller matters that make shipping through Canada attractive to shippers. Goods from abroad today are shipped through Canada to St. Louis and beyond, so that you can readily see the disastrous loss these Canadian regulations have caused, both to our ships and railroads.

In order to at least try to retain our American business for our shippers and railroads, I have introduced a bill, H.R. 4493, a bill to prevent discrimination against American ships and ports, and for other purposes. This bill will charge a special tax or tariff of 10 percent upon all foreign goods brought into the United States through Canada, and the charge is only in effect as long as the Canadian discriminations are continued against us; a fair bill which surely should not be protested by our neighbors as long as they originated the idea.

Merchandise consigned to the United States and shipped through Canada in bond, when arriving at port of entry of the United States, pays the regular duty; on the contrary, as explained, shipments made from countries where there is in existence preferential duty arrangement with Canada, and not delivered directly to a Canadian port, but shipped through a port of the United States in bond, lose their preferential status and pay the higher duty, so that under the present arrangements the Canadians retain their own business for their own facilities, and owing to our own inattention we are losing to them a very large tonnage of merchandise which should be carried upon American ships and railroads and through American ports.

It is proposed by H.R. 4493 to correct this discrimination insofar as imports are concerned unless the Canadians are willing to treat shipments through our country on an equal basis with our treatment of theirs.

The Foreign Commerce Club of Boston have prepared a very complete statement covering the whole subject, which is as follows:

The Foreign Commerce Club of Boston, Inc., wishes to place itself on record as approving the following bills, all treating on the same subject:

H.R. 4493, introduced by Hon. G. W. EDMONDS, of Pennsylvania.
H.R. 1637, introduced by Hon. ROBERT LUCE, of Massachusetts.
S. 3516, introduced by Hon. WALLACE H. WHITE, JR., of Maine.
S. 1525, introduced by Hon. CLARENCE C. DILL, of Washington.

The Foreign Commerce Club of Boston, Inc., is made up of some 200 members, each of whom is engaged in business allied with the foreign commerce of the port of Boston. The membership is composed of steamship agents, railroad representatives, customs brokers, freight forwarders, stevedores, weighers, pilots, towboat companies; in fact, every branch of industry connected with foreign trade.

Our scope of activity is not limited to local maritime matters, but it is interested in all matters which relate to foreign trade as it affects the country as a whole. Especially does it interest itself in all cases where the commerce of the United States is jeopardized.

The members of our club have during the past 7 or 8 years seen the foreign commerce of our port, insofar as it pertains to contiguous countries, drop to a very low position. For many years prior to 1927 the port of Boston was favored with a very large traffic in foreign merchandise arriving for destinations in Canada and the Middle West of the United States.

While the number of steamers arriving at this port has not diminished greatly, still the amount of cargo unloaded at Boston from each ship is almost infinitesimal. Prior to 1927 it was not uncommon for vessels arriving from Far East ports (Indian especially) to unload at Boston from 5,000 to 7,000 tons of freight, the greater portion of which was through traffic—that is, not for local consumption.

For the past 7 or 8 years these same vessels have unloaded from 200 to 600 tons, which cargo is discharged in a few hours after arrival of the steamer in port. The total amount of earned freight often does not pay for port expenses. These steamers come to Boston, notwithstanding the great losses incurred, in order to keep up the service for local interests.

The Canadian customs tariff contains certain regulations (particularly chapter 30, section 3 (1) (a), section 4 (g), and section 5) which are especially detrimental to United States shipping. These regulations, which originally became effective in 1907, have been gradually changed to the extent that, at the present time they constitute a direct and almost absolute barrier to foreign goods imported into Canada via the United States. Thus, through changes in the basic Canadian customs regulations, as well as upward revision of Canadian tariff rates as they apply to United States products and all imports via the United States, Canada has gradually forced the routing of its foreign imports away from the natural and economical trade channels of shipping from foreign countries via United States ports and in transit to Canadian destinations. Such tariff policy by Canada has not only been instituted by severe Dominion duty discrimination against imports received via the United States, but has been fostered and abetted by consistent action of subsidizing, and even building, or initiating Canadian ports, railroads, and steamship lines, at great cost.

Without delving into the ramifications of the Canadian tariff, the following explanation of the required qualifications for admission of Canadian imports at reduced rates of duty will indicate the salient regulations which militate against shipment via the United States.

The British preferential tariff (lowest rates accorded to practically all of the British Empire), and the intermediate tariff (medium rates accorded to practically all of the principal commercial nations, except the United States) apply to goods of the areas and countries mentioned when conveyed without transshipment from the country of origin to a sea, lake, or river port of Canada, provided that such goods, when shipped on a through bill of lading to a port of Canada, may be transferred at a British port and then conveyed without transshipment to a port of Canada, and be entitled to the lower rates of duty under the preferential or intermediate tariffs.

As a further inducement for direct shipments of British Empire goods to Canadian ports, a discount of 10 percent of the duty is allowed on most goods entitled to the preferential duty rates (providing the duty exceeds 15 percent of the value) if the goods are conveyed as specified in the above paragraph, that is, not shipped via the United States to Canadian destination.

The importance of this restriction of preferential and intermediate tariff-rate application only to goods imported directly into Canada from countries of origin or British ports can be gaged by the fact that most of the British preferential duties are about 50 percent and the intermediate rates about 25 percent less than the general rates, the latter rates applying on commodities of or shipped via the United States.

Increase of duty cost on shipments routed to Canada via the United States is augmented by application of sales and excise tax which, at the present time, amounts to 9 percent of the value of goods, plus the duty, and applies on practically all goods imported into Canada. This sales and excise tax applies on commodities imported, regardless of country of origin, but it will be noted that the 9 percent is assessed on the duty-paid value of shipments. Thus, in view of the fact that the general or highest rate of duty applies on foreign shipments received in Canada via the United States, the sales and excise tax assessment provides an accumulative and additional cost on intransit shipments to Canada through the United States.

Although this policy of granting lower rates of duty to products from certain countries, when shipped directly to Canadian ports, became definitely established during 1907, its import and effect was negligible until recent years—from 1926 to date. Up to 1926 the Canadian preferences were not, for the most part, numerous or extremely low as compared with the general rates. However, with increase in preference advantages and the institution of the sales tax with its subsequent increases and the establishment of an excise tax, Canada has consistently and methodically increased the general rates of duty and decreased the preferential rates so that increased cost of duty, sales, and excise tax on commodities imported from foreign countries via the United States as against lowered costs on goods imported directly into Canada from country of origin or via British port ranges between 15 percent to 50 percent in favor of direct shipments to Canada as against shipments received via the United States.

Results of this constant and increasing discrimination against shipments imported via the United States have been: sharp reduction in ocean cargo tonnage from foreign countries for Canada via United States ports; decrease of freight and liner services to United States ports, caused by diversion of many of these services to Canadian ports; and the increase of exports from and imports into the United States via Canada. The far-reaching effects of this Canadian policy is evidenced by a statement in Heaton's Handbook of Canada, 1932, which has the following note (p. 687, bottom): "An increasing number of Americans are returning from Europe by Canadian ports." Unfortunately, this statement is correct, for United States citizens are not only returning via Canadian ports, but an increasing number are sailing from Canadian ports, and it is an axiom of ship operation that passenger service is the final proof of well-established ocean-port service, which has as its basis adequate port and terminal facilities with substantial movement of ocean freight. Through Canadian legislation we have lost American import and export shipments as well as freight destined from foreign countries through the United States to Canada, and by these losses of freight American steamship and railroad companies have lost tremendously in revenue, while Canadian interests and the ports of Montreal, Quebec, Halifax, St. John, Vancouver, and Victoria have gained proportionately.

Bearing on this last statement, we quote from the Daily Freight Record, published in New York, edition of June 22, 1932: "Halifax port traffic: Cargo handled on the piers of the Halifax Harbor Commission during the week ended June 10 totaled 6,724 tons, an increase of 2,700 tons over the volume for the same week in 1931, according to a statement issued. This marked the third consecutive week in which the increase over business volume a year ago was more than 40 percent. The total volume handled during the 3 weeks ended June 10 was 26,214 tons, compared with 15,407 tons during the same period of 1931, an increase of about 70 percent. The total increase from the beginning of 1932 to June 10, as compared with same period of last year, was 6¾ percent."

Further, we quote from the New York Journal of Commerce, edition of December 12, 1932: "Transshipments of major imports to this country destined for other foreign markets are on the wane owing to rising trade barriers abroad. The latest example of decline in such trade is the contraction in reexports to Canada.

"Recent reports show that the Lever interests are shipping palm oil direct to Canadian ports from Africa. Formerly a large portion of Canada's palm-oil requirements was supplied by transshipment from the United Sttaes.

"Canadian rubber factories, to take another example, are understood to be arranging for direct shipments of crude rubber from the Far East. Formerly large quantities of crude rubber were reexported from New York and Boston to Canada."

In our opinion, this great increase in tonnage direct to Canadian ports is that tonnage which, prior to the Canadian Act of 1926, section 1, chapter 7, effective April 1, 1927, usually came to the United States Atlantic, Pacific, and Gulf ports. While we have not the statistics for Vancouver, it is presumed that the same ratio of increase can be applied to that port, while the Pacific coast ports have suffered proportionately.

In reference to the statement above quoted, in reference to the increase in tonnage at the port of Halifax, we beg to call the committee's attention to the fact that this great increase was enjoyed during depression years, when Canada suffered as much as we. While Canadian ports have been prospering, our ports have been doing practically no business.

Many of the steamers arriving at Halifax are from the Far East. These steamers carry commodity cargoes; that is, only a few different classes of merchandise, but large quantities of each. They arrive at Halifax with full cargoes, the bulk of which is not only for Canadian consumption but for consumption in the middle-west sections of the United States. This cargo, when arriving at Halifax, is shipped over Canadian rails to our own Midwest, thereby allowing no revenue to our rails. In former years this business was tremendous to our railroads.

Not only do shipments travel west from Halifax and St. John but east from Vancouver to New York State, Massachusetts, and, in fact, all Eastern States.

Trainloads, not carloads, of silk are continually arriving at the Port of New York from Vancouver and carloads of wool at Boston. If these shipments would arrive at United States Pacific ports the American railroads would have the entire haul, and, being for American merchants, who has a better right to enjoy the land haul than these same American railroads, which are maintained by American money and pay taxes here?

A great many speeches in the Congress and numerous articles in the newspapers of the country continually lay stress on the terrible condition of the railroads. How to rehabilitate them has been a great and grave question. Certainly they cannot be brought to life, or even nourished in the slightest degree, by paying toll to the Canadian roads. Without income, dividends are passed, interest on bonds suspended, and bonds finally repudiated, which will end in the roads going into the hands of receivers, as many have already done, and calling on the taxpayers, in the person of the United States, to refinance them in order to sustain their lives. It is time to give this matter extended and earnest thought.

The blow occasioned by the aforesaid Canadian Act of 1926 not being sufficient to lay the United States trade in its tracks, so Canada, which is extremely wise in its generation, took it upon itself to be the chief inaugurator and finally the prevailing force in bringing about the so-called "Ottawa pact", which in a few words said, "Trade among ourselves only (meaning the British Empire), but if not then you will be penalized." And, with this slogan, they are accomplishing what they set out to do.

We cannot be too harsh in our criticism of the Canadian Government for this—it was doing what it felt was best for Canada. "Canada for the Canadians!" What a powerful and penetrating phrase. Should we follow their example, or simply stand by until our business has fallen into decay?

Let us consider the matter thoroughly to the end that United States trade, carried on by our citizens of this country, will be protected, whether it be water- or rail-borne.

Canada is not the only country which has customs laws favoring its own country, and which are in themselves discriminatory.

Under the caption "Customs Surtaxes" in the French tariff, we read: "There is a surtax of origin imposed on most articles of non-European origin when imported through a European country." This tax varies with the commodity, but, in general, amounts to 3.60 francs per 100 kilos. (Extract from report of the Department of Commerce, Division of Foreign Tariffs, dated Washington, June 15, 1932.)

The interpretation of this measure is that merchandise shipped from the United States to France through, say, London, Liverpool, Antwerp, Rotterdam, or other ports, pays the excise tax, which is a penalty for not shipping merchandise direct to France or in French bottoms.

Portugal also has a preferential tariff, the substance of which is "The preferential rebate of the duties on all imports (except tobacco) granted by Portugal on foreign merchandise arriving in Portuguese vessels has been reduced from 8 percent to 6 percent of the duties by a decree effective January 3, 1933, according to a cablegram of January 4 from Commercial Attaché R. C. Long, Lisbon." (This item taken from Commerce Reports, Jan. 14, 1933.)

Brazil also has a law in effect that a rebate or reduction of 50 percent of the fees is allowed to shippers using the Lloyd Brasiliero vessels. These original fees are collected on the consular invoice covering merchandise shipped to Brazil; and if shipped in Brazilian bottoms, the rebate above mentioned is allowed. As small as this fee might be, it, however, establishes a principle of direct preference for shipping in national vessels.

Dependence for revenue cannot be made on United States vessels bringing to this country only cargoes for our own consumption or for use in coastal territory only. These steamers must carry in-transit cargoes as well, and, as an example how our commerce is being diminished, we will later quote some statistics which show how our business in foreign trade is affected by the present Canadian embargo—for such it is.

Reverting to the subject of the three classes of Canadian tariff, we give a list of the following countries that are favored by Canada in the so-called "intermediate tariff":

Germany, Italy and her colonies, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Belgium, Luxemburg, Estonia, Finland, Hungary, Latvia, Lithuania, Netherlands and her colonies, Norway, Portugal, Rumania, Spain (and certain of her possessions), Sweden, Switzerland, Yugoslavia, Argentina, Brazil, Colombia, Venezuela, and Japan.

This intermediary tariff is contingent only on the condition that the imported merchandise is shipped direct to Canada or through British Empire or possessions. If the merchandise arrives in Canada via United States ports, then the general tariff applies.

The foregoing shows that nearly every country in Europe and South America enjoys the privilege of the Canadian intermediate tariff, while we, speaking the same language, of the same basic race, and separated from Canada only by a boundary line, are excluded from any and all privileges of carrying on foreign trade with Canada, except under severe penalty.

Especially are we cut off from trade that originates in foreign countries and is shipped in transit through the United States to Canada.

Now, how has this law affected us? may be asked.

As an example, let us take the Canadian tariff, item no. 446a, which includes iron and steel manufactures. The Canadian duty, according to the 1932 tariff, is as follows:

	Percent
Preferential tariff	15
Intermediate tariff	27½
General tariff	35

A shipment of steel, valued at $1,000 f.o.b. point of origin, arriving in Canada, pays the following rates of duty:

	Duty	Difference in favor of intermediate countries	In favor of British Empire
If imported from or via United States	$471.50
If imported from countries enjoying intermediate privilege (direct)	389.75	$81.75
If imported from British Empire (direct)	253.50		$218

The above represents duty, plus sales and excise taxes.

We take this item, not because it covers steel alone but because the article covers so many different forms of steel manufactures.

We also refer to one other item—that is, bananas.

Item 98 and 98A in the Canadian tariff allows bananas to be imported into Canada from British West Indies free of duty, provided they enter Canada direct. If they are shipped from the same territory via United States port, they pay a duty of 50 cents per bunch or stem.

Item 8 in the Canadian tariff covers canned meat. The duty on this class of merchandise is: Preferential, 15 percent; intermediate, 30 percent; and general, 35 percent.

As can be testified to, thousands of cases of canned meats annually formerly arrived in Boston from the Argentine in vessels, destined for Canada. None of this cargo comes here now for reason of the 5 percent additional duty. Argentina being in the intermediate class is favored with a 30-percent rate of duty. Consequently the merchandise is shipped direct to Canada or via British Isles.

What is shown by the foregoing is simply an example, but covers every commodity of commerce, with the exception of some few articles which are by Canadian law free of duty.

In the case of British Empire goods, if the merchandise is shipped via the United States to Canada, the general or highest rate applies. Therefore, this is an indirect subsidy for shipments of goods from foreign countries of origin to Canadian ports, precluding the use of American seaports for in-transit shipments.

The crux of the situation is that goods imported into Canada via the United States are penalized by assessment of higher duties and increased sales and excise tax cost, which has resulted in a discontinuance of in-transit shipments via United States to Canada.

This condition has created a vicious circle for American marine and transportation facilities, through the diversion of waterborne and rail in-transit traffic away from the United States to the extent that steamship services from Canadian ports have increased so that already American exports and imports are moving in considerable quantity via Canadian ports which in the past moved from United States ports.

Some have suggested that an export tax be assessed on United States goods exported via a contiguous country. The Constitution strictly forbids a tax on exports, so there is no chance for action there.

The following tables show the amount of trade passing through the United States from foreign countries and vice versa, from and including the years 1921 to 1931 (the 1932 figures are not available). These figures were obtained from the Department of Commerce reports and are, therefore, authentic:

The above statistics cover only Canadian and other North American countries, such as Central America, Newfoundland, Miquelon, Labrador, Mexico, West Indies, Cuba, Dominican Republic, and Virgin Islands. We quote these for the reason that the bills presented to the House and Senate, supra, cover only merchandise shipped to the United States through contiguous countries.

It is quite evident from the foregoing that our foreign in-transit trade has been demoralized and cannot be improved or recovered unless corrective measures are taken to offset this practical embargo.

If such a law as requested in the bills, the subject of this brief, were in effect during the 10-year period above, duties would have been paid to the United States on foreign merchandise shipped through Canada to this country in amounts ranging from approximately $9,500,000 in 1931 to $34,000,000 in 1927.

Trade of Canada for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1931, contains several statements and tables which should be of especial interest, some of which read as follows: "In view of the current discussion respecting direct purchasing from overseas countries, it is of interest to point out that for many years past Canada has purchased large quantities of products, largely raw or semimanufactured, from the United Kingdom and the United States which did not originate in these countries. During the calendar years 1929 and 1930, the exports of foreign produce from the United Kingdom to Canada represented about 7 percent and in the case of the United States about 5 percent of the total exports from these countries to Canada. Foreign exports from the United States to Canada in 1929 totaled $46,302,000, and in 1930, $31,283,000." The commodities involved were as follows:

The statistics in the following table show Canada's imports by continents via the United States for the fiscal years 1921 and 1931 and indicate that the percentages of Canada's imports by continents show a decrease during the past decade for each continent with the exception of Africa:

Canada's imports via the United States, by continents, fiscal years ending Mar. 31, 1921 and 1931

Continents	Imports via the United States		Percentage of imports
	1921	1931	1921	1931
Europe	$6,755,443	$1,466,503	2.55	0.65

The following information is given by a certain railroad operating out of Boston. The figures given are in tons and represent the amount of in-transit import freight shipped through Boston to Canada:

	Tons
1926	26,321
1927	24,857
1928	21,371
1929	32,238
1930	27,252
1931	15,339
1932	10,292

The increased tonnage for 1929 and 1930 was caused by approximately 10,000 tons of a certain commodity which does not enter here now. With this amount deducted from the totals of 1929 and 1930, the total miscellaneous cargoes would show 22,238 and 17,252, respectively. The percentage of decrease between 1926 and 1932, inclusive, is therefore approximately 61.5 percent.

Shipments of bananas, which we are informed were considered local and not imported traffic, would increase the above tonnage to around 5,000 tons per year up to 1930, at which time exports of this commodity to Canada via the United States began to stop.

In connection with the decrease of imports from foreign countries via the United States, it is interesting to note that several steamship companies during the past year or so have inaugurated direct sailings from eastern Canadian ports to various points on the globe. Direct lines, during certain seasons of the year, connect the eastern Canadian seacoast with the British West Indies and with South Africa, and it is certain that increasing amounts of produce from these areas are exported direct to Canada rather than through the United States.

The following item is quoted in full from the Boston Evening Globe of January 18, 1933, which shows the trend of commerce between Canada and Great Britain, to the detriment of United States commerce. We admit that this increase has been occasioned in a measure by the so-called "Ottawa pact", but it bears out our contention that a movement is already in operation to eliminate the United States as a trading nation:

"Canada's export trade in 1932 swung into empire channels. From the opening of the imperial economic conference at Ottawa in July, a pronounced increase in Canadian domestic exports to the United Kingdom was noticeable in trade returns. In the calendar year 1932, the Dominion Bureau of Statistics reports, Canada exported goods to the value of $178,171,680, an increase of $6,636,858 over the 1931 exports of $171,534,759.

"But the large increase began in July. In the last 6 months, the exports to United Kingdom totaled $116,487,568, as against $102,533,809 in the same period of 1931.

"In other words, 65 percent of Canada's exports to the United Kingdom in 1932 were sent since the conference opened in Ottawa and 35 percent in the 6 months prior to it. The United Kingdom now is very definitely Canada's leading market, taking the place formerly occupied by the United States.

"Canada's domestic exports to the United States in 1932 totaled $162,630,779, or $15,540,901 less than to the United Kingdom. In 1931, the domestic exports to the United States amounted to $256,942,045, or $85,407,223 more than to Great Britain, and in 1930 the amount was $395,738,375, or $160,514,416 more than to Great Britain.

"Domestic exports to British Empire countries in December totaled in value $20,580,547, compared with $20,262,873 a year ago, a reduction of $46,326 in value, but an increase in volume.

"During the last 6 months of 1932 the domestic exports to Empire countries totaled $137,209,418, compared with $126,483,054 in the same period of 1931, a gain of $10,726,364.

"Despite the heavy reduction of almost $10,000,000 in Canada's domestic exports to the United States as compared with December a year ago, there were some increases, such as rubber, chiefly tires and footwear, $6,000 to $11,000; raw wool, $4,000 to $10,000; shingles, $127,000 to $135,000; aluminum, $11,000 to $19,000; raw gold, $399,000 to $444,000; silver, $95,000 to $111,000; asbestos, $180,000 to $181,000; acids, $62,000 to $143,000; fertilizers, $59,000 to $112,000."

We could quote from the daily, shipping, and trade papers throughout the country on this subject, but we would simply be filling up the record with repetition.

The United States Government, as well as private interests, has spent millions of dollars developing its merchant marine in order to bring back to this country the shipping and foreign commerce we lost just after the Civil War when the business successfully carried on by our clipper ships was taken from us by Great Britain.

The American merchant marine, as well as the American railroads, must live. We have all been converted in the past few years to the realization that the carrying on of foreign commerce belongs to us as well as to other countries, and it is our purpose to see that this right is not taken from us. If we are to submit to the efforts made by other nations to destroy our commerce and shipping without some form of resistance, then we should either scrap our vessels or turn them over to foreign owners. When and if this is accomplished you will see the business of rate raising started immediately and American commerce will then have to pay excess freight to compensate for the purchase of those vessels we were forced to sell.

By the same token we must not stand by to see the Canadian railroads enjoying the foreign shipments destined to Midwestern States which rightfully belong to the United States.

The loss of this transportation for American ports, railroads, and allied interests has had its proportionate effect on the employment situation. The abnormal decreases as evidenced by the statistical data mentioned above have had a far-reaching effect, as may be seen in the number of idle piers, decreased business, and marine and rail unemployment, which in no small part may be attributed to this diversion of natural and economical in-transit trade for Canada and interior United States points.

The facts and arguments set forth justify the position we take in favor of these bills and conclude with the request that said bills be given your favorable decision, with recommendation to both the House and Senate that they should be passed.

Respectfully submitted.

PUBLIC GRAZING LANDS

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 307; and, pending that, may I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if he desires time on the rule?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I suggest the gentleman give us the usual time. We probably will not use all of the time. I note the rule provides for 3 hours, therefore I would suggest that the gentleman yield us 30 minutes.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I shall yield the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY] 30 minutes.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit an interruption in order to make a request?

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama for a request.

HOME OWNERS' LOAN BILL

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 2999) to guarantee the bonds of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, to amend the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, and for other purposes, with House amendments, insist upon the House amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I present a motion to instruct the conferees, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. LUCE offers the following: Resolved, That the managers of the conference on S. 2999 on the part of the House be instructed to agree to section 2 (n) thereof, as follows:

"(n) In the appointment of agents and the selection of employees for said Corporation, and in the promotion of agents or employees, no partisan political test or qualification shall be permitted or given consideration, but all agents and employees shall be appointed, employed, or promoted solely upon the basis of merit and efficiency. Any member of the Board who is found guilty of a violation of this provision by the President of the United States shall be removed from office by the President of the United States, and any agent or employee of the Corporation who is found guilty of a violation of this section by the Board shall be removed from office by said Board."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against the motion that it is not authorized by the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I submit that a motion to instruct the conferees is now in order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, here is the situation There was a bill passed in the Senate making provisions for the guarantee of home-loan bonds. This was the primary purpose of the bill. Because Democratic Congressmen were allowed to appoint the appraisers and attorneys it did not set well with some Senators and Republicans, so a Republican Member of the Senate offered an amendment to require all appointments to be nonpolitical, by which term he meant that all appointees must be Republicans. He called them "nonpolitical" appointments. Whenever there is a nonpolitical appointment, some Republican gets the job. There is no such thing, Mr. Speaker, as a nonpolitical appointment. If you let the bank board or the State managers or anybody else make the appointments, they are nevertheless political appointments.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against the gentleman's statement.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I am discussing the point of order.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order the gentleman is discussing the merits of the legislation and not the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I am discussing what was in the bill as it came to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the statement of the gentleman from Texas is in order.

Mr. BLANTON. I repeat there is no such thing as a nonpolitical appointment.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I repeat my point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to hear the gentleman from Texas on his point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I think I know the rules as well as my friend from Michigan, and I will admit that the gentleman is a good parliamentarian.

Mr. MAPES. The gentleman knows the rules, and the gentleman knows he is not conforming to the rules right now.

Mr. BLANTON. I have the Speaker with me. He has overruled the gentleman's point of order.

Mr. MAPES. No; the Speaker is not with the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is overruled. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, under Cannon's Revised Rules and Precedents this motion to instruct is not in order. I repeat that there is no such thing as a nonpolitical appointment. No matter who is to make the appointments, they will be political. The House has already voted down the Senate amendment, and this motion seeks to have the House act again on the same issue. The House has already decided that we Democrats are going to continue to make these appointments.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I renew the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. BLANTON. Now, our good friend from Michigan ought to sit down.

Mr. Speaker, this bill came from the Senate to the House committee, and our committee very promptly and righteously and properly struck out that Senate amendment. The bill was then reported to this House and passed under suspension of the rules without any such proposal in it, although it was argued at length.

I realize that there is a precedent sustaining the position taken by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES], both of whom are able parliamentarians, in the ruling that was made by Mr. Speaker Longworth, holding that such a motion to instruct is in order. And I realize that Mr. Cannon did not cite precedents sustaining the doctrine he enunciated. And if the Speaker should overrule my point of order, I hope that the Democrats in the House will vote down this Republican motion, which, of course, will be supported by every Republican in the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is prepared to rule.

The provision to which the motion to instruct refers is in the bill. It was in the bill as it passed the Senate. The proposition now is to send the bill with the House amendment to conference, and the Chair knows of no parliamentary reason why the conferees may not be instructed to agree to a portion of the Senate bill. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOODRUM. I understood the Speaker to say he knew of no reason why the House conferees should not be instructed.

The SPEAKER. If the House desires to do so.

Mr. WOODRUM. If the House desires to do so; yes.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to instruct the conferees.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion may again be reported for the information of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. We have all heard it, and we all know what it is.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request.

Mr. BLANTON. I object; we all know what it is.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] to instruct the conferees.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LUCE) there were—ayes 68, noes 81.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I question the vote on the ground of the absence of a quorum.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not a quorum present. The call is automatic.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 115, nays 229, answered "present" 1, not voting 85, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the following conferees: Mr. STEAGALL, Mr. PRALL, Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH, Mr. LUCE, and Mr. BEEDY.

CLAIMS OF THE TURTLE MOUNTAIN BAND OF CHIPPEWA INDIANS, NORTH DAKOTA

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 326, referring the claims of the Turtle Mountain Band or Bands of Chippewa Indians of North Dakota to the Court of Claims for adjudication and settlement, insist on the House amendment, and agree to the conference asked for.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, has the gentleman consulted the Republican members of the committee?

Mr. HOWARD. I have consulted a magnificent member of the committee, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PEAVEY].

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And they have no objection to this?

Mr. HOWARD. No.

There was no objection, and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. CARTWRIGHT, Mr. CHAVEZ, and Mr. PEAVEY.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I have asked for this time in order to call your attention to the McLeod bill, H.R. 7908. A petition has been laid on the Clerk's desk for the discharge of the committee.

I am informed that a goodly number have already signed the petition, and it is desirable that we obtain sufficient signatures today. To discharge the committee and thus assure us of a hearing on the floor, it is necessary that 145 Members sign the petition.

The bill authorizes the release of 100 percent of the deposits which are at present tied up in the closed banks. It is estimated that it will release a potential purchasing power of about $1,800,000,000.

There is no criticism of anybody with respect to this bill. We think it is far-reaching and important enough so that it should be brought up and disposed of immediately.

One reason why we think we should consider it immediately is that many small banks have reserves and surpluses on deposit with the larger urban banks. Under the ruling of the Supreme Court the small banks have the same status as individual depositors. If this bill is passed the small banks will be able to open up and pay the depositors, which will relieve a great deal of distress in America today, because many people cannot recoup their losses otherwise due to infirmity, old age, and incapacity to work. Many of this class have funds tied up and cannot get relief by employment in the C.W.A. or any agency, and are therefore on welfare rolls. The bill should be passed and I plead with Members to sign the petition and enact it as soon as possible.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. It has been estimated that the Government will pay out a billion or a billion and a half to the C.W.A. and relief agencies this year. If the R.F.C. takes over the assets of these banks, it is estimated it will cost about one billion to one and one half billion dollars. If we do this, the Government will receive assets greater than the deposit liability of the banks, and the Government should not lose anything in an orderly liquidation. In addition many people who are now on welfare rolls will be taken off the rolls.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes; and it would relieve the taxpayers of the burden of carrying these people on the welfare rolls at a tremendous cost to the people who were in nowise responsible for the plight of millions dependent upon their hard-earned savings for a livelihood.

TAX-FREE SECURITIES

Mr. SHOEMAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHOEMAKER. Mr. Speaker, a great many Members have introduced bills asking for a constitutional amendment, which would do away with tax-free securities. If I am correctly informed, about 150 Members of the Seventy-third Congress have already introduced this same bill. The other day I took a group of names of those who had introduced this same bill, practically verbatim, and I picked out the Patman bill and laid it upon the desk here for signers. All of you who introduced that bill have an opportunity to show that you stand behind it. It has been charged in campaigns that Congressmen all introduced this bill for a constitutional amendment to do away with tax-free securities so that they can have it referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and have it printed, and then take it home and wave it before their constituents in a campaign and say, "Here is what I have done to do away with these tax-free securities." For that reason I have given everybody in this House an opportunity to step up here to the desk and sign that petition to do away with tax-free securities in the United States and do away with the Wall Street graft that has been going on in this country with regard to tax-free securities. Without reflection upon the Committee on the Judiciary, where all these bills have been referred, I ask you at this time to come up here and sign this petition to take the bill away from the committee and put it up for passage.

The amendment would be submitted to the several States of the Union, to do away with tax-free securities or tax-free bonds issued by the United States Government. The petition is on the desk, and I ask every one of you to sign that petition so that we may submit this constitutional amendment to the various States.

LEAVE TO FILE REPORT UNTIL MIDNIGHT

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary may have until midnight tonight to file a report on what is known as the "Johnson bill", dealing with public utilities.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is there to be a minority report filed upon that bill?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman not include in the request that the minority also have that same opportunity?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes. I thank the gentleman for his suggestion. I modify my request, Mr. Speaker, to make it both the minority and the majority.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the majority and the minority may have until midnight tonight to file reports upon the so-called "Johnson bill." Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to bills and a joint resolution of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 2545. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River at or near Astoria, Oreg.;

S. 2571. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to arrange with States or Territories for the education, medical attention, relief of distress, and social welfare of Indians, and for other purposes;

S. 2675. An act creating the Cairo Bridge Commission and authorizing said commission and its successors to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Cairo, Ill.; and

S.J.Res. 15. Joint resolution extending to the whaling industry certain benefits granted under section 11 of the Merchant Marine Act of 1920.

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 828) entitled "An act to authorize boxing in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes", requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. KING, Mr. COPELAND, and Mr. CAPPER to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H.R. 8617) entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes", disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. TYDINGS, Mr. BYRNES, Mr. COOLIDGE, Mr. HALE, and Mr. TOWNSEND to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

IMPROVEMENT AND DEVELOPMENT OF THE PUBLIC RANGE

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 307, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H.R. 6462, a bill to stop injury to the public grazing lands by preventing overgrazing and soil deterioration, to provide for their orderly use, improvement, and development, to stabilize the livestock industry dependent upon the public range, and for other purposes, and all points of order against said bill or any amendment recommended by the Committee on the Public Lands are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Public Lands, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 2, strike out the word "two" and insert the word "three."

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I am presenting House Resolution 307, from the Committee on Rules, for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 6462) to stop injury to the public-grazing land by preventing overgrazing and soil deterioration, to provide for their orderly use, improvement, and development, to stabilize the livestock industry dependent upon the public range, and for other purposes. This is a bill which passed a former House and was known as the Colton bill. It is a conservation measure that many of our Representatives who reside in the West think is very badly needed. The rule is an open rule and provides for 3 hours of debate, and the bill is subject to amendment. Under the rule, the bill will be so considered. It is for the regulation and placing under the Interior Department of about 175,000,000 acres of the public domain, which have not been homesteaded, that are still uncontrolled and largely uninhabited, that are mostly vacant, or that have been used in times past by people grazing cattle and sheep unrestrictedly. Very often the grazing land is grazed rather closely and destroyed, because there are no regulations. The rule waives all points of order because there is provided in the bill a certain charge to be made under regulation by the Secretary of the Interior. The bill provides how the money charged shall be paid—25 percent for the improvement of the land itself, 25 percent for local taxation purposes, and 50 percent to the Federal Treasury. The Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture have reached an agreement that the regulation of this land shall come under the Secretary of the Interior, who now has control of the entry of the land. There has been considerable controversy in the past between different groups of men who use this land for grazing purposes, those who use it for cattle grazing and those who use it for sheep grazing. In order to bring this under control and put it in charge of the proper official of the Government, it has been deemed best the Secretary of the Interior shall take charge of the control of the land. This is a matter that is very urgent, and the Committee on the Public Lands came before the Committee on Rules asking for the rule. Inasmuch as the bill has heretofore passed the House, the Rules Committee thought it best to grant this open rule for the consideration of the bill at this time. The rule provides for 3 hours of debate on the bill.

If no questions are to be asked concerning the rule, I yield to others that may desire to speak.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Goss].

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, if I may indulge the permission of the House for a few minutes, this is the first rule that has been adopted by the Rules Committee, since the sitting of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, which creates another permanent appropriation. That is what I desire to direct my remarks to briefly at this time.

The Appropriations Committee appointed a subcommittee to study all permanent appropriations. I call the attention of the House to the fact that there are about 500 permanent appropriations which open the back door of the Treasury of the United States to amounts that are impossible to estimate. There is a committee sitting at this very minute in the Appropriations Committee, of which I have the honor to be a member, studying this very question. We are not opposing legislation that comes on the floor as such, but we are opposing legislation that comes on the floor which brings with it an appropriation. In other words, we have no quarrel with any authorization that the legislative committees desire to bring in, but this rule waives all points of order, and, of course, our committee would have made a point of order against the paragraph that sets up the grazing fees. I am not here trying to argue the value of those grazing fees at all. I am simply trying to call the attention of the Members to a policy that has been very disconcerting to all Government agencies and especially the Comptroller General. Within the next 2 or 3 weeks this subcommittee expects to bring a bill to the floor to try to correct those practices that have been coming into Congress during the past 150 years, if you please. It is simply another example of the camel getting his nose under the tent; they come here and create their permanent appropriations over which not only Congress has no jurisdiction but many hundreds of which never even get into the Budget.

There is not a single member of the subcommittee, when we started to study this situation, who realized or even dreamed that such things were possible. It has come to light now during our hearings which have covered the last 5 weeks, and which within the last 2 days has gone to the Printer. As I say, we are going to bring out a bill in the very near future to try to correct these bad practices, bad in the eyes of the Government departments; because if we have an authorization for all such items as that in this bill, then the department would be required to come before the Subcommittee on Appropriations each year to justify that appropriation, the same as they do for appropriations under the annual supply bills. In other words, what we are attempting to do is to simply let the permanent appropriations stand, as far as the authorization goes, but to require the department to come before the Subcommittees on Appropriations to justify the particular appropriation in which they are interested.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. I yield.

Mr. CULKIN. Can the gentleman tell me what the permanent appropriations with reference to reclamation and irrigation, which never come into the House, amount to?

Mr. GOSS. Oh, there are many, many. I cannot say just how many on irrigation and reclamation. I will say there are dozens of them.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Goss] has expired.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. CULKIN. Can the gentleman give the House an estimate of the amount that goes into this for reclamation and irrigation?

Mr. GOSS. No. It is impossible for anyone to state that, because these various appropriations are in many classes, some of which are in the Budget, as the gentleman knows, some of which are called to the attention of the House in the reports from the Subcommittees on Appropriations. Again, there are laws that have been down there for a hundred years and more that do not even enter the Budget, but the status of them is that the department head could bring them to light at any time if he so desired.

Mr. CULKIN. And there is no review of the present status of the subject matter appropriated for?

Mr. GOSS. Certainly not, because most of them are of an indefinite nature, which only time can tell what might be involved in the future, if they desire to bring those so-called "dead" appropriations to light again.

Mr. CULKIN. But under the existing law the appropriation is mandatory upon your committee?

Mr. GOSS. Certainly. Not upon our committee, but upon the Treasury of the United States. That is what we are complaining about. The Committee on Appropriations has no jurisdiction in the matter whatsoever at any time, when they once become permanent law, such as is in this bill.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Does the bill which the gentleman's committee expects to bring in require that before any organization can be set up by the Government it must have the approval of the Appropriations Committee, so that they will know what the cost of this will be?

Mr. GOSS. That is the intention, I will say to the gentleman; yes, sir.

Now, I want to say to the Members at this point that the Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations appeared before the Rules Committee on this very bill, as opposed to appropriating money. He had no objection to the authorization. I am sure the proponent of the bill, in all fairness to him, as a member also of the Committee on Appropriations, if he felt that our committee was going to treat everybody alike in this instance, might be willing to accept an amendment to the bill which would make it purely an authorization rather than an appropriation. I see the gentleman from Colorado here, and I want to ask the gentleman if he would not cooperate with the Committee on Appropriations and accept an amendment to procure an authorization instead of an appropriation of an indefinite and permanent character?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The gentleman from Connecticut has stated the situation. The gentleman and I are both members of the Committee on Appropriations. We created a new subcommittee, as the gentleman just stated, to look into the permanent and indefinite appropriations. There are many hundreds of them. The committee is conscientiously doing that. What they are trying to do is to require the appropriations to go through the Treasury and come out in the regular way.

Mr. GOSS. Not only appropriations but special funds and trust funds as well.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. As a matter of fact, we feel that there are some funds that have been created as this one is being created; and that is really not Federal funds at all. Nevertheless, for the purpose of having system and order about it, I would not object to this amendment; but, of course, it makes us come before Congress every year to get back the money that we ourselves paid in.

Mr. GOSS. Does not the gentleman feel that the Congress of the United States, of which body he is a Member of long seniority, a man who holds a high-ranking position on the Appropriations Committee, that Congress itself should really go into all these matters?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Oh, I think so.

Mr. GOSS. Especially in those cases when we are dealing with matters of public interest, such as the public lands. I am sure the gentleman agrees with me on that.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Oh, yes; there are, of course, a number of large funds that are automatically carried without any consideration at all. I do feel that the committee of which the gentleman from Connecticut speaks is rendering a great service to the country; and we should not throw any monkey wrenches into its machinery. I believe these things will work out satisfactorily.

Mr. GOSS. I may say to the gentleman from Colorado that the Chairman of the Appropriations Committee himself has issued instructions to the clerk of the Appropriations Committee and is taking a personal interest in it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. GOSS. We are endeavoring insofar as it is humanly possible to watch every bill that comes before Congress, to see if the bill contains anything in the nature of a permanent, indefinite, or specific appropriation. We are making points of order against such items. As a matter of fact I, as a member of that subcommittee, have the assurance of members of the Rules Committee that in the future at least the present Committee on Rules will not report out a rule unless and until the Chairman of the Appropriations Committee has had an opportunity to come before the Rules Committee.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. I yield.

Mr. DEROUEN. It is also proposed to introduce a bill for the purpose of removing most of the permanent appropriations from all the other departments.

Mr. GOSS. Yes; to remove the permanent appropriations but not the authorizations for them, I may say to the gentleman.

Mr. DEROUEN. Only those that are permanent.

Mr. GOSS. Since the gentleman has brought the subject up and in order to be absolutely fair to the House, I think there may be a few exceptions such as interest on the public debt, the sinking fund, and possibly one or two other things. It would not be good policy for the Government to come before Congress and have Congress change the interest rate on bonds when the obligations are already outstanding; but there will be very, very few exceptions. It is going to be the policy of this committee to go right through the list of all permanent appropriations; and again I ask those in charge of the bill to cooperate with the Appropriations Committee today and accept an amendment making this simply an authorization instead of a permanent appropriation. I am sure such an amendment can be drafted to the satisfaction of all concerned.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. We have an agreement with the Appropriations Committee that we will introduce such an amendment.

Mr. GOSS. I thank the gentleman; and I want to take this opportunity of thanking the gentleman from Colorado for his cooperation, because I stand here fully informed that he could have insisted on his point, because under the rule all points of order are waived; but it is heartening indeed to see this spirit of really trying to work out a program in cooperation. I wish to pay my respects and compliments to the gentleman from Colorado for his broad-mindedness, for he really had the matter in his pocket had he wanted to insist upon his rights.

Mr. GREENWOOD. As I understand, an amendment along the line suggested by the gentleman from Connecticut will be offered to the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PEYSER). The gentleman yields back 1 minute.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, there is no further demand for time on this side of the House. So I surrender the balance of my time.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 6462) to stop injury to the public-grazing lands by preventing overgrazing and soil deterioration, to provide for their orderly use, improvement, and development, to stabilize the livestock industry dependent upon the public range, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H.R. 6462, with Mr. DOXEY in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this is a conservation measure for the purpose of protecting the public domain of the United States.

I think no one will dispute that the regulation of grazing on forest lands has been a very great help to those lands. In fact, it has been a very great help not only to the lands themselves but to the livestock men that use these lands for grazing purposes.

The grazing on the great area of the public domain has not been regulated, as no one has that authority now. Since that authority does not exist in the Government, the result is that these lands are being greatly injured by overgrazing, and no protection is given to water holes. The lands are being injured and a great waste has already occurred, and a very valuable asset is being dissipated. Unless it is done very soon, it will be too late to save these valuable resources.

Bills similar to this one have been before the committee for several years, and this bill is the result of the hearings held in the past. This bill before you takes care of all reasonable objections which were brought to the attention of the committee. I do not recall one witness who did not admit the urgent need of some regulation.

At the last session of the Seventy-second Congress this committee reported the Colton bill—and it was passed in the last days of the session, but, unfortunately, the Congress adjourned before the Senate took any action on the bill.

Let me point to you what the present bill does: H.R. 6462, as indicated by its title, is a general bill, applicable to all public lands of the United States outside of Alaska and not included in national forests, parks, and monuments, or Indian reservations.

Section 1 would authorize the Secretary of the Interior to establish grazing districts or additions thereto subject to prior existing valid claims.

Section 2 would authorize the Secretary of the Interior to make necessary rules and regulations and to do those things necessary to carry out the purposes of the act.

Section 3 would authorize the issuance of permits to graze livestock in such grazing districts to homesteaders, residents, and other owners of livestock upon payment annually of reasonable fees; the permits to be issued to individuals, groups, or associations for not exceeding 10 years, but subject to renewal, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior. It also provides that preference shall be given occupants and settlers on land within or near a district to such range privileges as may be needed to permit proper use of lands occupied by them.

Section 4 permits the placing of such improvements as fences, wells, reservoirs, and so forth, upon permitted areas in connection with their development and use.

Section 5 authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to permit limited free grazing within such districts of livestock kept for domestic purposes and also to permit the use under existing laws, or future laws, of timber, stone, gravel, and so forth, by bona fide settlers, miners, and prospectors.

Section 6 expressly continues in force in such districts the laws of Congress authorizing the granting of rights-of-way for the prospecting, locating, developing, entering, leasing, or patenting of mineral resources.

Section 7 authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to examine and classify lands in grazing districts which are valuable and suitable for agriculture and to open such areas to homestead entry in tracts not exceeding 320 acres.

Section 8, recognizing that these districts will necessarily contain lands in private ownership or owned by States or railroads, makes provision for the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, to make exchange of lands for the mutual benefit of those concerned.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEROUEN. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Does this bill withdraw from homestead entry lands now subject to homestead entry which may be included in a grazing district?

Mr. DEROUEN. No.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. In this connection I should like to have the chairman of the committee explain what the significance of the language is to which I just referred in section 7 of the bill "and to open such lands to homestead entry in tracts not exceeding 320 acres in area."

Mr. DEROUEN. I may explain that the 320 acres was placed in there later. The bill as originally written contained 160 acres under the homestead law, but in the hearings it was discovered that this would not take care of the dry area in arid parts of the country. This was raised from 160 to 320 acres in order to take care of the situation.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. That is not the point I have in mind.

Mr. DEROUEN. I think I understand what the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Why is it necessary for the Secretary to open such land to homestead entry if the provisions of the bill do not in any way affect the rights of homesteaders as to these lands?

Mr. DEROUEN. It does in one instance. This eliminates the 640-acre homestead law that we have for grazing purposes. That is eliminated and goes out of the law. This does not prevent or injure those who are going to homestead on either 160 or 320 acres.

Mr. AYERS of Montana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEROUEN. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. AYERS of Montana. I may say to the gentleman from Washington that the bill takes in all of the land in all of the public-domain States and puts the land into a reserve, the same as the national forest reserve. After these reserves are created in this manner, then on application to the Secretary of the Interior the lands therein may be set aside and homestead entries may be permitted upon them.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Then, as a matter of fact, this does withdraw them from homestead entry under the present state of the law?

Mr. AYERS of Montana. It does.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEROUEN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I think the gentleman from Washington is correct. The bill practically abrogates all existing homestead laws and gives the Secretary of the Interior the right to designate the areas under which homesteads may be taken under this 320-acre provision.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. On application by a prospective entrant?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Yes. That is according to my understanding.

Mr. DEROUEN. Yes.

Mr. AYERS of Montana. Will the gentleman yield for another observation?

Mr. DEROUEN. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. AYERS of Montana. That, however, does not affect any existing application for a homestead or other public-land application or right.

Mr. DEROUEN. That is what I had in mind.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEROUEN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CULKIN. Then, in effect, this statute will result in discontinuing further settlement of the great open spaces in the West?

Mr. DEROUEN. No; it does not.

Mr. CULKIN. This suspends it, at least, as I read the statute.

Mr. DEROUEN. Yes; but it does not have the effect the gentleman suggests.

Mr. CULKIN. How long does this bill, in fact, suspend the matter?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. If the gentleman will yield, I have read the bill rather hurriedly, and it strikes me it would limit the homestead entries to lands suitable for agricultural purposes and would not permit homesteading on lands suitable for grazing and other purposes.

Mr. CULKIN. What is the limit?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. It is unlimited.

Mr. DEROUEN. As soon as the bill is passed the Secretary will have a survey made to determine which lands are suitable for agriculture. This will take a little time.

Mr. CULKIN. It amounts to more bureaucracy.

Mr. DEROUEN. No. I think the gentleman is in error. This bill, I may say, or one similar to it, was approved by Mr. Hoover, his Secretary of the Interior and Secretary of Agriculture, some 4 years ago.

Mr. CULKIN. May I say to the gentleman that I was a great admirer of Mr. Hoover, but I did not subscribe to all his tenets.

Mr. DEROUEN. That is very kind of the gentleman.

Section 9 requires the Secretary of the Interior to provide for suitable regulations for cooperation with local associations of stockmen and with such supervisory boards as may be named by such associations; the views of these boards are to be given consideration in the administration of the area. This section also authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to accept contributions toward the administration, protection, and improvement of the district.

Section 10 provides for allocation of money received.

Section 11 deals with lands which have been ceded to the United States by Indians for disposition under the public-land laws upon condition that the receipts therefrom shall be credited to the Indians.

Section 12 authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to cooperate with any department of the Government in carrying out the purposes of the act and in the coordination of range administration, particularly where the same stock grazes part time in a public-domain grazing district and part time in a national forest or other reservation.

Mr. Chairman, may I call your attention to the fact that this bill fits in exactly with the provisions of the act of March 31, 1933, Public, No. 5, Seventy-third Congress, known as the "Emergency Conservation Act", for the relief of unemployment through performance of useful work. In view of the rapidity with which important problems have developed and the necessity of formulating broad and comprehensive plans carrying forward this important measure without interruption, it would seem the part of wisdom to enact H.R. 6462.

The proposed bill, in addition to its inherent merits, would clothe the Interior Department with the power to regulate the use of the remaining public lands so as to justify the undertaking of important work looking to flood control, the protection of watersheds and water supplies, the checking of erosion, and the regulation of grazing, including the development of water holes and stock driveways.

Mr. Chairman, the enactment of this bill is of tremendous importance, and it would be a step forward in the interest of true conservation.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEROUEN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. In section 10 there is a change in the administration of the bill or in the cost of administration to the Federal Government, whereby it extends to the State 50 percent, whereas formerly it was 25 percent, when approved by the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. DEROUEN. I may say to the gentleman that he is a member of the committee. The question was voted on in the committee room and was put on by the committee. This was the will of the committee.

Mr. RICH. The committee decided they should give 50 percent to the States rather than 25 percent as originally provided in the bill?

Mr. DEROUEN. Yes.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEROUEN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I note those who signed the minority report state that in their opinion the jurisdiction or the administration of this bill better be left with the Forest Service. Does the gentleman have any comment upon this suggestion?

Mr. DEROUEN. I shall answer the gentleman by saying that this was thoroughly considered in the committee.

The Secretary of the Interior appeared and also the Secretary of Agriculture and the Chief of the Forest Service. They told us there was a general understanding and agreement that the bill should go through as it is and, secondly, the Chief of the Forest Service testified it would cost around $2,000,000 or $1,500,000 to administer the bill if its administration were under that Bureau. The Interior Department testified they could do the work for $150,000. So having at heart the interest of the people who are going to pay this money, we decided to look at the matter in a businesslike way and put it where the cost would be the least, which would make the charges to these poor people for grazing that much less.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. And it is the gentleman's opinion that the Department of the Interior will be able to set up the necessary administrative machinery without creating a very large additional bureau of government.

Mr. DEROUEN. It is not necessary to create any bureau. It is simply a question of coordinating the existing set-up, and there is an understanding between the two bureaus to do this.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I thank the gentleman for the information.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEROUEN. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Has the gentleman referred to the President's letter to the Secretaries, in which the President stated he was in favor of the principle of the bill?

Mr. DEROUEN. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Did the committee find out what part of the bill the President might not be in favor of?

Mr. DEROUEN. I think the committee did. Through the members of the Cabinet who appeared before the committee, we have the entire matter as he wishes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Has the committee eliminated that part of the bill recommended by the Secretary of the Interior for elimination, which, I believe, is section 13?

Mr. DEROUEN. That was never in this bill. That was in the old bill.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. That provision is not contained in the new bill in any other section?

Mr. DEROUEN. No.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. And the bill now before the House is approved both by the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. DEROUEN. Yes. This bill is perfectly in harmony with the testimony and the wishes of the Departments involved. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. CARTER].

Mr. CARTER of Wyoming. Mr. Chairman, this bill has been referred to as a reformer's dream. I think the person who made the reference paid it too high a compliment, for after reading the bill, it is my opinion that it is a reformer's nightmare.

The title of this bill reads:

A bill to stop injury to the public grazing lands by preventing overgrazing and soil deterioration, to provide for their orderly use, improvement, and development, to stabilize the livestock industry dependent upon the public range, and for other purposes.

The title should read:

A bill to take away from the livestock industry of the West the free use of 173,000,000 acres of public domain, abolish the 640-acre homestead and desert entry laws, and retard the political and economic growth of the West.

The purposes set forth in this bill are nothing new; for over 20 years bills having the same intent but not so drastic have been before the House and got nowhere.

I know the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] takes no pride in the authorship of this bill. On March 10, 1933, Mr. TAYLOR introduced the identical Colton bill, which passed Congress last session and which was drawn in the Department of the Interior in collaboration with the Department of Agriculture.

The gentleman from Colorado, in his statement before the committee on the hearings of this bill, said that he was strenuously opposed to section 13 of the Colton bill and that this section was forced into the bill on the floor of the House by gentlemen who were trying to kill the bill. I cannot understand if the gentleman was so much opposed to section 13 of the Colton bill why he would introduce a bill with that identical section in it.

On December 23 last Secretary Ickes, by way of interview, had an article in the Saturday Evening Post entitled, "The National Domain and the New Deal", in which he stated that he would be for the Colton bill, which was identical with the Taylor bill, provided certain changes were made. Then, on January 5, less than 2 weeks later, the gentleman from Colorado introduced the bill under consideration, which reads as if an antenna were attached to the mouth of Secretary Ickes. This bill should be called the Ickes bill.

The person who introduced this bill states that this is not a political matter, and then goes on to say as follows:

I might say that, as a member of the Democratic steering committee, I took this matter up with the steering committee, and I do not think that I am violating any confidence when I say that I was advised that if the administration wanted this done, naturally they would be inclined to do it, provided the committee reported the bill out. Therefore it is not a will-o'-the-wisp here before you. If the committee reports it out, I am sure that the steering committee will endeavor to put the bill before the House before we adjourn.

I wonder how far this bill would have gotten had not pressure been brought to bear upon the members of the committee by officials from the Department of the Interior? The Assistant Solicitor had a consultation with the senior Senator from Wyoming and myself relative to this bill. He said he would like to have our views on the matter, provided they conflicted in no way with the views of the Secretary of the Interior. We intimated that we should like to have the junior Senator from Wyoming present at our meeting, but he said it was not necessary, as the junior Senator had already promised the Secretary of the Interior that he would support the bill. When the committee went into executive session to consider this bill, one of the members suggested that the alleged author of the bill be invited to sit in, and then the chairman suggested that the Assistant Solicitor sit in in order to explain the amendments to this bill. This just goes to show to what extent the Department was using pressure to put this bill over.

The gentleman from Colorado went so far as to ask the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture what to show in their reports. Let me quote from his statement:

> I asked them to show two things in their report: First, that the policy proposed will be beneficial to the West, beneficial to the people who live in those States, as well as to the Federal Government, and to show also in addition to that the urgency of it at this time.

And then he says there is no politics in this bill.

I am astonished that the chairman of the committee has not asked the Solicitor of the Department of the Interior and Secretary Ickes to come here and explain the bill to you.

Of course, there was really no need to introduce this bill, for I have here an opinion rendered to the Secretary of the Interior on January 25 by the Solicitor of the Department of the Interior. The opinion states that there is existing legal authority to create grazing districts upon public lands by exercising the Executive withdrawal power under and by virtue of the act of June 25, 1910, and this opinion goes further to state that the President by virtue of his office needs no specific legislation. I asked the Assistant Solicitor why the Department did not ask for Executive withdrawal orders, and he stated they wanted congressional sanction. This bill is loaded with dynamite; and when it goes off, they want someone upon whom they could fasten the blame. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] states the President can do practically everything in this bill by Executive order.

This bill gives the Secretary practically dictatorship over our livestock industry of the West, and can be compared to the dictatorship in Russia. It gives him power that rightfully belongs to the States. As sovereign States, surely we have some rights to the lands within our boundaries, just as other States have had. The Government reserved the public lands in every State in the Union with the exception of the State of Texas, but today practically all public lands have gone into private ownership in all States, except those of the West.

This bill is federalism in the extreme and tends to retard the political and economic growth of the people in the arid-land States by reducing our chief industry to the dead level of uniformity through administrative control by a bureau far removed from the scene of action, and puts our affairs in the hands of men who, at the best, have only an embryonic or superficial knowledge of our practical problems.

In the vast area of country involved in this bill you will find every variety of soil and climate. Physical environment and historical tradition have given rise to a diversity of custom and manner. We are essentially one people on broad nationalistic lines, but every State has a variety of local conditions which makes local government essential to justice.

The people living in the States where this vast territory lies have shown by tradition that they are fully accustomed to trust themselves in the regulation of their own affairs. Local government is one of the most precious heritages of the past. It is the school in which liberty, self-control, and independence are bred. Local creativeness will be stricken with impotence, for Federal power pays no heed to regional opinions. The stimulation of running our own affairs is essential to our natural development.

If this bill passes, it is going to nullify years of careful study of the problems by stockmen and legislatures of the Western States. In the State of Wyoming we have various laws for livestock ranging and for the regulation and use of our State lands. All the other Western States have laws for the same purpose, but they are not identical. The laws vary as the conditions in the States vary.

In the Saturday Evening Post article, the Secretary of Interior states that unreserved and unappropriated lands shrunk from 473,000,000 to 173,000,000 acres since 1904, and then goes on to say that much of the domain was taken up as farm and stock-raising homesteads. In order to paint the full picture, he should have mentioned the reservations and withdrawals by the various departments.

Here are some of the withdrawals in Wyoming that exist today:

Surface withdrawals

	Acres
1. Reclamation Bureau	1,750,835
2. National forests	8,460,755
3. National parks	2,108,800
4. Geological Survey:
a. Power purposes	197,728
b. Reservoir-site reserves	1,714
c. Public waters	83,505
5. Indian reservations	2,243,822
6. General Land Office:
a. Stock driveways	1,207,293
b. Carey Act segregations	468,360
7. Game and bird reserves	49,476
8. Naval oil and shale	9,481
9. Miscellaneous	1,157,397
Total	17,730,186

Subsurface withdrawals

1. Producing oil and gas structures	158,571
2. Coal	2,260,604
3. Oil	541,777
4. Oil shale	2,100,000
5. Phosphate	989,149
Total	6,050,101

In addition to these withdrawals, which are all under the control of the Federal Government, this bill proposes to give exclusive control of about 15,000,000 more acres to the Federal Government. You cannot atrophy part of the Nation without eventually atrophying the whole Nation. Today in the State of Wyoming one third of the State is bearing the burden of taxation of the entire State.

You can readily see the Federal Government has already taken the corn and left us the husk, which has partially paralyzed us; now it wants to paralyze us completely by taking the husk. This is what will happen if you deliberately add power to the Federal Government just because you have the power to do so. This is the alchemy of decay.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER of Wyoming. Yes.

Mr. CULKIN. What is the total acreage of the State? What is the percentage of these withdrawals, if the gentleman can state?

Mr. CARTER of Wyoming. The withdrawals are probably about one quarter of the land in the State.

Mr. CULKIN. And those are withdrawn from settlement or from possible local taxation?

Mr. CARTER of Wyoming. Yes; there is no local taxation on them.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. And, if this bill goes into effect, what will be the total area in the State under withdrawals?

Mr. CARTER of Wyoming. Approximately two thirds of the State.

The Secretary further states in his article in the Saturday Evening Post that he is for the Taylor bill, which passed the House at the last session, except for one serious defect; in this he is in error, for the Taylor bill never passed the House; I think he meant the Colton bill which was identical with the Taylor bill.

The provision which he speaks of is section 13, which is not in this bill that is up for consideration. He states as follows:

> This is a provision that the act shall be ineffective in any State without the approval of the legislature of that State, and further provides that State lands may be lumped with Federal lands in a jointly administered project. I am opposed to this for the same reason that I am opposed to transfer our public domain to State control. The local political pressure for a return to the old evils would be a thing not easily resisted. But with this one section amended, I hope, and expect, that this great piece of legislation will be enacted at the coming session of Congress, and I cannot neglect the opportunity to urge my fellow citizens to support it.

I take exception to that statement relative to local political pressure being used. I was a member of the State Land Board of the State of Wyoming for over 6 years and I have never known of any political pressure or intimation of political pressure being exerted in the disposition of State grazing leases.

I think this is true of the other Western States. The gentleman from Montana [Mr. AYRES] speaking on this subject at the hearings, stated:

> Many if not all of these States have State-owned lands within their own areas and those lands are administered by them. The charge of graft in handling State lands has never been lodged against a single solitary Western State.

I have seen more politics played in the Department of Interior since I have been a Member of Congress than in all of the other departments combined.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER of Wyoming. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Will the gentleman name one instance in which politics has been played in that Department—I mean in favor of a Democrat?

Mr. CARTER of Wyoming. I should be glad to tell the gentleman of an instance. I was interested in a matter, and Senator CAREY and I went down one day to see about a project application under the Public Works that we were very much interested in. A few days afterward we got word from Wyoming that the information had already been received from the Democratic Senator that this project had been awarded, after we were told that it had not as yet been awarded. I wrote to Secretary Ickes and asked him to explain it. He wrote me quite a letter back and showed me when it was passed by each department, and it showed that this information leaked out the day before it was approved.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. But the gentleman got his project, did he not? All the gentleman is complaining about is that they did not give him the information so he could play politics with it.

Mr. CARTER of Wyoming. Now, I could take an hour to tell about different politics being played in the Department of the Interior. I will not say they were all under the Democratic administration, either.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield briefly?

Mr. CARTER of Wyoming. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. CULKIN. Can the gentleman tell about the personal politics involved in the construction of the Fort Peck Reservoir in Montana and the Grand Coulee Dam on the Columbia River, costing approximately $300,000,000?

Mr. CARTER of Wyoming. I should like to answer those questions, but I think that is extraneous to the matter under discussion.

Mr. CULKIN. That involved the same gentleman, Secretary Ickes, did it not?

Mr. CARTER of Wyoming. Yes; but that is not under discussion here, so I do not want to take any more time with that.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield for one other question?

Mr. CARTER of Wyoming. No; I do not yield. My time is limited.

The Committee on Conservation and Administration of the Public Domain, which gave this subject considerable study, says:

> The transfer of the public lands to the State would mean that each State would be charged with the sole obligation of conserving and using the range. The experiences of the public-land States in dealing with the large areas now owned by those States and suitable for range show that in many instances this administration has been effective and salutary. It is true that the public-land States, as their development increases, are becoming increasingly conscious of the value of conservation. The mistakes of the past and the lessons to be learned from that history have not escaped them.

The Secretary of the Interior by this bill declares the policy of settling our western country is at an end, for it practically does away with homesteading. The preference right which every ex-service man has in these lands is gone so far as the 640-acre homestead is concerned. In the past year there were 3,243 final certificates issued on homestead entries, mostly to ex-service men. I am wondering how the ex-service men in your districts feel. I know that all ex-service organizations in my State are opposed to the bill.

At previous hearings on bills similar to the one before us a great deal of testimony was given on the subject of overgrazing and soil deterioration, evidently to justify that provision in the title of the bill. The testimony shows they were all bureaucrats who had to use forced and hypercritical language to sustain their views.

I should like to read extracts on the subject from the report of a survey made by Dr. Aven Nelson, an eminent botanist, on an area of public lands in the State of Wyoming, embracing more than 11,000 square miles, an area much larger than the State of Massachusetts. The surveys are of identical areas, one was made in 1897 and the other in 1926. The extracts are as follows:

> It seems that, in the judgment of Mr. Will C. Barnes, of the United States Forest Service, chief of grazing, the Red Desert has suffered marked deterioration because of overgrazing during the last quarter century. The officers of the Wyoming Wool Growers' Association believe that the forage of the Red Desert of today is as abundant and varied as at any time in its history, and for this reason they have sought a reexamination in the light of its former carrying capacity. * * * Mr. Barnes bases his judgment upon the results secured in the national forests and upon his belief that these are not suffering deterioration from overgrazing, as are the public lands outside the forests. * * * The writer believes, however, that at least for the area under consideration public control will have to be advocated on other grounds than that of deterioration due to overgrazing. If there be deterioration in the forage value of these public lands, it certainly is no more marked than the deterioration found in the national forests where grazing is under supervision. * * * In view of this, it would seem that arguments for public control of lands suited only for grazing are not to be drawn from arguments for public control on our national forests. * * * It is very evident, however, that the forces now at work are tending toward improvements. According to the most reliable sheepmen, the same area that 20 years ago would only support 1 sheep will now better support from 3 to 5. This they attribute to the gain in the strength of the soil due to the accumulating manure. It seems probable, however, that a more potent factor is found in the following: The vegetation chiefly depended upon for forage is composed of the large number of small shrubs of many kinds previously mentioned. The cutting down of such vegetation enormously increases the number of annual shoots. From winter to winter this shrubby vegetation has been browsed down closer and closer to the woody bases of the plants until now the tender annual shoots are produced in much greater abundance. The effectiveness of this browsing is, of course, dependent upon the region being used as a winter pasture only, giving time for growth and recovery each summer.

A great deal has been said about erosion and the part overgrazing plays in it. Overgrazing does not cause erosion, but it might accelerate it; rain and floods cause erosion. Ninety-nine percent of the erosion on the public domain would have existed if there were no grazing of any kind. Self-interest would guarantee the wise use of this land.

The unappropriated public lands in Wyoming are located in the comparatively level semiarid regions, where the precipitation is fairly uniform throughout the year. The heaviest precipitation, about 1½ inches per month, comes in the form of wet snows during March, April, and May. The runoff and erosion taking place on these lands is very negligible.

Gravel, sand, silt, and clay are nature's tools for bringing things to a level. The high, steep, and rugged areas are carried down and deposited in the low, sunken areas, with an improvement to both areas, from the standpoint of plant production. Students of desert types of plants have long known that these plants are provided with a degree of waterproofing and other means of protection against desiccation, which the plants of humid or wet regions never possess.

The plant life of this region can be grazed to the roots in the summer and on an average year of moisture the same growth will be up the next year.

Erosion takes thousands of years to take place and grazing has very little, if any effect, on the soil deterioration. The same flood and erosion effect is noted in the humid areas, but is less apparent to the eye, due to the vegetation.

They want to prevent erosion to save the land for posterity. I want to say to you that if Secretary Wallace and Secretary Ickes were more interested in the erosions that are being made on the Constitution they would do more for posterity.

The fees you get from grazing permits in the grazing districts cannot even start to pay for any of these alleged benefits. The livestock men have been losing money for the past 4 or 5 years and the present prospects are not very encouraging. The price of cattle is about the lowest in a quarter of a century. I cannot see how they can assume this burden.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. CARTER] has expired.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. CARTER of Wyoming. I might state that these Western States are not the only States affected by this homestead law. I have a list here of some of the homesteads that were obtained in other States in the year 1933. So it not only affects the 11 Western States mentioned in the report, but others as well. Last year in Alabama they had 11 homestead patents, Arkansas had 71, Florida had 16, Louisiana had 7, Michigan had 10, Minnesota 9, Mississippi 9, Nebraska 44, North Dakota 30, Oklahoma 15, South Dakota 81, Washington 23, Wisconsin 2.

Most of those homesteads, I might say, came under the 640 acres of grazing land, which in this bill is repealed.

Some people might say that the service men are not interested in this land. I do not know how they are in other States, but I just want to read a few telegrams from ex-service men in my State:

> Veterans of Wyoming opposed to Taylor bill, particularly to eliminating of preference rights on homesteads.
> J. H. PEBERDY.

Here is another telegram:

> Twentieth United Veterans Council in meeting today unanimously oppose Taylor bill. Following facts substantiate: 1,365,000 acres converted from Federal- to privately-owned land by veterans in Wyoming since 1918; more than 5 percent of privately-owned land in Wyoming converted by veterans; 1,700,000 acres remain unappropriated and unreserved. Further liberal settlement provisions of law would act as incentive to settlement by veterans. Veterans comprise 19.4 percent of male population of Wyoming over 21 years of age according to last census. State has profited by increase in population and valuation by veterans.
> E. C. Calhoun, Department Adjutant Disabled American Veterans; J. E. Frisby, Department Commander Spanish War Veterans; Clifford A. Miller, Chairman Department Legislative Committee American Legion; J. H. Peberdy, Department Commander Veterans Foreign Wars; F. E. Miracle, Commander Veterans Foreign Wars, Casper; K. F. McHenry, Commander American Legion, Casper; Robert F. Jones, Commander United States Wounded Veterans, Casper; C. L. Basker, Commander Disabled American Veterans, Casper; M. E. Sanders, Commander Benjamin Carter Colored Post, American Legion; M. T. Rice, Secretary United Veterans Council, Casper.

The Department of Interior stated that they are eminently qualified to carry on this work on account of the experience they have had with Indian grazing leases and also their experience on the Mizpah-Pumpkin Creek Grazing District, which contains only 25,000 acres of Government land. Let us see how well they are administering the Indian lands. A few years ago an economic survey of the range resources and grazing activities on Indian reservations was made by a number of officials in the Indian Department, and I quote from that report:

> Before proceeding to an explanation of the general plan of management which we believe applicable to the grazing resources on Indian reservations, a brief discussion of existing policy and procedure is essential. Probably the most outstanding feature in this connection is the lack of a well-defined policy and the absence of a regulated, standard practice.

And we also find in the same report the following:

> The large volume of business which is carried on, the absence of simplified practice in this connection and the limited personnel available for clerical and supervisory purposes, have operated to reduce the entire procedure to one which virtually runs itself. * * * The use of land with respect to capacity and the general conservation of resources is not properly restricted; there is no count made of the number of animals placed on the ranges, and, generally speaking, it may be said that there is an entire absence of system.

After an indictment of this nature the Department of the Interior bases their claim of qualification.

Now, with regard to the Mizpah-Pumpkin Butte grazing district, I should like to give the views of the late Senator Walsh of Montana:

> My friend, Mr. Leavitt, whose zeal in this matter and whose earnestness in his convictions everybody commends, came from the Forest Service to our State. He came there as a forestry official. He has imbibed that idea, and he is very earnest and sincere about it. He promoted this Mizpah-Pumpkin Creek measure, and I urged some opposition for some time, but finally I quite consented to allow this thing to be tried. It has worked out well, as he says. Why should it not work out well? A certain number of individuals are grazing cattle in that particular locality. They organize themselves into an association. They got a lease for 10 years of the area within that district. Everybody else is shut out. That is quite satisfactory to them, of course. You go on and do that. There are applications for the creation of their districts of that kind in Montana by, of course, the people who now occupy the territory and will organize themselves into groups, cooperative associations, get a lease on the ground, and everybody else will be shut out.

Now, we have found out why the Interior Department should handle these lands according to their own testimony; let us see why the Agricultural Department thinks Secretary Ickes should have charge. Secretary Wallace said:

> The Secretary of the Interior has some strong ideas on conservation matters. He is an old friend of Gifford Pinchot.

Mr. Sherman, the Associate Forester, Department of Agriculture, with over 30 years' experience in that Department, said that he has heard Gifford Pinchot express himself in many western speeches, declaring over and over again:

> I would rather help 10 men make a living than to help 1 man to make a profit.

Now, is it the idea of Secretary Ickes to prevent the cattlemen from making any profit? Does he intend to reduce the stockmen of the West to the position of serfs or vassals? That would be transferring them into the proletariat.

I am glad to know that a number of the Senators do not have the same views on the handling of the range as does Secretary Ickes and Secretary Wallace, for these Senators have already served notice that they do not want Secretary Ickes to handle this public domain.

The cry last year by Secretary Wallace, Secretary Ickes, and the person who introduced this bill was that it should be passed to take care of the 250,000 young men in the Conservation Corps. They said they would have no place to go unless this bill was enacted and they could go from the mountains down to the lower lands. That time has now passed and they had no trouble to find places to put these boys and young men. The gentleman from Colorado said the failure to pass this bill last June has worked a great loss to hundreds of unemployed young men in those 11 States. I do not think that there was one young man deprived of employment in the Civilian Conservation camps because we failed to pass this bill last year.

The gentleman from Colorado stated that the homestead law was beneficial until June 30, 1933. I should like to know what happened on that particular date to make the homestead law less beneficial than it was before that date. He was a great supporter of the Colton bill that passed in 1932, which did away with the 640 grazing homestead law. If it was beneficial until June 30, 1933, why did he vote to do away with it a year previous to that date?

The proponents of this bill state that this land is overgrazed, but in the same breath they state that there will be no reduction in the amount of stock. They are not going to reduce them but are going to redistribute them. Their contention, then, must be that some land is overgrazed and other land is not. There is a question in my mind as to what they are going to do with the range that is not put in grazing districts. Mr. Havell, of the General Land Office, says that he does not think anyone concedes that the administrative officers would put all the land in grazing districts and the assistant solicitor states that they only contemplate putting 50,000,000 acres in grazing districts the first year. Do they intend to keep the stockmen off of the lands which are not in grazing districts? I should like the chairman of the committee to answer that question.

Mr. Stabler, of the Geological Survey, paints a nice picture for the purpose of deceiving the true intent of the use of this range. He stated that in 1891 there were 700,000,000 acres of public range with only 400,000,000 head of stock, about 170 acres for each head of stock. In 1900 he said there were 550,000,000 acres of public range with 14,600,000 head of stock, or 33 acres per head. In 1930 he said there were about 170,000,000 of public range and 15,000,000 head of stock, or about 11 acres to each animal. He stops there, he does not tell you that the 500,000,000 acres of public range which has been disposed of since 1891 is producing many times more feed for stock now than it was in 1891. He does not tell you of the millions of acres of this land which is now under cultivation producing feed for livestock. A section of grazing land will take care of approximately 50 sheep, according to the grade of the land, where a section of cultivated dry farming land will take care of over a thousand sheep, where a section of irrigated land will take care of about 6,000 sheep. These are figures that were given to me by the Department of Agriculture. Today we have more feed for our 15,000,000 head of stock than we had in 1891 and are turning out much better stock.

During the hearings on this bill Representative SCRUGHAM, of Nevada, brought out a very important point, and that is the question of water. He stated it was not the grass on the range that controls its use, it is the water. In the Western States we do not have the old common-law doctrine of riparian rights, but we have what is called the doctrine of priority of appropriation. No matter where the water may be situated, he who has appropriated it has the continued usufruct so long as the beneficial use is continued. Under the acts of admissions and the constitutions of most of the Western States, the control of the water is in the jurisdiction of the State. If this bill is passed you will have the State in the control of the water and several bureaus administering the control of the grazing lands. Representative SCRUGHAM is a former State engineer of his State and is fully conversant with this subject, and I hope that he will discuss the matter in detail.

The proponents of this bill state they are going to build brush dams or possibly some more permanent types of structures to prevent erosion, and in the areas where there is no forage they are going to plant grass, and if necessary they will put up fences to protect the grazing districts. The Secretary of the Interior wants to put about 35 C.C.C. camps on this land.

The total cost, the Department of the Interior states, will be about $150,000. He is going to do all this at a cost of about 1 cent per year for 12 acres. I do not think there is a Member here who believes the Secretary of the Interior can perform such a miracle.

The cost alone of 35 C.C.C. camps for 6 months would be in the neighborhood of $4,000,000. The appropriation for the Forest Service for the year 1933, for about the same acreage as in this bill, was $13,183,304.

When the Colton bill was up for consideration the late Major Stuart spoke as follows:

> To a vast extent the lands present a problem of recreation of actual or potential wealth-creating power which will require long, patient, and expensive regeneration, which only after many years the large outlays will lead to a restoration of their capacity for broad social service. They are an economic problem and responsibility rather than an economic opportunity.

Mr. Silcox, the present Chief of the Forest Service, states as follows:

> I will state specifically that the Forestry Service as now organized is not prepared to handle these additional 172,000,000 acres without an expansion of its organization. I do not want to fool Congress by saying that the administration of those lands will not require additional personnel.

The Forest Service, with a trained personnel many times larger than the personnel which the Interior Department has for this work, tell you that it will take a much larger personnel than they now have, while the Interior Department that is so anxious for this measure to pass state that they can get along with their present personnel. It is my opinion that if this bill passes it will require hundreds of more men in the Interior Department and will cost the taxpayers around $15,000,000 a year.

The only persons who would benefit from this legislation is a bunch of bureaucrats here in Washington who have taken upon themselves the task of seeing how much more power they can get.

This bill violates one of the traditional doctrines of the Democratic Party—that of State rights, and I should like to quote the views of a number of prominent Democrats on this subject. I know a great many of you Democrats have cut loose from the traditions of your party, but there may be a few of you left who still believe in the traditional American ideals of your party.

> What has destroyed the liberty and the rights of men in every government which has ever existed under the sun? > The remedy for ill-considered legislation by the States, the remedy alike for neglect and mistakes on their part, lies, not outside the States, but within them. The mistakes which they themselves correct will sink deeper into the consciousness of their people than the mistakes which Congress may rush in to correct for them, thrusting upon them what they have not learned to desire. They will either learn their mistakes by such intimate and domestic processes as will penetrate very deep and abide with them in convincing force, or else they will prove that what might have been a mistake for other States or regions of the country was no mistake for them, and the country will have been saved its wholesome variety. In no case will their failure to correct their own measures prove that the Federal Government might have forced wisdom upon them.—Quoted from Woodrow Wilson, The States and the Federal Government, 1908.

> Believing that the most efficient results under our system of government are to be attained by the full exercise by the States of their reserved sovereign powers, we denounce as usurpation the efforts of our opponents to deprive the States of any of the rights reserved to them, and to enlarge and magnify by indirection the powers of the Federal Government.—The Democratic platform, 1912.

> Had it not been for the steady encroachment of Federal Government on the rights and duties reserved for the States we perhaps would not have the present spectacle of the people rushing to Washington to set right whatever goes wrong. But successive administrations have encouraged this spirit of dependence on Government, either because of the lust for additional power on the part of Federal officials, or simply because of a blind insistence on the Hamiltonian principle of a strong centralized Government, as opposed to the Jeffersonian idea of giving to the administration at Washington only such functions as the States themselves cannot perform.—Mr. Garner's acceptance letter, August 23, 1932.
> We advocate an immediate and drastic reduction of governmental expenditures by abolishing useless commissions and offices, consolidating departments and bureaus, and eliminating extravagance, to accomplish a saving of not less than 25 percent in the cost of Federal Government, and we call upon the Democratic Party in the States to make a zealous effort to achieve a proportionate result.—From the Democratic 1932 platform.

If this bill becomes a law I prophesy now that it will be a Cadmean victory for Mr. Ickes.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. SWANK].

Mr. SWANK. Mr. Chairman, the State of Oklahoma that I represent here in part does not have very much public land left, and I am not interested in this bill because of the fact that Oklahoma has public land or does not have public land. I am interested in it as a broad national policy in connection with the protection of the grazing districts of the West. This 173,000,000 acres is about all in 11 of the Western States of the United States.

The cattle and sheep men now graze the territory unrestrained. They do not have to have a permit or license. The big cattlemen, as they have been doing in the past, and especially the sheepmen, have been taking it all, and the man with a half dozen milk cows does not have any rights at all. They run him out. The object of this bill, as I see it, and the part that appeals to me most—and we had that part perfected in committee—is the fact that the man with a few cows has just as much right as the man with the big herd, and especially these big sheepmen from the State of Wyoming. These sheep destroy the land more than the cattle destroy the land. The sheep eat the grass and pull it up by the roots, and when it rains the soil is washed away. For this reason we have inserted provisions in the bill covering flood control and soil erosion.

The gentleman who preceded me said that the Secretary of the Interior wrote these amendments and stated that politics had too much to do with the matter. President Hoover is the gentleman who appointed a committee to investigate this question. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT] offered an amendment in the committee which was adopted. The amendment is on page 2 and adds the following words: "Or revested Oregon-California railroad-grant lands." The gentleman from California [Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT] offered an amendment which was adopted in committee, and may I say that a majority of the committee are Democrats, so far as politics are concerned. We adopted the gentleman's amendment on the mining part of it, and there were no politics involved in the consideration of the amendment. The Secretary of the Interior appeared before the committee and recommended the bill. I understand that he is a Republican. The Secretary of Agriculture is another Republican, so it is said, and he also appeared before the committee. Both of these gentlemen are said to be prominent Republicans, and both of them recommended this bill. If there had been any politics involved, the committee probably would not have taken the recommendation of these two Republicans.

We reported the bill favorably because it is a good bill. Before a man can graze cattle or sheep he must get a permit from the Secretary of the Interior. The main objection of the two gentlemen who filed the minority report is that this is not administered by the Agricultural Department. The Secretary of Agriculture appeared before the committee and sent in a report in which he says:

> The proposed legislation would be beneficial not only to the two Departments concerned but to the great majority of the States containing unreserved and unappropriated public lands.

The Secretary of Agriculture, according to his report and according to his testimony before the committee, did not want to administer this law. He wanted it left in the hands of the Department of the Interior or whoever may be at the head of that Department. The only politics I have heard so far as this bill is concerned are the politics of the gentleman who has just spoken. He said there was a western conference of governors which was called in protest against this bill. I was glad to hear that part of the statement in which he said there was only one Republican in the crowd.

I am glad the people of the West, where these lands are principally located, have seen the light and are electing governors out there who are members of the Democratic Party. The fact that there was just one Republican at that conference and the rest of them were Democrats has nothing whatever to do with the merits of this bill. [Laughter and applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I come this afternoon to speak with reference to the Taylor bill, H.R. 6462, believing that it has some good features in it and also knowing that it has some features that are not for the best interests of this country of ours.

If we passed in this House all legislation that we favored in our own minds and if we tried to inculcate all such measures into law, I fear no legislation would be passed, because of the fact we have such wide differences of opinion. So we must get the composite idea of the great majority and try to enact legislation that will be for the best interests of the people of this country.

If I were the Representative of one of the States affected by this bill, I do not see how I could agree to its passage, and I believe that a majority of the Members of the House who are representing the people in the 11 States affected would be opposed to the bill as it now stands, especially when we think of taking 173,000,000 acres of land in this country, as has been stated here this afternoon, which in some States means as high as 85 percent of the total area of the State. When we think of this vast area of land being equal to about one eighth of the United States or equal or greater than the New England and Middle Atlantic and adding some of the other States, or when I think of it as comprising an area seven times as large as the State of Pennsylvania, and when we consider that we are proposing to turn this area over to the Secretary of the Interior for administration, making him a czar over this territory contrary to the wishes of the people who live in these States, I say we are doing these 11 States a grave injustice.

When I think of the people who are the Representatives of such States here as the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. CARTER], the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. SCRUGHAM], the gentlewoman from Arizona [Mrs. GREENWAY], and the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT], I have the greatest and highest regard for them because I believe they are intelligent people; and when I think of the Congress of the United States saying to these people in these 11 States that are affected by this bill, "You are not able to administer the affairs in your own State and we from Pennsylvania or we from New York or we from Alabama can come into the House of Representatives and say that we are going to put laws into effect in your States that are going to regulate and hamstring you", I think, as Members of Congress, we are doing what is an injustice to these States. [Applause.]

I feel that the people who come from the States affected should be entrusted with the administration of these lands.

Mr. FULLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I shall not yield to anyone until I have finished my remarks. I shall then be pleased to yield.

I feel that the people of the various States which I am going to name—Montana, Oregon, Idaho, Wyoming, Colorado, New Mexico, Nevada, Arizona, Utah, California, and Washington—are surely just as intelligent as any Members of the House of Representatives, and I cannot see how anyone from these States can stand up here and say, "We want the Secretary of the Interior, who lives 3,000 miles away, to rule over these lands, amounting to 173,000,000 acres, because we believe the Secretary of the Interior can do it better than they can do it in their own States." I believe the legislators of these States are better able and more capable of enacting laws to govern the people of these States than I, coming here from Pennsylvania, could administer them at such long range. I believe the people from those States have the interests of their own States at heart and the interests of their own people at heart and will do a better job of regulating the administration of these lands for the benefit of their people. I believe they can do it better than we can administer these lands here in Washington.

A great many people do have a selfish idea and think that here is 173,000,000 acres of land that is now controlled by the Federal Government, and they believe that, because we control this land, we should not give this authority to those States. If there were any man in the House of Representatives who had at least one fourth of his State under Federal control, I feel sure he would try to have the land taken away from the Federal Government and placed under his own State legislature, so that the people of that State could make their own laws and regulations which would be for the best interests of the States and the best interests of the people in those States. Naturally, they will have a greater interest than we could possibly have.

I also feel that a selfish interest might exist because of the fact that we, as Representatives, might feel there might be some virtue in these lands or that there might be some value in them and by turning them over to these States we would thereby be giving something away that might be of value to our own States. I want to say that, so far as I am concerned, coming from the State of Pennsylvania, the first loss is the best loss. I would like to see every acre of this land turned over to these States so they could handle them for their own protection and for their own good. I am sure Pennsylvania would lose nothing. I feel that by doing this I am doing the greatest service for the people of Pennsylvania, because I believe it will cost the people of Pennsylvania in the future more to administer them in this way, and that it would not be for the good of the States in which these lands are situated.

I do not believe the House of Representatives has any monopoly on honesty. I do not believe the membership of this House has any monopoly on brains, and I do not think we have as good an insight into the administration of these public lands as the people who live in these States. Sometimes when I think of the things we are doing here in Washington, with many of which I do not agree, I wonder where we are trying to steer this old Ship of State. It may be possible that we can do some things that will be for the best interests of these people, but in the main, I believe the best interests of these people will be served by giving this authority to the States where the land is situated.

I made the suggestion in committee that this be done, and the author of the bill said that we could not get four votes in the House of Representatives to do this. That might be, but I want to say that I am one of the four who would be glad to do it. I think the author of this bill overestimated that a great deal, because I think there are a great many people represented by Members of the House who would be glad to give the 11 States that authority.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I prefer not to yield now, but I will after I get through. My principal objection to this bill as written is this. All through the discussion of this bill in committee various Representatives claimed that the bill could best be administered under the Department of Agriculture. Then again others admitted that it could best be administered under the Department of the Interior.

We had the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Interior before our committee, and they made the statement to us that they were not concerned so much as to where the administration of the bill should be lodged as they were in the fundamental principle of grazing, and particularly of making the lands better for grazing purposes.

They cited the letter of the President of the United States. I want to quote from the letter to Secretary Ickes by President Roosevelt, where he says:

> I favor the principle of the bill, and you and the Secretary of Agriculture are authorized to say so to the House Committee on the Public Lands.

Now, I am not trying to say what the President of the United States meant when he wrote that letter, but I do not believe for one minute that the President of the United States wants a dual authority, a dual control of 173,000,000 acres of land for grazing purposes when we have the Department of Forestry in the Department of Agriculture to supervise the grazing lands of the country, lands previously withdrawn. If in this bill we put the grazing of 173,000,000 acres under the Department of the Interior, we shall have two Departments that will have control of the grazing interests on the public domain. This is ridiculous.

I want to say that it was a most foolhardy proposition to subdivide the grazing interests of the country and put them under dual control. It is not good business. Every member of the Committee on the Public Lands knows that practically every time we had a bill before us upon which we wanted to get information the chairman of the committee had to write a letter to the Secretary of the Interior and ask him for his opinion, and then write a letter to the Secretary of Agriculture and ask him for his opinion on the same subject. Practically every bill that has come before our Committee on the Public Lands since I have been a member of it has met that obstacle. It is not only a requirement but it is a foolish requirement. Why should we inculcate into law a bill that is going to continue that dual control of two departments, causing extra expense and confusion?

I have discussed the matter in committee, and I believe every member of the committee believes that the grazing interests of this country should be under one authority. Oh, but they say that if we put the bill through, Secretary Ickes and Secretary Wallace and the President will try to make a ruling whereby it will put control of grazing in the hands of one department. I want to say to the Congress of the United States that during this session of Congress I think we have been one of the greatest buck passers, trying to pass authority that belongs to us over to the President of the United States.

The President is required to handle all these things that we are supposed to control, but you gentlemen know that we are afraid to assume our responsibility and that it cannot be done by the President.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes more to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. We are seeking to pass this authority to the President of the United States, and we know that it is impossible for him to supervise it; that he must turn it over to the Secretary of Agriculture or to the Secretary of the Interior. Are they superior beings to Members of Congress? There are statements in the hearings that there is no friction in the departments, that they can get together in administration. I can show you statements in the hearings that we have had in our committee from which I know they will never get together. We will not put this regulation under a single control, but we are going to have a complicated piece of legislation that will never be settled to the satisfaction of the people who are in the States vitally affected. It is high time we stop trying to give authority to the President, when you and I know that he cannot assume it; when you and I know that we are giving him things to do that are impossible for one human mind to grasp; when we know that it is impossible for him to turn the things over in his own mind, things that affect these great interests; and when we do it, we simply turn it over to men who are only spokesmen for the administration, and we as Representatives of the people turn over our authority to the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of Agriculture. If we had backbone, where we now have wishbone, we would be able to accomplish a great deal, and we would be able to help the administration and the people who live in these States. Before we permit this bill to become law I think we should endeavor to stop the great amount of overhead expense that will necessarily be caused, because we do not assume the right to put the grazing on these lands under single control of one department. I suggest that we place an amendment, section no. 13, to this bill and put the authority under the Secretary of the Interior, so that we would have all grazing interests under one authority. I do hope the members of the committee will give consideration to that suggestion.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from California yield another minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania in order that I might ask him a question?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield one half minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The gentleman suggests this solution, that we turn these lands back to the States. Will the gentleman kindly tell us when we ever took the land away from the States, if the States ever had possession of the lands.

Mr. RICH. We may not be able to turn them back to the States, but if one fourth of the State of Missouri were under the supervision of the Department of the Interior, the gentleman from Missouri, I know, would want to put the control of that fourth back into the hands of the people of Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. How are you going to turn back lands when the States have never had the lands?

Mr. RICH. Then, in all common sense, give the lands to them, because if they have never had them they should have them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has again expired.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. STUBBS].

Mr. STUBBS. Mr. Chairman, heretofore I have taken but little part in the discussions on the floor of the House and I would not be addressing my remarks to you at this time if it were not for the vital interest I have in this bill and the great importance of it. I am from one of those Western States vitally affected by the provisions of this measure.

I want to pay my respects at this time to the distinguished gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. CARTER]. I believe he is a past master in the art of muddying the waters, and I hope my colleagues on the Democratic side of the aisle will endeavor to clarify those waters during the discussion of this bill. I remember he stated that it will create a vast new organization in the Department of the Interior for the administering of the grazing districts in our great public domain. The Secretary of the Interior stated expressly that the cost of administering this proposed measure would not, in his judgment, exceed $150,000 annually.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STUBBS. Yes.

Mr. MOTT. Does the gentleman know what fraction of the entire expected revenue from the grazing land would equal $150,000?

Mr. STUBBS. I have no definite figures relating to that question, and I will go into the matter a little later. The reason for this low approximation, according to the Secretary of the Interior, is due to the fact that the Department just now maintains a complete and well grounded, efficient organization for the transaction of all sorts of business relating to the public lands or the lands of the United States. No new bureau is needed or contemplated. Expansion of existing agencies is all that is necessary, and no other Department, in my judgment, can undertake the task at a similar cost. It should be borne in mind, however, that the lands that compose the public domain are owned by the United States, owned by the people of the United States. Another contention that has been brought forth here is that in the creation of these grazing districts in the public domain, without the consent of the States in which the lands are located, we are doing an injustice to those States.

The statement implies that the citizens of the various public-land States should determine how the Federal Government should use or dispose of all the lands which it owns within their borders. I want to say to you that the Congress of the United States, as far as I know, has never recognized such a ridiculous right of referendum. This land is owned by the Federal Government—by the United States of America.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STUBBS. I refuse to yield. I only have a few minutes.

So, in the enactment of laws pertaining to the public lands and their use and disposition, Congress has been guided and Congress should be guided by national interests. I cannot see why my California friends should not want the Congress of the United States to look after the public lands of this country. It is our responsibility. It is our duty. It seems to me we should get a national viewpoint of this great question.

It has been reported heretofore that the creation of grazing districts would abrogate homestead laws and take from thousands of veterans the only chance they will ever have to acquire homes of their own. This is untrue. The bill specifically authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to open to homestead entry such lands "which are more valuable for the production of agricultural crops" than for grazing, in tracts not exceeding 320 acres in area. In defense of the proposition that this legislation suspends 640-acre stock-raising homestead entries, it should be said that every commission which has studied the question within the last few years has doubted the wisdom of continuing the operation of our homestead laws. That policy has fully served the purpose for which it was framed; that is, putting practically all land in private ownership which is productive enough to be used for home-making purposes. The remaining public domain is recognized to be generally unsuited for permanent settlement. The following is quoted from the Garfield committee on the Conservation and Administration of the Public Domain:

> The number of 640-acre stock-raising homestead entries patented rose rapidly from 21 in 1919 to 8,399 in 1922, and then gradually declined until 1930, when 2,530 went to patent. However, some indication of the high percentage of failure and disappointment to the settler who has undertaken this form of homestead may be derived from the disclosure that during the 12 years since the Stock-Raising Homestead Act went into effect, less than half of the 133,350 entries have gone to patent.
> There are extensive areas in every public-land State which have been entered under this act and then abandoned to the Russian thistle and other weeds, some poisonous and destructive to ranges formerly valuable to the stock raiser. Ruined fences and abandoned homes dot the landscape for many miles, pitiful evidence of human hopes buried beneath the economic insufficiency of 640 acres in a semiarid section as a stock-raising unit to support a family. It is not fair to our ex-service men and other home seekers to continue in effect an act which has resulted in so many broken homes and so much misery to settlers.

The report by the Garfield committee continues:

> At least it can be stated that little of the land not now entered holds out any hope of economic sufficiency for the permanent establishment of a family on 640 acres unless there is considerable adjoining grazing on the public domain. The uncertainty of the future as to that feature renders a venture on the strength of it perilous indeed. The Federal Government should cease to be a party to the inducement.

Officials of the Department of the Interior estimate, conservatively, that it costs the average homesteader approximately $810 for fees, improvements, and so forth, over the period of 3 years required to homestead land. The Department reports that lands in the public domain, because of erosion, lack of care, and other factors, are so depleted in natural grass and water resources that they have become in many instances arid wastes, and are valued around 25 to 50 cents an acre. In other words, a settler could buy a homestead plot for much less money than it costs to homestead it, and in addition save himself a great deal of effort.

Allow me, also, to shatter another contention of the opponents of this vital measure. It has been reported that the jurisdiction of the proposed bill should be placed under the Forest Service because it has a complete and efficient organization for administering grazing. I desire to quote my distinguished compatriot and colleague, Representative AYERS of Montana, who stated in substance in committee that there is just as much difference between the present public domain and the forest-reserve lands as there is between the Everglades in Florida and the plains of Nebraska. The forests, with which that agency is familiar, are the best and most universally watered lands for livestock in the entire West. The forest-reserve lands are mountainous and can only be used for summer grazing. The utilization of the semiarid regions involved in the Taylor bill is greatly handicapped on account of the lack of water. It is used only for winter grazing. The forage growth is much lighter than that of the forest areas and is of an entirely different species. The problem of soil erosion in the desert regions is vastly different from the problem in the mountainous forest areas.

Unless all other public land laws are repealed, including the laws governing conservation and development of mineral resources, the Department of the Interior is the logical agency for the administration proposed under the Taylor bill, because of the urgent need for coordinating under a single jurisdiction activities concerning the continued administration of these other applicable public land laws. Furthermore, the Western States, the railroads, and private individuals own unexhausted land-grant rights which must be taken into account. Their satisfaction requires continuation of the equivalent of existing administration activities of the Department of the Interior.

If administration of the Taylor bill is placed outside the Department of the Interior, serious consideration should be given to transferring all other land activities of the Department of the Interior to the agency so selected. Serious consideration might even better be given to concentrating, in the Department of the Interior, the few land management activities of the Federal Government, not now there administered.

It is vital that we bear in mind that as a grazing area the forage crop of the public domain constitutes one of our chief natural resources. The duty and responsibility of the Federal Government to conserve it for future generations and prevent its continued destruction cannot be denied reasonably.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, I have heard very much from my citizens of Oregon on this bill. So I have made a very careful study of it. I give it my unqualified endorsement.

I am not surprised that my Republican predecessors should have opposed this bill. You will always find our Republican friends opposing any bill which has for its purpose the breaking up of special privileges and special interests. [Applause.] The unregulated control of the public domain has been abused by the large cattle and sheep growers, and it is to bring them under restraint and to give the little fellow a show that this bill is proposed. Now, I do not expect my distinguished colleague from Oregon, who has just spoken, to see the light, because he is an old standpatter; but, fortunately, in our State we have some progressive Republicans who are seeing the light. I have before me a letter from Herman Oliver, the president of the Cattle and Horse Raisers' Association, the largest stock association of our State. He has seen the light. I shall read his letter. He is a Republican—at least he has been one, but I doubt whether he is one any longer:

DEAR GENERAL MARTIN: A large number of letters have reached us from cattle operators in Harney, Lake, and Malheur Counties—

Those are the big counties of eastern Oregon primarily involved in this bill—asking that some regulation of the public domain be put into effect by the Federal Government.

That some regulation be put into effect to prevent the big fellows from having their own way.

I understand that Representative TAYLOR of Colorado has introduced a bill providing for grazing districts similar to the one in Jordan Valley. I wish that you would study this bill, and, if you feel that it is desirable, that you would support it.

I know that you appreciate the fact that some form of regulation of the desert must be placed into effect if we are to have any feed left in that area, and I know that we can count on your active support in the passage of laws that would protect that valuable resource.

And that is exactly what I am doing. I am for the Olivers and not for the big cattle and sheep kings.

Now, our State can appeal to you with particular emphasis in this matter, as 52 percent of the land in our State is owned by the National Government. Our State does not want possession of that 52 percent of the land. To those who doubt me I say: "Wait until you see it; much of it is not worth a damn, even for grazing." [Applause.] We want to turn this Government land over to these cattle and sheep fellows to use, especially if it can be turned over for them to be used under regulation by the Federal Government.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. I will yield after my time has expired. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOTT. After the gentleman's time has expired will do me no good.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. I decline to yield; the gentleman had twice as much time as I had. I am proud of the new deal. I am proud of our President, of our Secretary of Agriculture, and of our Secretary of the Interior, that they come before us asking for the passage of this bill. For years efforts have been made to have this bill passed, but special interests have beaten it. But now we have a progressive administration and a progressive Congress. We want to bring about these great reforms. We are here to shove them through the line of standpattism.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Chairman, this bill has for its purpose the orderly control and management of the public domain, the title of which still remains in the Government and consists of approximately 173,000,000 acres. This land is located in 11 of our Western States. Practically all of it is arid, dry, and barren, and for a number of years has been so overgrazed and used by both cattlemen and sheepmen that it has become gradually less productive of grasses and herbage on which cattle and sheep graze, until today a large part of this land is growing but very little vegetation. Through overgrazing this land is gradually becoming less productive, and thousands of acres that formerly were useful for grazing purposes are now wholly barren. It is estimated by experts who have carefully studied this land that if conditions are not changed the land in from 25 to 40 years will be absolutely unproductive.

In my own State, Utah, there is located approximately 24,000,000 acres, which comprise approximately 50 percent of the entire area of the State. This land is largely used for the grazing of cattle and sheep during the winter months, and it is estimated that it takes from 10 to 15 acres of land to graze a sheep during these months and from 60 to 100 acres of land for each head of cattle.

In certain portions of this land are located springs or watering holes. An act of Congress withdrew from entry all these springs or watering holes; therefore these watering holes and springs are largely unprotected, and the first one to reach them with his herds is the first one to get the privilege of grazing the grass which grows in the territory around these various areas. This privilege has been very much abused by foreigners who will, even during the summer months, graze upon some of these lands, which is very harmful and destructive. Some foreigner who has a few sheep and who lives right with them, travels from one place to another, camping first at one watering hole or spring and then at another until the grasses are all destroyed; thus, when the person who is legitimately and honestly entitled to the use of these grasses and this herbage for taking care of his cattle or sheep during the winter months reaches these places he finds that there is no grass, and, in fact, instead of being grass the whole country is merely a desert of dust and sand.

The purpose of this bill is to give to the citizens of the various States within which this land is located the right to form grazing areas. These areas will be controlled to a certain extent by the local organizations under the supervision and control of the Secretary of the Interior. The bill provides that grazing permits shall be issued only to citizens of the United States, or to those who have filed the necessary declarations of intention to become such, and that preference shall be given occupants and settlers on land within or near the grazing district. It also provides that these permits for grazing shall be issued for a period of not more than 10 years; thus, the bill has a twofold purpose: (1) to protect and to rehabilitate the land; (2) to stabilize the stock industry. That is, to make it possible for a farmer or ranchman engaged in either the cattle or sheep business to know just what range privileges he may expect and how many cattle or sheep he will be allowed to graze on this public domain.

The bill also provides that under the regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior free grazing within such districts of livestock may be allowed for domestic purposes, and every protection is given to the small farmer and rancher and cattle or sheep owner that can be provided in such a bill, the whole purpose being to make it possible for the bona fide settler and the bona fide citizen and raiser of cattle or sheep to be protected in his right to graze such cattle or sheep on the public domain as the land will permit under proper regulatory provisions, and at the same time to keep the range in a productive condition, so that it will be beneficial to future generations.

The fees charged for grazing shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, and 50 percent of these fees shall be made available to the Secretary of the Interior for the construction, purchase, or maintenance of range improvements. In other words, 50 percent of the moneys received from these lands will be used by the Secretary of the Interior for the operation, maintenance, and building up of these lands; 50 percent of the fees shall be paid into the State treasury of the State where the lands are located, to be expended as the State legislature may prescribe for the benefit of the county or counties in which the grazing district is situated.

It has been thought by many that in order to solve properly the public-land question the surface of the lands should be ceded back to the States, and a fact-finding commission which was appointed by President Harding recommended that this be done. However, so much difficulty and opposition from the States was immediately encountered that it has seemed impracticable and impossible to have the States take over this land in its present barren, worthless condition unless the Government was willing to give a fee title including all of the mineral rights. This the Government has steadfastly refused to do, and, therefore, it would seem that the only practical solution of the problem at the present time is to place these lands, as provided in this bill, under the control of the Secretary of the Interior and by so doing build up and enhance the value of the lands, and in so doing protect the citizens and residents who are entitled to receive the benefits of these lands.

It is true that in some instances it will be necessary for the Government to expend some money in order to stop erosion and in order to build more roads or trails in certain portions of the lands or to find more watering holes for the purpose of making the lands more efficient. However, this can all be accomplished under the terms of this bill.

From the year 1785 to the present time the aim of all laws passed by Congress with reference to the public domain has been, first, to enact laws under which homesteaders would be enabled to settle upon the land and build permanent homes and communities; and, second, to conserve for the Nation the natural resources which are essential to the national welfare. This bill, of course, does away entirely with one of these purposes, namely, the permitting of homesteading. It withdraws from homestead entry this entire area and makes it impossible for any future homestead entries unless the Secretary of the Interior shall determine that certain portions of this land are more suitable for the production of agricultural crops than for grazing purposes, and in that event he is authorized to classify such lands and then permit such lands to be homesteaded under the regular desert homestead entry whereby each entryman may obtain a tract of land not exceeding 320 acres. Therefore, under this act, except as limited to lands withdrawn by the Secretary of the Interior, the entire homestead laws will be abrogated, so far as this public-domain land is concerned.

For this reason some have expressed opposition to this bill. It would seem to me, however, that no citizen who is anxious to homestead land is going to be seriously injured; first, because all of the choice or valuable land has been homesteaded. In my own State, in 1933, there were 163 persons who made application for the stock-grazing homestead, which consists of 640 acres. In the same year 104 such homesteads were perfected. Twenty-four persons made application for the enlarged homestead; 25 of these homesteads were perfected. Thirty-two persons made application for all other forms of homestead, and 15 patents were issued.

A number of these homesteads were obtained by large owners of sheep or cattle for the purpose of increasing their rights in certain areas, and are not made by bona fide homeseekers or citizens with a purpose of keeping the land for themselves. It is therefore thought by many, and was recommended by the fact-finding commission appointed by President Harding, that the grazing homestead be discontinued because of the unfair advantage obtained by large cattle and sheep owners.

In the second place, many of these people who filed on this land are unfamiliar with climatic conditions and spend years struggling against the elements with the hope of overcoming them and making an honest, respectable home for themselves and family, but after years of struggle and privation they are forced to abandon these desert and forsaken lands, and in thousands of instances, after years of struggle, the land has reverted back to the Government. It would seem only fair that the Government should cease holding out such an illusion and deception to the honest, patriotic citizen who, not knowing the facts or the conditions, believes that when he obtains a certain piece of land from the Government he is going to be able to build a home. By the withdrawal of these lands the Government will no longer be a party to such deception.

For years conservationists of both parties have made honest and conscientious efforts to pass a bill which would control and conserve our public domain. They have realized that gradually year by year this domain is getting less valuable, and that, within a very few years, instead of this valuable land being of service to the citizens of the United States, it will become a desert, wholly unsuited to any useful purpose. We are in a position at the present time, it seems to me, where only two ways are open: (1) Shall we permit this gradual decay of the public domain, let it remain for people to use it as they see fit, giving the foreigner the right if he desires to wholly denude and take advantage of the heritage of the American citizen, taxpayer, and resident of the various States; or (2) shall we look forward into the future, take hold of this problem in a sensible, patriotic, scientific way, and determine that this deterioration of our public domain shall cease and that we shall preserve this land for the benefit of future generations?

It is true that many citizens will feel that their rights are being disturbed and that the Government is encroaching on their liberties if this act is passed; but I feel certain that there will be no such general feeling against the Government by these citizens as there was when the various forest areas were set aside 28 years ago by the Government. I feel certain also that no citizen in these Western States would want to have these vast forest areas turned back either to the State or to the individuals, or to be placed in the position that they were in at that time. It is my firm conviction that the remainder of our public domain will be even more efficiently handled than our national-forest areas have been, and that the passage of this act will be of untold benefit to the residents of the public-land States. [Applause.]

Mr. DEROUEN. I yield to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. AYERS], of the Committee on the Public Lands, such time as he may desire.

Mr. AYERS of Montana. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say at the outset, and so that there will be no misunderstanding, that I am not surrendering any of the ideas that I put forth before the committee with reference to turning all of the public lands over to the various public-land States. I believe that, in justice to all, ultimately these lands should be turned over to the States. The older and non-public-land States of this country have already had all of the lands within the confines of their borders turned over to them. This means that they have had all of the land rights from the high heavens to the center of the earth turned over to them, and they have enjoyed all of the privileges and all of the benefits derived therefrom. The older States did not come into the Union as did the public-land States; they acquired all of their rights, embodying 100 percent by grant, and had the profit and the pleasure of dispensing these rights into individual ownership without any reservation whatsoever from the National Government. Quite the contrary with the public-land States of the West—in them all of the minerals and all of the oils and gas and all of the timber have been reserved to the Government as a whole.

Mr. Chairman and Members of the House, the Chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands has requested me, as I presume, because I come from one of the leading public-land States, to help him pilot this bill through the House this afternoon. I am unprepared for this great task and am speaking offhand, but from my first-hand knowledge of the situation. I am glad to accept his invitation and am speaking for the livestock men and the ranchers and the farmers of the great West—the people among whom I have lived all my life—and I am speaking for those of whom I am one.

The question of the disposition of the remaining public lands of the 11 public-land States is by no means a political issue. It is an issue that should be dealt with and handled for the best interests of those concerned and of the Nation as a whole. Several different administrations in the immediate past have attempted to make disposition of the remaining public lands.

That the public domain must be controlled and administered and conserved is a question entirely one-sided. Everyone from every State admits that some control, administration, and conservation must be made of these lands. Up until now no regulation whatever has been in effect. It has been a matter of the mightier subduing the weaker. We have 173,000,000 acres in the public domain, and no one can dispute that these remaining acres are chiefly valuable for livestock grazing. But without regulation the bigger operators subdue the smaller ones to the extent of absolute domination.

To me, as one personally affected, and to me as a Member of Congress representing thousands of people directly affected, the fact that politics has been injected into the consideration of this bill is absolutely ridiculous. This question should not be considered from a political point of view, and in support of that statement let me cite that several administrations have tried to work out a plan for the equitable disposition of the public domain, which disposition would be beneficial to the people affected and to the Nation as a whole. President Hoover, recognizing the situation, in April 1930 appointed a committee on the conservation and administration of the public domain. This committee consisted of the then Secretary of the Interior, Secretary of Agriculture, James A. Garfield, who was Secretary of the Interior under the Theodore Roosevelt administration, and 19 other eminently qualified men to study the situation. Every public-land State was represented by men of recognized ability on the subject of public lands and their disposition. This commission remained in session for more than 9 months. They studied the situation and the question of the disposition of the remaining public lands, and on January 16, 1931, made their unanimous report to the President of the United States, reporting among other things that—

> All portions of the unreserved and unappropriated public domain should be placed under responsible administration or regulation for the conservation and beneficial use of its resources * * * that the remaining areas, which are valuable chiefly for the production of forage, and which can be effectively conserved and administered by the States containing them, should be granted to the States which will accept them.

Now the only stumbling block has been that the States would not accept these lands unless they were granted without reservation. The Government has proposed to grant the lands to the States, reserving unto the Government the minerals, the oils, and the coal, and this has raised the objection of the States affected to accept these lands with such reservations.

The committee on conservation and administration further reported that " in States not accepting such a grant of the public domain, responsible administration or regulation should be provided." Of course, you know and I know that such administration and regulation in such event must be provided by the Government, and since the States have refused to accept these lands with the Government's proposed reservation this bill is the only other alternative.

I have not heard in this debate today, and I am sure that I will not hear as it goes on, any Member of the House urging that no legislation should be enacted to protect these lands. All agree that some regulatory legislation must be passed. Everyone within the hearing of my voice knows that my stand is for State rights in dealing with this problem, but since that cannot be had at this time I am for the next best thing, and that, I believe, is in the passage of this bill.

My good friend and neighbor, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. CARTER] has said that this bill takes away all of the rights of the livestock man and that it suspends the 640-acre homestead law. Now, sorry as I am to disagree with him, I urge that quite the contrary is the fact; and in discussing this particular phase of the case let me say that I am speaking as a practical livestock man myself. I have been raised in the livestock business and have always pursued it—sometimes advantageously but in later years without much remuneration. I see many livestock men as Representatives in this House this afternoon. They are from the leading livestock States of the West and they are practical in the livestock business. I am sure that they will agree with me that this bill is the best we can do at this setting, and I am sure they will agree with me that this bill does not suspend benefits to the homesteader in the Western States. It is concurrently a benefit to the stockman and the homesteader. It expressly provides that the person owning or having rights to land adjacent to the public domain shall be given preference for a permit upon the lands affected by this bill.

Now, let us see just where this will help the homesteader. Under present conditions the homesteader who cannot make a living upon his individual unit depends upon the adjoining public lands for range for his livestock, but he has no way in the world of protecting himself. The big sheepman from an adjoining county—yes, from an adjoining State—comes along with his herds, and when I say " herds " I say it advisedly, for ofttimes he runs several herds under one camp tender, and in the broad light of open day he moves upon the range adjacent to the homesteader and grazes off the grass upon which the homesteader depends. That homesteader is helpless—it is open, public range. The sheepman with his several herds has a legal right to use it, and does use it. If the homesteader tries to protect himself by fencing the open range, or even by building a drift fence to keep the drifting herds out, he may be hailed into the Federal court and fined more money than he has seen in 2 or 3 years, and in addition to that a stiff-necked Federal judge may give him a jail sentence.

Under the terms of this bill no such legal injustices can come to pass. And then again this bill protects the big stockmen, for under the present program, with the big stockman it is case of " dog eat dog "; first there, first served. Under this bill districts will be organized whereby each person will know the lands which are allotted to him and he will have to content himself by use of his own allotment. In this he is also benefited to the extent that he may fence it and build reservoirs, construct water holes, and erect sheds, stockades, windbreaks, and other improvements necessary for the advancement of his herd, and under the 10-year program provided by the bill he will have the right to continue his permit unless his opposing bidder is willing to take his improvements at an equitable price to be determined by the Government; that prompts a permittee to improve and protect the lands upon which he has secured the right to graze his stock.

I must hurry along; but I could cite many concrete examples where this legislation would help all concerned. The Mizpah-Pumpkin Creek reserve, which has been mentioned in the debate this afternoon, is within my district. I am familiar with it and the situation existing there. It is administered by the Interior Department. The men assigned to that duty are men familiar with this class of land. They were not brought from the Forest Service, but they came from the Department of the General Land Office. They have to deal with a class of land that is just as different from the forest-reserve land as the Everglades of Florida are different from the plains of the Dakotas and Nebraska.

Now, since the Mizpah-Pumpkin Creek district has been brought into this discussion let me tell you that it has been administered by a very small fraction of the cost that it takes to administer the forest reserve. As a matter of fact, since this district was organized, the expense of its administration has been practically nil. This district has been improved to the extent of some 60 artificial reservoirs for livestock purposes, and the Government is only concerned to have a General Land Office man drop around once in a while to see if their rules are being observed. Since their rules are commensurate with the conservation of these lands the people interested in this reserve are equally diligent in seeing that the rules are strictly observed. If my advice is correct, and I believe it is, the 25,000 acres in this reserve cost the Government only a small fraction of one man's time to administer it.

To my mind the greatest thing in the Taylor bill is that it will permit private interests, State interests, and Government interests to pool and consolidate, and by the provisions of the bill exchange lands so that consolidated districts may be created. This was done in the Mizpah-Pumpkin Creek district, and I assure you that it has worked out successfully. Out in my State and in many of the Western States, in order to effect a grazing district, these three interests must be considered—the State-owned lands, individually owned lands, and the Government-owned lands, which must be consolidated in districts if it is to be a success. None of these various interests are willing to expend money in the program. It must be by exchange. For instance, in Montana we have railroad lands, State lands, and Government lands, and these three separate interests must get together for their mutual benefit and for the public good and make exchanges to the end that consolidated districts for grazing purposes be effected. It is impossible to do that under existing laws, but under the provisions of this bill it can be done.

The principal opposition to this bill seems to have developed on the question of what department will administer the public lands. Shall it be the forestry department or shall it be the Interior Department through the General Land Office? Now let me say to you, the forestry department is not equipped to handle this class of land, and their men are not experienced in this class of land. The class of land they have been handling and are experienced in handling is the best-watered lands in the West. It lies in the mountains where the snowfall is heavy and at the source of all of the streams, while the lands affected by this bill are the rough lands, the badlands, and the breaks, far distant from the mountains and the forests. In practically every instance patented lands and privately owned lands lie between the forests and the now existing public domain. The waters finding their source in the forests, are taken out for irrigation purposes on private lands, in between, and are used before the channels of the streams reach the lands affected by this bill. The lands we are considering never get water except in flood time, and it behooves the stockman to build reservoirs and dams to hold the flood-time water for livestock purposes. This bill provides him ample opportunity to be protected in his investment in doing this, and that is what they have done in the Mizpah-Pumpkin Creek district; therefore, the principles of this bill are not an experiment.

In conclusion let me remind you that I am not yielding my ideas for ultimate State ownership of these lands together with all of the subsurface rights, and in furtherance of my ideas to that end I hope that this bill will pass. It is a forerunner for State ownership, but let these lands go into the Forestry Department and it is "taps" for us. Once it ever gets into the Forestry Department it will stay in that, the greatest of all bureaucratic set-ups. I appeal to you, my friends on the floor of the House, and this appeal is made as a stockman myself and for the stockmen of one of the States affected, that you pass this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE].

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, I come from Oregon, a State deeply interested in this bill. Every speech that has been made in opposition to this bill, whether by my colleague from Oregon or other Members, could have been made in opposition 30 years ago to the forest-reserve policy, and still our forest reserves have been carefully and wisely handled, and there is scarcely a man today in my State who is opposed to the Federal forest administration.

There is going to be a small fee charged, but it will not be much. When our cattle and sheep were down in price, we were paying too much for forest-reserve grazing permits. Last year a careful study was made by the administration, and our grazing fees were materially reduced.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. No; I have only 5 minutes. I do not know that I can add to the things that have been said, but I want to call your attention to one example of what can be done in conserving and improving a range. Some years ago I purchased about 4,000 acres of bunch-grass range that had been eaten out, ruined by overgrazing. I fenced it in a block and used it 4 or 5 years that way. Then I cross-fenced it and made it into five different fields. Then I grazed these fields at different times. I increased the grazing capacity of that range 50 percent by that plan. It can be done through the public domain as it has been done in the forest.

It is a crime to allow the public domain today to be grazed off as it is by a few big men. There are a few sheepmen and cattlemen in our country who sweep through the public domain and take all of the grass that the little fellow would like to use. This bill carefully protects the milk cow for domestic use. It carefully provides that the small man shall have his innings. Those using the public domain are to be organized into districts where the permittees can have their own organization; they will make their own rules. I believe the permittees will have more rights than we even had on the forest reserves. The forest reserves have conserved our grass. The man having a permit to graze sheep or cattle will know where he is going and the number he can care for. Somebody objects because the number will probably be cut down. Sure, it should be cut down. Those who have made improvements in the public range and the water holes will be protected. Those who have expended their money in improvements will have preference rights giving such persons prior allotments. The enactment of this law will result in much good to all. It will save the range. I agree with the gentleman from Montana [Mr. AYERS] that all these lands ought to be owned by the State in which the land is located, and all of the Government land will ultimately be so owned, but that time is not yet here. Everyone helps himself to the first grass he comes to. Chaos reigns over this public domain at the present time; everybody grabbing. I can remember portions of Oregon that had beautiful bunch grass a few years ago, now all eaten out. It will take years to restore the range. Every year this law is delayed means greater devastation. Pass this bill now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oregon has expired.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Arizona [Mrs. GREENWAY].

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentlewoman 3 minutes.

Mrs. GREENWAY. Mr. Chairman, the Taylor bill presents an outstanding instance of the difficulty of reaching Congress with the complex facts necessary to insure a vote of intelligence and integrity. This bill, which is happily free of party and political expediency (you will see I was optimistic this morning), was introduced for the purposes so obviously practical, and described in its heading:

To stop injury to the public grazing lands by preventing overgrazing and soil deterioration, to provide for their orderly use, improvement, and development, to stabilize the livestock industry dependent upon the public range, and for other purposes.

In spite of this fact, this bill has had, in committee, a stormy and controversial session, and with good reason. In its attempt to rehabilitate the eroded sections of the earth's surface for the protection of an industry—which is obviously worthy of experiment—it involves the very life's blood of the so-called "frontier States" public lands and their principal industry. The decision and responsibility of this bill of major importance lies in the hands of the Members of Congress, who in majority know little about the intricacies of cattle and sheep raising. Those eastern members of the committee who felt this to be true gave an unselfish and painstaking service and deferred to the western members, with a consideration that we truly appreciated, and the Chairman of our Public Lands Committee conducted the fair and patient hearing this bill of such major importance justified.

The reason I feel that I know a little bit of this matter is because 24 years ago I homesteaded on 17 acres, and I have been in the cattle business with my children in two States ever since. We have run our cows as we are now doing on almost every variety of land—privately owned land, public domain, forestry, and railroad sections, and so forth. This is a far deeper bill than appears on the surface. It has presented itself in former years in different ways and has been defeated. It deals with the use and control of approximately 173,000,000 acres.

Therefore, fellow Members of Congress, yours is a very real responsibility today—particularly those of you who represent States where the problem of public domain does not exist. I ask your conscientious concern in this bill introduced for the commendable purposes outlined, but which, by its very enactment, gives to Federal control lands embracing empires, which many people feel should and will eventually be given to the States in which they lie; and at the same time, creates new departments to parallel the work of now existing Federal agencies—I refer to the Forestry Service under the Agricultural Department, now controlling the grazing of livestock.

We must be fair and painstaking in the consideration of this bill, the purposes of which are important and proper, but the passage of the bill as written may entangle us in fundamental policies still pending—ultimate State ownership of public domain—and at the same time involve us in such a dual control of the livestock business as would be wholly impractical.

It is hard to be as comprehensive as I should like to be, in 10 minutes. This bill was presented to the committee for the purposes above outlined. Secretary Ickes and representatives of his Department were enthusiastic advocates and all listening recognized that the Department of the Interior was asking the responsibility of administering public lands for the purposes of their rehabilitation and the sustaining of the livestock industry. Therefore, it is particularly difficult, and not a little embarrassing, to be forced to further analyze this bill and differentiate between its purposes and the probable result of its enactment as written.

The complexities involved could not be better demonstrated than to give you the picture of Arizona as an example. May I ask you to listen attentively. We have, in our State, seven classifications of land, designated as follows: Indian reservations, military, national forests, public domain, parks, State, private; aggregating approximately 73,000,000 acres, only 18,000,000 of which are privately owned. The land being discussed under this bill aggregates, in Arizona, 13,581,000 acres.

Let us dismiss the first problem presented—that of ultimate State ownership of public domain, which is not our concern today; however, the enactment of this bill might make it more difficult to acquire later.

So much has happened in the last few months, in relation to the United States, that is not yet fully realized. Largely stimulated through unemployment and the necessity of finding legitimate and constructive work for thousands of men, the problem of the surface of the United States has come, with rapidity, to the front and under this stimulation planning divisions have been organized, an erosion and flood control department created in the Department of the Interior, and now, instead of facing our water conservation and land rehabilitation in a spotted, local way, there has been crystallized for immediate action a mighty national program in relation to drainage areas, their conservation and development, which prove that out of necessity has come vision and progress.

You ask what relation this has to the Taylor bill which we are considering. Specifically this: The land that should be protected from erosion and flood control is scattered across many States. It does not lie—and this is very important—in any particular classification of land within any particular State. The damage to be corrected and stopped is to be found in all these types of land: Indian reservations; national forests; parks; private, military, public domain, and State land.

Picture for yourself the fact that plans and probable legislation pertaining to these drainage areas, as such, starting up in the mountains, flowing to the foothills and on to the plains, will be forthcoming in the near future, and that the work against erosion and for flood control will inevitably cover these damaged and unhealthy areas in their entirety, with no particular relation to classification or departmental administration. Therefore, from a practical point of view, and in behalf of the livestock industry, I believe we would be planning more effectively if we gave grazing control of public domain where necessary to the now existing, well-equipped agencies and let our new plans be less confused by considering the vesting of the responsibility of erosion and flood-control work to the Interior Department.

I wonder if you see what I mean. Please bear with me. Again let me say, logical and proper has been the motive prompting this legislation, which came into being before or simultaneously with these broader aspects of national adjustment in relation to the livestock industry and the rehabilitation of barren areas. Therefore, let us be fair and careful in our decision today.

First, we have a department well equipped to handle, through expansion rather than creation, any necessary grazing control. This is the Forest Service under the Department of Agriculture. Second, we have a newly created department in the Interior, known as "the Department of Erosion and Flood Control"—equipped to carry out any gigantic plan of conservation and surface salvage—dealing with drainage areas in their entirety. I do not believe this bill would have found itself on the floor of this House in its present form had these broader policies been developed 2 months ago.

In voting against this bill I feel I am exercising the intellectual integrity expected of me by those I represent from home, in the fact of what I know as a committee member of the Public Lands Committee, and I also, in so doing, believe I am smoothing the path, rather than blocking it, for effective legislation to give to the Department of the Interior the greater responsibility of any national program that in time might be proposed, which this bill would more probably confuse, rather than help.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, this is a very artfully drawn piece of legislation. I have heard a good deal said about it on both sides, but I say to you that in all of its 11 sections there is not 1 section drafted for the benefit of the small cattleman or the individual.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE. I have not the time. This bill is drafted for the benefit of the big stockmen and the banking interests of the country. I challenge any man, even the author of the bill, to show in any particular where the bill is for the benefit of the individual, the young man who desires to get a start in life. I point out to you that the bill absolutely abrogates the homestead laws of the United States—the beneficial measures for the development of the United States by just administration of the homestead law.

The homestead law is the vehicle or instrument that has developed this country, for people have gone into the frontier, established homes, built communities, and made this country great. This Congress from the time of the adoption of the Constitution to this minute has protected the individual and kept the door of opportunity open to him. If the big stockmen of this country fenced up the public domain they were arrested and convicted and jailed. Now, we propose by law to turn over the remaining 172,000,000 acres of public lands to the big interests of this country. I want to point out to you some of the objectionable sections of this bill. In the first place, the first section of this bill perpetuates the use by the cattlemen of this land when they secure a lease on a certain part of the domain. Page 5 of the bill, for instance, reads:

> No permit shall be issued which shall entitle the permitee to the use of such improvements constructed and owned by a prior occupant until the applicant has paid to such prior occupant a reasonable pro rata value for the use of such improvements.

If you secure the use of a piece of land and improve it, how is the man who wants to get a start in life—how is the man who wants to get possession of that property going to get it when he has to pay for the improvements? Expensive improvements are made to perpetuate the holder of a lease on the land.

Nobody has yet touched upon the exchange feature of this bill. Under the operation of this act a man can go out with some valueless land and make a horse trade with some Government officials and get valuable holdings. He can have secret information as to the mineral value of the land, and acquire title to it by trade. That is one of the things which is operating to defraud the people of the United States.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Would the State of Idaho like to have the lands of that State administered by the legislature, rather than by the Federal Government in Washington?

Mr. WHITE. Public lands are effectively administered right now by the laws of Idaho. We have a law in Idaho that provides that no sheep may be ranged within 1 mile of a homesteader. I want to call attention to the fact that under the operation of this bill the small homesteader who has a few head of cattle ranging in the hills will be barred off of the range by some big corporation coming in and leasing the ground. He will be a trespasser if his cattle wander onto that land.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. WHITE] has expired.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. COFFIN].

Mr. COFFIN. Mr. Chairman, I dislike exceedingly to find it necessary at my first appearance to disagree with my colleague from Idaho. I represent the Second District of Idaho, or the southern district, which has practically all the public land in our State within its boundaries. The matter concerned here is a perfectly practical matter. It is not experimental in any sense of the word. For many years we have had the administration of the forest reserves by the Forest Department. It has had the effect of increasing the number of livestock that can range on that land. It has preserved the watersheds of the West. It has made possible the reclamation of the entire western country. The same principle, applied to the great public domain which is not included within the forest reserves, will have the same effect. As it is today, the larger cattlemen and sheepmen use this land without any supervision whatever. The 2-mile limit law in Idaho, to which my colleague has referred, might just as well be taken off the statute books for all the effect it has. The result of the present use is as my colleague from Montana, Judge AYERS, explained, the little farmer in many of the valleys throughout that section finds that the public domain alongside of his farm, upon which he must rely for his own cattle if he expects to make good on that type of land, is taken away by the larger users. The only difficulty with the bill is that there is, on the part of those opposed to it, too much of a desire to set up straw men to knock down. It is simply a question of administration. If the Forestry Department has shown that in the administration of this type of land you must look for graft and favoritism, then you must expect the same thing from the Department of the Interior. Those of us from the West, however, who own this land, do not have that fear.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COFFIN. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman not believe that this land could be administered the same as the Forestry Department?

Mr. COFFIN. That is purely a question of administration.

Mr. RICH. But does the gentleman not believe it would be better to have one control rather than two?

Mr. COFFIN. I am not qualified to state as to the administration, which would be best. The two ranges are entirely different. There is not one single thing conflicting between the Interior Department handling what is known as the "spring and winter range", the public domain, and the Forestry Department handling the summer and fall range, which is the forest reserve. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. COFFIN] has expired.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Chairman, the enactment of the bill under consideration will bring about the creation of a large new bureau or organization in the Interior Department for the establishment and administration of livestock grazing districts on the 173,000,000 acres of unreserved public lands which are scattered amongst the privately owned and State-owned land of the 11 Western States.

Under a system of fees and leases for the use of the grazing districts and penalties of fines and imprisonment for violation of regulations, it gives complete Federal bureaucratic control over the great livestock industry of the West and over the lives of the people and resources of a vast area of the Western States.

The bill abrogates all of the present homestead laws and will take from thousands of our veterans and people in every State of the Union probably the only chance they will ever have to acquire a home of their own.

The bill destroys any hope that the western States may have ever to develop or acquire new taxable wealth by the passing of these public lands within their boundaries into private ownership. The proposed grazing lease system means perpetual governmental regulation and control. It dooms great areas to the status of a Federal pasture.

The bill will bring the total area withdrawn from entry and settlement to an excess of 55 percent of the total area of the 11 Western States.

Under this bill and with the lands already withdrawn from settlement, Arizona will have 75.3 percent of its total area restricted from future development and settlement; California, 50.8 percent; Colorado, 47.4 percent; Idaho, 68.6 percent; Montana, 50.8 percent; Nevada, 92.19 percent; New Mexico, 56.29 percent; Oregon, 55.7 percent; Utah, 78.9 percent; Washington, 35.1 percent; and Wyoming, 70.5 percent.

These States cannot successfully develop and remain half State and half Federal. These States should be permitted to develop and obtain sovereignty over their soil. Imagine the consternation of Eastern, Central, or Southern States if it were proposed that the Government should own and control more than half of their areas. When we contemplate 55 percent of the area of our Western States is to be reserved from acquirement by private ownership, it is appalling. They will not be complete States but half States, more properly described as dependencies or colonies.

It has been the western conception that the United States holds title to these public lands as trustee for the States and that the Federal Government never was the absolute owner of such lands. There was a trust and the Government a trustee. The trust was never intended to go on forever. In time it was to be terminated. Thus only could the Western States become fully sovereign and equal to the rest of the States of the Union.

Permit me to review briefly the history and status of our public domain. The total area of continental United States is 1,973,000,000 acres, and came to us as follows:

First. Four hundred million six hundred and four thousand five hundred and thirty-three acres by treaty with Great Britain at the close of the Revolutionary War, and constituting all of the area of the original Thirteen Colonies, and in addition all of the territory west of the Colonies to the Mississippi, including what was later designated as the Northwest Territory and comprised of 170,161,876 acres.

Second. Purchase of Louisiana from France in 1803, containing 529,911,680 acres.

Third. Purchase of Florida from Spain in 1819, with an area of 46,144,640 acres.

Fourth. Annexation of Texas, with its 249,066,240 acres.

Fifth. Oregon settlement with Great Britain by treaty in 1846, which added 183,386,240 acres.

Sixth. Cession from Mexico in 1848, 338,680,968 acres.

Seventh. The Gadsden Purchase from Mexico in 1853 of 18,988,800 acres.

The treaty of peace with Great Britain was made with each free and independent sovereign State which had fought in the Union. By this treaty all of the territory westward of the Mississippi was added to their possessions. In 1782 the Continental Congress asserted the validity of territorial rights which New York had conveyed. At the request of Congress, Virginia ceded to the United States in 1784 all her extra territory; the other claimant States did the same, Massachusetts in 1785, Connecticut in 1786; South Carolina in 1789, North Carolina ceded Tennessee in 1790, Georgia gave up her western claims in 1802, out of which grew Alabama and Mississippi. Thus the area between the original colonies and the Mississippi River was added to the young Nation. Thus came into being the Northwest Territory, out of which were carved Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Wisconsin, and part of Minnesota, established by the ordinances of 1787, the year of the signing of the Constitution but prior to its adoption, comprising all of the land east of the Mississippi and north of Ohio. These ordinances of 1787 provided:

> That this territory must be erected into States, and have their entrance into the Union on equal terms, with the original States, and bear the same relation to the State government as all of the original States. They shall be settled and formed into distinct republican States, which shall become members of the Federal Union and have the same rights of sovereignty, freedom, and independence as the other States.

The treaty with France, conveying the Louisiana Purchase in 1803, provided:

> The inhabitants of the ceded territory shall be incorporated into the Union of the United States and admitted as soon as possible, according to the principles of the Federal Constitution, to the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages, and immunities of the citizens of the United States, and in the meantime they shall be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberties, property, and the religion they profess.

The treaty with Mexico, covering the Mexican cessions in 1848, contains the following provisions:

> Shall be formed into free, sovereign, and independent States, and incorporated into the Union of the United States as soon as possible, and the citizens thereof shall be accorded the enjoyment of all rights, advantages, and immunities as citizens of the original United States.

These treaties and provisions, ordinances, and cessions were and are the foundation of the principles of Federal authority and procedure with respect to the public lands. Fearing illegality of the ordinances under the Articles of Confederation in force at the time they were adopted regarding the Northwest Territory, they were reenacted August 7, 1789, after the adoption of the Constitution. The territory successively acquired was, at least until admitted as States, covered under article IV, section 3, of the Constitution of the United States, which is as follows:

> Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the Territories or other property belonging to the United States, and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to prejudice any claims of the United States or any particular State.

All agree from our earliest history that even under the compact with the States whereby the States waive or cede their rights to the public lands and agree that they will not interfere with the primary disposal of the soil, the United States is a trustee. The Supreme Court has held that these compacts and enabling acts of the Western States cannot and do not alter their constitutional rights. When the States entered into the compacts of their enabling acts, waiving and ceding to the Federal Government and agreeing not to interfere with the primary disposal of the soil within their boundaries, the policy has ever been, and was, and therefore it was with the understanding that as the Constitution prescribed, the Government was to dispose of the lands, not hold them, reserve them forever, and impose royalties or fees on their development and prevent settlement.

The Public Lands Committee of the United States Senate in 1832 made a report after a complete survey favoring the ceding of the lands by the Federal Government to the States wherein the lands lay. In part the report stated, as follows:

> Our pledge would not be redeemed by merely dividing the surface into States and giving them names. The public debt being now paid, the public lands are entirely released from the pledge they were under to that object, and are free to receive a new and liberal destination for the relief of the States in which they lie. The speedy extinction of the Federal title within their limits is necessary to the independence of the new States, to their equality with elder States, to the development of their resources, to the subjection of their soil to taxation, cultivation, and settlement, and to the proper enjoyment of their jurisdiction and sovereignty.

To permanently reserve and keep from development and under Federal bureau control one half of a State is an unreasonable exercise of whatever rights the Federal Government might have to reserve lands. It violates the conditions imposed in the treaties under which the lands were acquired. In my opinion it takes no legal argument to prove this. It must be obvious to all as a matter of plain sense and justice. If one half of a State can be kept in perpetual Federal ownership, then all of a State could be reserved in Federal ownership. If that can be done constitutionally, then the words "Union of Sovereign States" are a hollow mockery.

This bill places the fate of the great livestock industry of the West dependent on unreserved public lands under regulations of the Interior Department, a Department which has had practically no experience in such matters. The livestock grazing on public lands within the borders of the United States Forest Reserves in the Western States is administered by the Forest Service under the Department of Agriculture. For the past 28 years the Forest Service has been handling the livestock industry and annually has 7,900,000 head of livestock grazing on 82,000,000 of forest-reserve lands. The Forest Service annually grants 26,000 grazing permits and has a complete expert and experienced organization to deal with the complicated problems of the livestock industry.

If this bill is necessary for the control and regulation of the livestock industry, as the advocates of the measure claim it to be, then common sense dictates that all grazing, both within and without the borders of the forest reserve, should be placed under one jurisdiction. Inasmuch as the Forest Service has a complete and efficient organization for such a purpose, it would be the logical organization to handle grazing on the unreserved public lands. Placing the jurisdiction of grazing on the unreserved public lands under the Forest Service also would make unnecessary the creation of a large new governmental organization or bureau. Under the leasing provisions of the bill, once grazing lands within the proposed districts are leased, the lessee will have absolute control almost in perpetuity over the lands, because the bill provides that a subsequent lessee can only acquire it if he pays for any improvements, fences, or expenditures of his predecessor. It is true the measure provides that if they cannot agree, the price is to be fixed; and in this there is grave danger that the grazing lands will be in the control of a few large stock owners and the small stockman is to be forced from the ranges.

Several times in the course of this debate, the proponents of the bill have referred to the report of the Public Lands Commission, appointed by President Hoover.

The report that has been mentioned, however, made no recommendations such as are contained in this bill. Permit me to read to the committee the recommendations of the so-called Hoover commission with reference to the grazing lands of the public domain.

It is the conclusion of the committee:

> That the remaining areas, which are valuable chiefly for the production of forage and can be effectively conserved and administered by the States containing them, should be granted to the States which will accept them.

Reference has been made repeatedly to the Colton bill, a bill which was very similar to this measure but entirely different with reference to its connection with the individual State. The Colton bill contained a section known as "section 13", which provided—

> That this act shall not become effective in any State until 60 days after the approval by the legislature of such State; and each such approving State, in its discretion, may designate and authorize one or more representatives or officials of said State with whom the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to make and enter into suitable agreements for the cooperative administration of public grazing upon said public lands of the United States, and the lands owned by, or subject to the control of, said State or any political subdivision thereof shall be subject to such rules and regulations as shall be agreed upon and promulgated by both the Secretary of the Interior and by the State.

Let us maintain the system of local government and stop centralization of bureaus in Washington by defeating this bill.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who have spoken on this bill may have the privilege of revising and extending their remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FULLER].

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, this is a familiar matter to some of the older members of the Public Lands Committee. The chairman of the committee, the ranking member from California, and myself, are the only three members of this committee who were on the committee when this investigation was made under the Hoover administration. At that time $50,000 was appropriated for an investigation, and a citizen was appointed from every State in the Union to investigate these public lands. Growing out of that investigation was this grazing bill. I acted as a Democratic member of that committee in conjunction with Colton, of Utah, French and Smith, of Idaho, Arentz, of Nevada, and Scott Leavitt, of Montana; and the bill under consideration is practically word for word the result of that investigation which was instituted and advocated by President Hoover and by every member of his Cabinet. The only material difference between that bill and this bill is that the former contained what is known as "section 13"; but that was put into the former bill over the protest of its sponsors, and only because it came up for consideration in the House at a time when few Members were present. The bill passed the House and went over to the Senate, but in the closing hours of the session it failed of recognition because of the opposition of the cattle and sheep men who were so ably represented at that time.

This bill ought not to be considered as a Democratic or a Republican measure, although I can readily see how politics enters this matter. Those who bring politics into the matter do so more or less in total disregard of the public domain and the interest of the Nation generally. If they were permitted, they would put the cattle and sheep grazing into the hands of the Forest Service. Every one of the men opposed to this measure would rush up to vote for it if it were put under the control of the Forest Service, because they know and we know that that is the biggest and most hog-tight Republican organization in the United States, and some opposed to the measure have been benefited by reason thereof; but that is no reason why the bill ought to be administered by that Bureau.

The question for us to consider is, Is the bill meritorious? It is true that President Roosevelt and his Cabinet are in favor of this bill. It is a meritorious measure and every Member of the House should be for it.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks a lot of questions about why we do not turn these lands over to the States. Another gentleman asked the same thing. Do you know that the Hoover committee recommended that all this land be turned over to the Western States and given to them absolutely, reserving mineral rights only? What did they say? They came here with froth in their mouth before the Public Lands Committee. They said, "No; we will not accept them." I will never forget the speech of the Governor from Utah. He stated that they would not accept these lands and could not afford to. He said:

> You might consider it poor policy to look a gift horse in the mouth, but we want to see if he is subject to spasms, whether he is worth feeding.

The truth is, they did not want these lands under any circumstances because they were receiving then, and are receiving now, too much benefit.

We all know the Western States are more or less wards of the Government. We are not complaining about this at all. We are willing to go along and help you. These land States get 35 percent of all the money collected in fees from these cattle and sheep men. If a foot of timber is sold, they get a pro rata part of the money. We help keep up their schools. We build their roads. We have to do this because in some parts of the West 90 percent of the land belongs to the Federal Government. They should have some rights that are not enjoyed in other parts of the United States.

They talk about giving rights to the Secretary of the Interior, divesting us of legislative authority, and giving him arbitrary powers. You have done the same thing with the forests. You have turned them over to the Secretary of Agriculture. Anybody crying about that? Not a bit. The opposition raise any little thing in the world in opposition to this bill.

As it is now, the sheep and the cattle are running helter-skelter from one State to another and promiscuously over all the ranges. The opposition claim this law will hurt the veteran, because you will not let him go out there and homestead 640 acres of this desert land, on which he could not raise three sheep. It is worthless land for homestead purposes. What we desire to do is to try to preserve the land. Every man that has been in the cattle and sheep business knows that you cannot overgraze this land. It will blow off in sand dunes and wash away into the rivers and creeks here and there, filling up the dams and going on down to the Gulf of Mexico. It is ruining the country, and the people who are alive to the situation, realizing and knowing that this is Government property, want to preserve the land for this generation and for future posterity.

Who is in opposition? No one on earth except a few sheepmen and a few cattlemen who have a selfish interest, who care nothing for the present welfare of this country, and who think of nothing but getting theirs while the getting is good. Often you will see a man in this grazing country with a big drove of sheep coming from Arizona, where most of them come from, or some other State. Of course they are opposed to this. The man in charge of the sheep or cattle is a Mexican. You cannot find out whose cattle they are. They just run over everybody out there, and what we want to do is to take care of these lands. There will be 50 or 60 C.C.C. camps there. The departments can segregate and classify the lands and get the matter fixed up so that there will be some revenue coming in, and this will be self-sustaining. There should not be any opposition to this bill.

Mr. MILLARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MILLARD. The gentleman is a member of the Committee on the Public Lands?

Mr. FULLER. No. I was for 5 years. I was on the committee at the time this matter was considered.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 8½ minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. MILLARD. Will the gentleman yield for a question before he starts?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MILLARD. It says here "exclusive of Alaska." No one has explained why Alaska has been excluded in this bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I will try to explain that to the gentleman. I will ask the Membership of the House to refrain from interrupting me.

I am just going to talk to you briefly about conservation on general principles. Thirty-five years ago Uncle Sam had about 500,000,000 acres of unoccupied and unclaimed public domain that was being indiscriminately used by cattlemen, sheepmen, without any regulation or system or control whatever. The only order or restraint was the law of the jungle. President Theodore Roosevelt and Gifford Pinchot, the present Governor of Pennsylvania, conceived the idea that there ought to be some restraint upon the wanton destruction of the timber resources of our country. They thought our forests ought to be conserved as against large and many frightful fires destroying many thousands of acres of fine timber and a curb put upon the timber looters. They started a Nation-wide crusade for the conservation of our forests. They advocated the creation of forest reserves throughout the West on all the public domain that had timber on it.

The President started creating reserves in all the Western States by Executive orders. The people in that part of the country fought it like hyenas. We felt it was a high-handed, outrageous, and infamous invasion of our vested rights, that we had always let cattle run upon the public domain, and now they were going to charge us a fee for our stock eating the grass and boss and regulate us besides. We fought it as hard as we could. Eventually we were overridden and they put 137,000,000 acres of the open public domain into 146 forest reserves throughout the Western States. They have been administering it all now for 28 years. Generally speaking, the Forest Service is making a great success of the administration of that vast domain. There are always some complaints, and during these depressed times many stockmen feel that grazing fees ought to be further reduced. But in the main, everybody in the whole United States is in favor of the forest reserves. Nobody would think of having the public domain thrown open to a brutal free-for-all scramble again.

There are now 173,000,000 acres left of our public domain outside of the forest reserves. There is no supervision or control whatever over it. It is being overgrazed. It is being frightfully destroyed and ruined. The land is nearly all located in the 11 Western States, and the public-spirited people of these States feel that this wanton and reckless destruction of that vast and valuable national asset ought to cease. They feel that there should be the same orderly use and common-sense system of conservation of the 173,000,000 acres of public domain we have left that is now being made of the 137,000,000 acres of the forest reserve; and they are trying to bring about practically the same policy allotting the lands in definite amount and location to the local and most deserving stockmen for the remaining public domain that is now invoked in the forest reserve.

The two Departments, both in this administration and the former Hoover administration, have thoroughly agreed that they can administer the public lands and the forest reserves together; that they can administer them economically, that they can largely prevent the erosion and the strife between the cattlemen and the sheepmen, the big stockmen and the little fellow, and the overcrowding and destruction of the public land which is going on at a frightfully destructive pace. A very large part of the remaining public domain is utterly worthless for anything else than for grazing and is a very poor quality of grazing land.

I noted the other day where scientists have discovered that the Sahara Desert in northern Africa was once covered with a dense growth of vegetation, grass, bushes, and trees, and inhabited by prosperous people. That region today is probably the most desolate region on earth; horrible sand dunes. Today we are, by overgrazing, creating sand dunes in every one of these States. We have quite a large one in southern Colorado now. Where 5 or 10 times as many stock are turned upon land as there is proper forage for them, the grass is not only destroyed but sheep pull out the roots of the grass. In that arid country when the grass is destroyed, it will not come back. If this bill is not passed, or some system of controlled and orderly use adopted, a very large part of every Western State will soon be a barren desert. In the forest reserves where they have rains, the land is replenished, but in the lowlands the grass will not come back.

This bill, Mr. Chairman, is a great national conservation measure for the welfare of our entire country. Many of us western Members have been earnestly working for many years to bring about this legislation. We know we are right. We are loyally trying to render a great service to the West. I hope the House will not permit amendments that will hamstring this bill. The Department of the Interior and the Department of Agriculture have come to a thorough agreement upon this matter, and I feel we should respect their wishes and their assurance that they can and will handle this matter. I am not caring about the details, but I am desperately anxious to prevent amendments that I know will cause friction between the Departments and destroy harmony and kill the bill. As all of you know, there are a great many different ways of killing a bill, and most of the provisions of the minority report and many of the amendments offered today are of that character. I have lived among stockmen all my life. I have officially represented them nearly 40 years. I know that some measure of this kind is absolutely necessary. I know when it is practically established it will be of far-reaching and tremendous benefit, especially to hundreds of thousands of farmers and small stockmen. They are the ones I am primarily trying to protect. But the big stockmen and every community will be benefited by this orderly use and systematic control.

If you are in favor of conserving this great national asset of ours, stabilizing the livestock industry and stopping soil deterioration, join with us in helping to do so. Whether it is administered by the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of Agriculture or the Forest Service, I feel the bill will work out well. By the last sections of the bill the President and those two Secretaries are given full authority to work this matter out, and I know they will do so.

When President Roosevelt writes to Secretary Ickes as follows:

WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, D.C., February 21, 1934.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I have discussed with you and the Secretary of Agriculture, Congressman TAYLOR's bill, H.R. 6462, to give to the Secretary of the Interior the power of regulating grazing on the public domain.

I favor the principle of this bill; and you and the Secretary of Agriculture are authorized to say so to the House Committee on the Public Lands.

Very sincerely,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

And Secretary Ickes writes to our late loved and lamented Chairman of the Rules Committee as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, March 16, 1934.

Hon. EDWARD W. POU,
Chairman Committee on Rules,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. POU: The Taylor grazing bill, H.R. 6462, reported favorably from the Public Lands Committee last week, has the endorsement of the President, and its passage is being strongly urged by both Secretary Wallace and myself.

I regard this bill as the most important measure which the Department of the Interior has before Congress this session, and anything which you can do to bring it before the House for consideration at an early date will be greatly appreciated.

Sincerely yours,

HAROLD L. ICKES,
Secretary of the Interior.

And Secretary Wallace writes to the committee: "I heartily recommend its enactment"—how can anyone doubt that those officials will honestly and practically carry out the purposes of this measure? I am as confident as I am of my existence that this measure will be of incalculable benefit to our country and especially to the West, and that we shall all be proud in the years to come of having taken part in the preservation of this wonderful 173,000,000-acre resource of our Republic. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BLOOM). The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to promote the highest use of public land, the Secretary of the Interior in his discretion is hereby authorized to establish by order grazing districts or additions thereto from any part of the public lands of the United States, exclusive of Alaska, not in national forests, national parks and monuments, or Indian reservations, and which in his opinion are chiefly valuable for grazing and raising forage crops, and/or to modify the boundaries thereof: Provided, That no lands withdrawn or reserved for any other purpose shall be included in any such district except with the approval of the head of the departmen having jurisdiction thereof. Such orders shall be so worded as to safeguard valid claims existing on the date thereof. Neither this act nor the act of December 29, 1916 (39 Stat. 862; U.S.C., title 43, secs. 291 and following), commonly known as the "Stock Raising Homestead Act", shall be construed as limiting the authority or policy of Congress or the President to include in national forests public lands of the character described in section 24 of the act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. 1103; U.S.C., title 16, sec. 471), for the purposes set forth in the act of June 4, 1897 (30 Stat. 35; U.S.C., title 16, sec. 475), or such other purposes as Congress may specify.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 1, after the word "monuments", strike out the word "or", and after the word "reservations", insert "or revested Oregon-California Railroad grant lands"; and on page 2, line 9, after the word "thereof" insert "and shall not affect any land heretofore or hereafter surveyed which, except for the provisions of this act, would be a part of any grant to any State."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: Page 1, lines 6 and 7, after the comma, strike out the words "exclusive of Alaska."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I am not an expert on the grazing business, but my information is that herds of reindeer are maintained in Alaska out of which large profits are realized by the operators. Now, why should they not be brought within the provisions of this bill and pay the licensing fees that those in the United States proper are required to pay?

I hope this amendment will be adopted so that there will not be discrimination in favor of that outfit which operates these reindeer on the ranges of Alaska.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. McFADDEN. The gentleman is referring to the Lowmans, who virtually stole the reindeer from the Eskimo in Alaska and are carrying on this big operation on public lands?

Mr. TABER. I understand that is the situation, and I do not see why we should discriminate in favor of special interests when we undertake to enact legislation here in the House of Representatives.

I hope this amendment will be adopted. I hope the committee will show its good faith by accepting the amendment immediately.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, the trouble with the amendment is that it applies to such an enormous territory. I have forgotten how many hundred million acres there are up there. That is too large and unconsidered a proposition to tack onto this bill. Alaska is about one fifth the size of the United States. While there are a large number of reindeer scattered over a large part of Alaska, many of them are owned by the Eskimos, and many more are owned by the Lowman brothers or their company. I think the company is a New York concern. And some are owned by other people. None of them are making anything at the present time. The reindeer business is not in a prosperous condition. I do not feel we should open up this bill with respect to the expense which might be put upon the Government in administering all this public domain. I have never heard of anyone's making a suggestion of this kind before. I feel this would be a great mistake to open up such a vast and many-sided controversy as that would involve at this time, and I hope the amendment offered will be rejected.

Mr. WEARIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. WEARIN. It is perfectly possible we can legislate a little bit later and take care of the situation suggested.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Oh, yes. That reindeer situation in Alaska would require exhaustive investigation before it would be wise to take any action upon it. It would be utterly impossible to apply this bill to that Territory at this time.

Mr. DEROUEN. This amendment was submitted to the committee and to the Departments, and it was thought unwise to include Alaska. Therefore, I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment of the gentleman from New York will be adopted. I know something about the reindeer business in Alaska. As a member of the Committee on Territories for a number of years we had this question before us. There is not any question as to what happened up there regarding the reindeer business. The Lomens have exploited the Eskimo, gone into the reindeer business, using the best pastures of Alaska. It is a very nice little business. They are selling reindeer meat in the United States in competition with beef, and it has grown to an extent where that kind of business ought to be stopped.

This particular amendment will put them where they will have to pay something to the Government for the use of the land. They ought to pay something to the Eskimo from whom they have taken this business.

The reindeer were put into Alaska as an exclusive proposition for the Eskimo. The Lomen outfit have exploited the Eskimo, and they have not only operated in Alaska but perpetuated themselves by having men in the Agricultural Department and all along the line to see that nothing ever interferes with their great monopoly in selling reindeer meat in the United States.

You cannot find an Eskimo in Alaska who is not at swords points with the Lomen outfit, because they feel that they have deprived the Eskimo of their right to make a living. Therefore, I say that the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York should be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were 20 ayes and 70 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 2, after the word "lands", insert the words "or other revested grant lands in Oregon."

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, the committee will accept that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 4, strike out the words "Secretary of the Interior" and insert the words "Secretary of Agriculture."

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is offered for the purpose of placing jurisdiction of the bill, if enacted, under the Department of Agriculture, so as to take advantage of the experience and efficiency of the organization of the Forest Service that for 28 years has been handling the livestock industry and grazing within the borders of the forest reserves. Under the bill the jurisdiction of the livestock industry in the Western States would be placed in the springtime under the Agriculture Department, and during the summer months in the forest reserves, and in the fall under the jurisdiction again of the Interior Department.

Stockmen will be at a loss to know how to handle their herds and flocks. For instance, it may be that 500 head or 1,000 head are grazing within the boundaries of the forest reserve, and when they come out in the fall and go onto the grazing districts created under this bill the Interior Department may say that it can take care of only half the number of cattle. It places the cattlemen in an almost impossible position if the grazing industry is left under the double jurisdiction of two departments. I do not believe there is a Member of the House who, if drawing this bill fairly and without prejudice, but would draw the bill so as to place the grazing industry under one department, the department now handling that industry.

In the hearings before the committee nothing definite was ascertained as to what it is going to cost to administer this measure. The Secretary of the Interior or his representatives suggested that it might be administered for something like $150,000 annually. Yet representatives of the Forest Service in former hearings on similar bills estimated that that Department could not possibly administer the 173,000,000 acres of land for less than from two to three million dollars annually. The Forest Service has had the experience. Their estimate should be accurate. The Interior Department is simply assuming or making an estimate of what it hopes to do.

If 173,000,000 acres of land are to be administered for $150,000 a year when it is now costing the Forest Service 4 cents an acre for the 82,000,000 acres under their jurisdiction, there cannot be any beneficial regulation or anything of benefit accrue to the stock industry. I therefore plead in the name of common sense to place this bill under a department that now has jurisdiction over one of the vital industries of our Western States.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, the complete answer to the gentleman from California [Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT], if I may be permitted to say a word, is that this bill deals with grazing on public lands. Other lands, of course, are under the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and that is a bureau of the Interior Department. Therefore, all these public lands are under the Interior Department. The gentleman from California, and everyone else knows, that if we were to give the Secretary of Agriculture jurisdiction over the grazing of public lands there would be a conflict of jurisdiction between the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture, but very properly, of course, this ought to be handled by the department that has under it the Bureau of Public Lands, the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. There could be no possible conflict when the bill provides for creating grazing districts under the public domain, and the Congress has the right to place that jurisdiction wherever it seems wise.

Mr. HASTINGS. This is under the jurisdiction of the Public Land Office, as the gentleman knows, and the public land has always been under the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and that is the bureau of the Department of the Interior. Of course, the amendment ought to be defeated, and the administration of this bill ought to remain under the Secretary of the Interior, where the bureau is that supervises it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior shall make provision for the protection, administration, regulation, and improvement of such grazing districts as may be created under the authority of the foregoing section, and he shall make such rules and regulations and establish such service, enter into such cooperative agreements, and do any and all things necessary to accomplish the purposes of this act and to insure the objects of such grazing districts, namely, to regulate their occupancy and use, to preserve the land and its resources from destruction or unnecessary injury, to provide for the orderly use, improvement, and development of the range, and to stabilize the livestock industry dependent upon the use of such public grazing lands; and any violation of the provisions of this act or such rules and regulations thereunder shall be punishable by a fine of not more than $500 or by imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 3, line 9, after the word "lands", insert "and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to continue the study of erosion and flood control and to perform such work as may be necessary amply to protect and rehabilitate the areas subject to the provisions of this act, through such funds as may be made available for that purpose."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. My colleague, ED TAYLOR, the author of this bill, and who has the support of his three colleagues in this House, is exceeded in seniority by but two Members in this body, the Honorable Speaker of the House and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH]. Through the 25 years that he has been a Member of this body he has been a deep student of and constantly in contact with legislation and all questions affecting the public-land States and their resources. He has become an outstanding authority on the type of legislation now before this body. I do not believe it is any disparagement to the Members of either House to say that there is no Member of either House who has his wide range of knowledge on matters affecting the western land States.

Perhaps it is not in every case that the author of a bill could be thrown into the scale with it, in weighing the merits of the bill, but, if there is any such case, it would be the fact that EDWARD T. TAYLOR, of Colorado, is the author of the bill now before this House, and his authorship of it is a significant matter, in the light of his outstanding career and experience, to be considered by the House.

There is another significant thing that might be considered by this House in connection with this bill, and that is this: Twenty-five years ago Mr. TAYLOR and I came into this body, and we were only two Members of a solid phalanx from all of the public-land States fighting against the establishment of forest reserves in the Western States; and as I listened to the debate this afternoon I reflected that Members of this body could go back into the debates of Congress 25 or 26 or 28 years ago, and not only find everything that has been said against this bill here this afternoon but 20 times more, because the establishment of the forest reserves in the West was a burning issue in that section of the country, reducing us, as we thought, to the mere status of a Federal dependency.

But let anybody arise in this House today and propose to abolish the forest reserves. We did not want them. We had to take them, but if you do not want us to have them now, you will certainly have to take them away from us, and you will have the fight of your lives. If this legislation does half as much for the great body of waste land, worthless for farming or for any purpose except grazing, that is involved in this bill, as the forest reserves have done, it will be a wonderfully beneficial piece of legislation to the entire West.

It is a significant fact that the West has been converted to the forest reserves imposed upon us against our will, and is now the most ardent champion of the forest reserves. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] has expired.

Mr. CARTER of Wyoming. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment of the gentleman from Colorado. I do not mean to attack the eulogy made upon the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR], but I have just been reading over the report submitted by the chairman of the committee, and I notice that the report states that it has the unqualified endorsement of the national land use planning committee. I have read the report, and I find nothing in the report where this bill was approved by the national land use planning committee. I should like to ask the chairman when the national land use planning committee appeared before the committee, for the reason that the national land use planning committee has been out of existence for over a year. Still the gentleman comes in here and says they have approved this bill.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to issue or cause to be issued permits to graze livestock on such grazing districts to such bona fide settlers, residents, and other stock owners as under his rules and regulations are entitled to participate in the use of the range, upon the payment annually of reasonable fees in each case to be fixed or determined from time to time under his authority: Provided, That grazing permits shall be issued only to citizens of the United States or to those who have filed the necessary declarations of intention to become such, as required by the naturalization laws. Such permits may be issued to individuals, groups, or associations for a period of not more than 10 years, subject to the preference right of the permittees to renewal in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, who shall specify from time to time numbers of stock and seasons of use. During periods of range depletion due to severe drought or other natural causes, or in case of a general epidemic of disease, during the life of the permit, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to remit, reduce, refund in whole or in part, or authorize postponement of payment of grazing fees for such depletion period so long as the emergency exists.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 4, line 4, after the word "laws", insert "and preference shall be given occupants and settlers on land within or near a district to such range privileges as may be needed to permit proper use of lands occupied by them."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 8, after the word "groups", strike out the word "or", and, after the word "association", insert "or corporations authorized to conduct a livestock business under the laws of the State in which the grazing district is located."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 21, after the word "exists", insert a colon and the following: "And provided further, That in such orders, and in administering this act, rights to the use of water for mining, agricultural, manufacturing, or other purposes, vested and accrued and which are recognized and acknowledged by the local customs, laws, and decisions of the courts, shall be maintained and protected in the possessors and owners thereof, and, so far as consistent with the purposes of this act, grazing rights similarly recognized and acknowledged, shall be adequately safeguarded."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, this is the second installment, and as it is entirely extemporaneous, there is no telling how many installments there may be.

When I was cut off with the gavel a few minutes ago, I was about to advance a third consideration in appealing to the Members of the House to give us this bill, and that is the fact that while we are divided, and it is always extremely painful when I am at odds with the brilliant Congresswoman from Arizona, while there is some division among the representatives of the public-land States, it is extremely significant that the great majority of us are for this bill, because we live in this country which you say is going to be made federalized domain.

Now, my friends, I want you to bear in mind this fact, that this bill is not adding one inch to the Federal domain. It already belongs to the Federal Government. It is already all under the Department of the Interior. You have no legal rights on this domain whatever. It is unregulated Federal domain, pays no taxes, brings in no revenue, whereas this bill proposes to regulate it and preserve it and parcel it out equitably for a small charge among the people who may be entitled to its use.

But I want to say to this, and I cannot go into this subject now, there is a feature of this legislation that interests me a lot more than grazing. That is the question of erosion.

This objective of the bill is only touched upon in the report, and I shall take leave to quote two short paragraphs. On page 2 is the following:

Where overgrazing is permitted to disturb the balance of nature erosion must result, which in turn increases flood hazards and promotes the siltation of irrigation reservoirs and ditches and jeopardizes the water supply for irrigation, urban consumption, and other uses. So ruinous a use of the public domain should not be permitted and, if it is continued, will result in the reduction of these vast areas to eroded and barren wastes.

And on page 8, from the letter of the Secretary of Agriculture, I quote the following:

A natural concomitant of the destruction or impairment of the protective vegetative cover has been an acceleration of soil movement or erosion which not only has reduced the value of the lands from which the soil has been moved but has also reduced the value of irrigation and power reservoirs, canals, ditches, etc., through increased sedimentation.

Mr. Chairman, these word pictures are all too inadequate to paint the havoc being wrought on the mesas and tablelands of the mountain West, where rainstorms are cloudbursts and where, due to the nature of the soil, denuded and unprotected from overgrazing, large areas of land are being cut through, washed away, and permanently destroyed, and this process is accelerating.

This is the most appalling feature that faces the western, mountainous country. Unless we can do something to arrest the land destruction which I have seen take place during two thirds of a rather long life, entire sections of the country will eventually be worthless.

I remember sometime ago seeing some pictures in the National Geographic of China, showing an absolute nightmare which had occurred to what had been once a fine farming country. It was denuded; the timber taken off; the grass grazed off, and the entire country washed into great canyons and destroyed forever. That process, through overgrazing and neglect, is going on in the West. In my lifetime I have seen crevices which you could jump across that are now great arroyas. It is going on all over that western country. That sort of thing is being stopped in the forest reserves. You should go up through the forest reserves and see the little water traps and dams and everything that is done to take care of the water and prevent erosion and induce vegetation. The same thing will in some degree be done with this land. I predict that if this bill is passed by this Congress the time will come when those who oppose this legislation will be just as glad that they failed as we are glad that we failed against the forest reserves. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] has expired.

Mr. CARTER of Wyoming. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. I understand there are 173,000,000 acres involved in this bill. The testimony showed that only 50,000,000 acres were to be leased the first year and that at no time would they lease all. Can the chairman inform the House whether it is intended to allow free public use of the range not included in the grazing districts?

Mr. DEROUEN. The evidence before the committee did not show that any specific area was to be leased at any particular time. The Secretary will have to make a survey and organize the undertaking, which will require several months; and there will not be anything done for a while.

Mr. CARTER of Wyoming. But supposing that eventually they leased only 50,000,000 acres, what will they do with the other 123,000,000 acres?

Mr. DEROUEN. I have no information as to the 50,000,000 acres to which the gentleman refers. It was never mentioned in the committee, and I do not know.

Mr. CARTER of Wyoming. Oh, yes, it was; I beg the gentleman's pardon. The Assistant Solicitor stated that they were going to have only 50,000,000 acres in the grazing district the first year; and Mr. Stabler said that at no time did they expect to take in the whole 173,000,000 acres into the grazing districts.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KLEBERG: Page 3, line 24, after the word "fees", insert: "which shall in no event be less than 80 percent of the average grazing fees prevailing on privately owned lands adjacent thereto or in the same general section, and which are of the same general character."

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment on the ground that it is not germane.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Chairman, I preface my remarks by saying I have no desire by anything I say to injure this particular piece of legislation. I want that understood first.

With reference to the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I shall accept the decision of the Chair.

With reference to the amendment I call attention directly to the fact that wherever we have Government reservations we also have privately owned lands surrounding the reservations. We all recognize that the publicly owned lands are in their pristine condition without having been plowed or touched, and the only way by which their surface production can be converted into wealth is through the grazing of livestock.

The simple and only purpose of this amendment is to place the operation of these grazing districts on a basis where a reasonable fee will be charged for their use. As a matter of fact, the individual cowman who pays taxes on his ranch and markets his cattle, at such times as he has no cattle leases those ranges to others. In the case of the public domain and these grazing districts none of the provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act restrict or otherwise affect them. Any man can go into the cow business by going to the market and buying a herd and raising it on one of these grazing districts in direct competition with the taxpayers of the country.

It is the purpose of this amendment to assess against the users of these public-grazing lands as rent for their use at least 80 percent of what is charged for privately owned land of the same general character in the same general section of the country.

There is nothing in this amendment to injure the bill. It provides that the Secretary of the Interior may exercise his own judgment and discretion in saying which lands shall be the ones upon which the 80-percent test shall be made, not lands in Kamchatka, but lands in the immediately surrounding country of the same general character having to do with exactly the same business, the conversion of surface production into wealth through the grazing of livestock.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KLEBERG. Certainly.

Mr. MAY. In other words, the situation the gentleman seeks to correct is one in which the Government of the United States puts itself into competition with the private owner of lands?

Mr. KLEBERG. That is right.

Mr. MAY. It is the same kind of competition that we have when the Government enters any line of private business.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KLEBERG. I yield.

Mr. DEROUEN. As a matter of fact, this privately owned land is much superior to any of the public reserved land.

Mr. KLEBERG. May I say to the gentleman from Louisiana that my amendment provides that the rental shall be dependent upon a comparison with lands of like character.

Mr. FULLER of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

I appreciate, of course, the suggestion and the purpose of the gentleman from Texas, because he is one of the biggest cattlemen in the United States. I know he is personally interested in this bill but unwittingly he is trying to kill this bill.

I have conferred with the Solicitor from the Interior Department. He said this amendment would kill the bill, that they could not operate the grazing districts under it.

Conditions are vastly different in the gentleman's district from what they are in the majority of the lands here under consideration. In the gentleman's district they have grass and the land is not bare like it is on the open range. They do not have these sand dunes with just here and there a farmer who has a few acres with a little grass. It would not be fair to take 80 percent of the rental value of the isolated spots as the value of the thousands of acres of public grazing lands, for one little settler would need from one thousand to several thousand acres to raise a few head of cattle.

This is where you have to rent in big blocks to a lot of people. The gentleman states that he does not want to kill this bill, but that is what he is seeking to do, and that is what he will do if the amendment is adopted.

Mr. KLEBERG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. KLEBERG. The gentleman knows that his statement to the effect that I am trying to kill the bill happens to be merely his choice of language in trying to say something. As a matter of fact, the gentleman also knows when it comes to the real facts and a real interpretation of law, the amendment permits of no other purpose than a definite checking up as against lands of like character.

Mr. FULLER. Suppose a man out there had 40, 60, or 260 acres, and he could rent out a few pieces for a few head of cattle and there is public land. This other land all around would set the price that the Government could ask for the public land.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield to the gentleman from New Mexico. I asked the Solicitor if this amendment would kill the bill, and he said it would.

Mr. CHAVEZ. The Solicitor did not know what he was talking about.

Mr. FULLER. Possibly the gentleman does.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Yes; I do. I am going to vote for the bill.

Mr. FULLER. But at heart the gentleman is against the bill.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Suppose the Santa Fe Railroad owned a thousand acres of land which they want to rent right next door to the public domain which the gentleman is talking about. Suppose the State of New Mexico owns a thousand acres of land adjoining the sand dunes the gentleman is talking about. Why should not the Government charge as much or at least 80 percent for the rental of that property as the State of New Mexico or the Santa Fe Railroad?

Mr. FULLER. Because we have to build this land up. The land is not in condition now. So far as concerns the land in the gentleman's locality, that may be all right; but in the case of most of the land we have to fix up the land, we have to take care of it and preserve it until we can get grass started in order to get anything at all.

Mr. CHAVEZ. And the only way you can do that is not to compete with the man next door?

Mr. FULLER. This is not hurting anyone in the gentleman's country.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Yes; it is. I know of railroad lands adjoining lands of the State of New Mexico, and I know about the lands of the State of New Mexico.

Mr. FULLER. Are they renting the land today?

Mr. CHAVEZ. They are renting them now.

Mr. FULLER. How can they rent the land now when the Government is not getting anything for grazing on the public land, and yet the gentleman says the land is so good that they can get something for grazing purposes?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Every time the State of New Mexico rents the land they get money.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. Does the gentleman withdraw his point of order?

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding what the gentleman from Arkansas said, I am for this bill, and it is not because I do not know anything about the bill or because some solicitor told me about it. I am not taking the solicitor's word. I am taking my own responsibility in this matter. If the amendment of the gentleman from Texas is recalled, it says "lands of a similar character" or "lands located in the same vicinity." What is the detriment in adopting the amendment of the gentleman from Texas? It will only say that the Government cannot compete at a lower rate of rental with a private owner of land.

Mr. PIERCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. PIERCE. Is that not true today? We rent our forest reserves far cheaper than we can rent other lands. We rent them for not enough to pay the taxes.

Mr. CHAVEZ. The forest reserves are the best lands to be found in the country, and the land we are referring to in the public domain and the land the gentleman from Texas is talking about is entirely different from forest land and not worth so much. There should be some way of having the rental value adjusted so there will not be competition one with the other. But when we talk about forest lands we are talking about the best lands in the West, and you cannot make that the test. You would be willing to pay more for the forest lands than you would for land in the public domain.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I heard a lot in committee and here about this matter, and it seems to me this would impose a great difficulty on the Interior Department to attempt to make a new survey in order to determine lands of a like character. After all, then we would be permitting the private landowners to fix the price and we have heard a lot about the poor little fellows. I hope the Committee will vote down this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KLEBERG) there were—ayes 40, noes, 53.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. DEROUEN and Mr. KLEBERG.

The Committee again divided, and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 45, noes, 63.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Interior may permit, under regulations to be prescribed by him, the free grazing within such districts of livestock kept for domestic purposes, and provide, so far as authorized by existing law or laws hereinafter enacted, for the use of timber, stone, gravel, clay, coal, and other deposits by bona fide settlers, miners, residents, and prospectors for minerals, for firewood, fencing, buildings, mining, prospecting, and domestic purposes within areas subject to the provisions of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 5, after the word "domestic", in line 22, strike out the word "purposes" and all of lines 23, 24, and 25 and all of line 1, on page 6, and insert "purposes; and provided that so far as authorized by existing law or laws hereinafter enacted, nothing herein contained shall prevent the use of timber, stone, gravel, clay, coal, and other deposits by miners, prospectors for mineral, bona fide settlers and residents, for firewood, fencing."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That subject to compliance with the rules and regulations governing such grazing district, nothing herein contained shall restrict the granting or use of permits or rights-of-way under existing law; or ingress or egress over the public lands in such districts for all proper and lawful purposes; or prospecting, locating, developing, entering, leasing, or patenting the valuable mineral resources of such districts under law applicable thereto.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 6, strike out lines 9 and 10 and insert the word "Nothing", and in line 14, after the semicolon, strike out the word "or" and insert "nor nothing herein contained shall restrict."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That the Secretary is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to examine and classify any lands within such grazing districts which are more valuable and suitable for the production of agricultural crops than native grasses and forage plants, and to open such lands to homestead entry in tracts not exceeding 160 acres in area. Such lands shall not be subject to settlement or occupation as homesteads until after same have been classified and opened to entry after notice to the permittee by the Secretary of the Interior, and the lands shall remain a part of the grazing district until patents are issued therefor, the homesteader to be, after his entry is allowed, entitled to the possession and use thereof: Provided, That no lands containing water holes, springs, or water supplies developed or improved by the holder of any grazing permit or his predecessor in interest shall be subject to classification, settlement, entry, or patent under the provisions of this section.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 6, line 23, strike out the words "one hundred and sixty" and insert in lieu thereof the words "three hundred and twenty."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WHITE: Page 6, line 17, after the word "thereto", strike out all of section 7.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, I cannot find where anything in this bill will be benefited or helped by section 7.

Section 7 absolutely abrogates the homestead law. Let me read one of its provisions:

Such lands shall not be subject to settlement or occupation as homesteads until after same have been classified and opened to entry after notice to the permittee by the Secretary of the Interior, and the lands shall remain a part of the grazing district until patents are issued therefor.

I would like for some proponent of the bill to explain to me how you are going to prevent erosion or how you are going to protect grazing by the operation of section 7.

I would also call your attention to the fact that by the enactment of section 7 we will abrogate the rights of our veterans that have been earned by their service in defense of their country. They have the right to acquire land under our homestead act, but this section will operate to withdraw this land from entry for the benefit of the big stockmen.

I would also call your attention to the fact that much of the land in the public domain today is fit for cultivation and for homestead if it were only opened up by the building of roads. The land is now isolated, but as the roads are opened up it will come in for cultivation and for the establishment of homes; but under the operation of this act it is left entirely in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior whether anyone will be permitted to make application for a homestead. He has to get permission from someone in Washington, 3,000 miles away, before he can even submit an application to acquire any of this land.

I am going to ask you to protect the homestead law, protect the new man, protect the man that wants the same chance that our forefathers had on public lands, by adopting this amendment and strike out section 7 of the bill.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, I am surprised that the gentleman who offered this amendment to strike out section 7 did not offer to strike out the enacting clause. I hope the House will defeat the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, as I understand it, the proponents of the bill tell us that this is a bill that goes down to the grass roots and gives grazing rights to the little fellow as against the big fellow. That is one kind of legislation that we are somewhat derelict in enacting in this House, and I for one am glad to have an opportunity to support the bill that is going to help the little fellow.

I want to call attention to another phase of the bill, that this will retain it in the Department of the Interior under Secretary Ickes. I am glad to notice that feature of the bill, because God knows that Secretary Wallace has about all he can handle without Congress shouldering any new duties on him. Between his bedtime stories and the religious features daily in the newspaper, I am sure his time is well taken up.

I want to call the attention of the House to two other bills that are up for consideration; that go down to the grass roots and help the little fellow. One is the Frazier-Lemke bill for which we are trying to get enough signatures to bring it out on the floor for consideration, as we did the Patman bonus bill.

The other bill is the McLeod bill, which will pay back to the depositors of banks in the Federal Reserve System their deposits.

I today have introduced an amendment to that bill, which Mr. McLEOD has agreed to accept, that will include all defunct banking institutions in the United States. In my State we have 300 State banks that are closed. It will include them. We will pay back all the deposits in those closed institutions and give the debtors 10 years to liquidate their obligations.

That will pay back thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars to poor working people and bankrupt farmers, taken away from them by racketeering and crooked bankers. We will refund the poor widow's money and benefit all the depositors in these closed institutions.

Mr. GREEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. GREEN. I have introduced a bill, which has gone to the Committee on Banking and Currency, which provides not only for the payment to depositors in closed national banks but in State banks also. I consider the latter provision highly important, because, after all, the depositors in the State banks are in need of their money just as much as the depositors in national banks.

Mr. TRUAX. Has the gentleman signed the petition to discharge the committee on the McLeod bill?

Mr. MAY. Which one of the classes the gentleman mentions is on the range in this bill—the creditors or the debtors?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, I am willing to put the debtors on, so far as I am concerned. I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on this question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, this bill is based on the McLeod bill, H.R. 3843, which proposes to pay off depositors in all defunct national banks and State banks which were affiliated with the Federal Reserve System. The McLeod bill makes no provision for the depositors of defunct State banks not affiliated with the Federal Reserve System. In Ohio this will mean that nearly 300 banks, a major portion of them located in the rural communities, will receive no help whatsoever, but both depositors and debtors will be left to the tender mercies of Ohio's parody of a banking superintendent, Ira G. Fulton.

I personally know of many State banks that would pay out at least 90 cents on the dollar if given a real chance to liquidate; both depositors and debtors would be taken care of.

You will note that under the provisions of my bill the Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall make available to the receivers or conservators of defunct banks Government funds immediately upon application as payment for their assets. Then the conservators or receivers must arrange immediate disbursement of such funds, prorated to depositors of such banks. The assets which are purchased shall be liquidated by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation over a period of 10 years.

Thus you can see that this bill provides the greatest relief yet proposed for those thousands of farmers and unemployed workmen and small business men who in times of prosperity borrowed money from these banks and now, because of the prolonged depression, are without incomes and without jobs. No greater ray of hope could burst upon this country of ours than the mere knowledge that these unfortunates instead of lying awake at night awaiting for the rap of the sheriff upon the door to sell them out will be given 10 years in which to pay off their loan.

This loan and the assets of these banks will be liquidated on a rising market instead of a falling one. Everyone must agree that we are either now on the bottom or ascending the upper grade. Bank assets that are now considered worthless will in 5 years from now, 10 years from now, in many, many cases be worth 100 percent on the dollar.

It may be said by some that State banks are not entitled to Federal relief because they were not affiliated with the Federal Reserve System. My answer to that is that the so-called "affiliation" with the United States Government, such as having a gilded sign in the window, "This bank belongs to the national bank system", was a fraud and snare to depositors, and in thousands of cases meant nothing. It meant no more than banks in country towns of 1,000 to 2,500 to have in their windows a gilded sign proclaiming that they were members of the State Banking Association.

If the Government, which, after all, is merely all the people, should pay off depositors in national banks, should pay off depositors in all banks, in all banking associations, trust companies, savings banks, and other banking institutions organized under the laws of any State, it would not be doing more than to render simple justice to hundreds of thousands of its best citizens who were mulcted, milked, robbed, and defrauded by the big bank racketeers and Wall Street pirates. [Applause.]

My bill, which was introduced today, provides that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and directed to purchase and acquire from the receivers and/or conservators of banks (including national banking associations, and banks, banking associations, trust companies, savings banks, and other banking institutions organized under the laws of any State or located in the District of Columbia) all remaining assets of such closed banks. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation, upon application by the receivers and/or conservators of such closed banks, and upon receipt of such remaining assets, shall immediately make available to such receivers and/or conservators, as payment for such assets, funds sufficient to pay in full the balance due of the total deposit liability of such closed national banks.

It further provides that upon the transfer of their remaining assets to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and upon receipt of the funds received as payment therefor, the receivers and/or conservators of such closed banks shall immediately arrange to disburse such funds pro rata to the depositors of such banks.

Also, it specifies that the assets so purchased shall be liquidated by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and, with the exception of assets in the form of unsecured notes, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall allow debtors a period of not to exceed 10 years in which to pay their indebtedness as evidenced by such assets. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall have full discretion concerning terms of liquidation of assets in the form of unsecured notes and may, when it deems such a course advisable, insist upon such terms of payment and such additional security from the debtor as it may deem necessary.

Moreover, there are further provisions in this bill that, regardless of any previous contract or agreement on the part of any person, the rate of interest paid to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation on such assets by the debtors shall be reduced to 4 percent per annum, and that for the purposes of this act any statute of limitations shall be waived and held not to apply to any transaction referred to or covered by provisions of this act. Nothing herein contained, however, shall prevent any debtor from anticipating payment on any such indebtedness. [Applause.]

I am informed by officials in the Treasury Department that practically 90 percent of the deposits in defunct banks are in the amounts of $10,000 or less. I am also advised that at least 80 percent of these deposits are deposits of $2,500 or less. Thus, we see that this bill does go down to the grass roots and relieves people who actually need relief.

A careful survey indicates that there is only a comparatively small number of large banking institutions that have collapsed, as compared with the tremendous number of smaller banks. In Ohio the two big failures were the Union Trust of Cleveland, and the Guardian Trust of Cleveland. These banks were operating under State charter and were affiliated with the Federal Reserve System, but again we find that thousands of the depositors in these two giant financial institutions were poor people with accounts of $2,500 or less.

In nearly 300 State banks that failed, and are now undergoing a liquidating process by a racketeering State superintendent of banks, appointed by Gov. George White, who refuses to remove this superintendent even though thousands have petitioned and have demanded his removal, we can say that 95 percent of the depositors in these banks are small depositors, and that their deposits represented their life savings. It is these people that we are relieving through the enactment into law of my bill and the McLeod bill. [Applause.]

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. Yes.

Mr. PIERCE. Will the gentleman tell us how much it will cost to pay off these depositors?

Mr. TRUAX. It will not cost four and a half billion dollars that we have already paid to the big bank racketeers and railroads and insurance companies and the 36 percent mortgage-loan sharks.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. The gentleman proposes to take care of the bank losses. How about the other losses, the personal losses?

Mr. TRUAX. I am going to take care of the depositors. And I ask the gentleman whether or not he has signed the petition on the McLeod bill?

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. I am asking the gentleman about the bill.

Mr. TRUAX. When the gentleman signs the petition I will give him an answer.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Then I am afraid the gentleman will never have an opportunity to make that answer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That where such action will promote the purposes of the district or facilitate its administration, the Secretary be, and he hereby is, authorized, in his discretion, to accept on behalf of the United States any lands within the exterior boundaries of a district as a gift, or, when public interests will be benefited thereby, he is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to accept on behalf of the United States title to any lands within the exterior boundaries of said grazing district and in exchange therefor to issue patent for not to exceed an equal value of grazing district land or of unreserved surveyed public land in the same county or if any suitable lands cannot be found in the county, in any other part of the same State: Provided, That before any such exchange shall be effected, notice of the contemplated exchange, describing the lands involved, shall be published once each week for 4 successive weeks in some newspaper of general circulation in the county or counties in which may be situated the lands to be accepted, and in the same manner in some like newspaper published in any county in which may be situated any lands to be given in such exchange; lands conveyed to the United States under this act shall, upon acceptance of title, become public lands and parts of the grazing district within whose exterior boundaries they are located: Provided further, That either party to an exchange may make reservations of minerals, easements, or rights of use, the values of which shall be duly considered in determining the values of the exchanged lands. Where reservations are made in lands conveyed to the United States, the right to enjoy them shall be subject to such reasonable conditions respecting ingress and egress and the use of the surface of the land as may be deemed necessary by the Secretary of the Interior. Where mineral reservations are made in lands conveyed by the United States, it shall be so stipulated in the patent, and any person who acquires the right to mine and remove the reserved mineral deposits may enter and occupy so much of the surface as may be required for all purposes incident to the mining and removal of the minerals therefrom, and may mine and remove such minerals, upon payment to the owner of the surface for damages caused to the land and improvements thereon.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 7, line 21, strike out "county or if any suitable lands cannot be found in the county, in any other part of the same."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. That, except as provided in sections 9 and 11 hereof, all moneys received under the authority of this act shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts, but 25 percent of all moneys received from each grazing district during any fiscal year is hereby made available for expenditure by the Secretary of the Interior for the construction, purchase, or maintenance of range improvements, and an additional 25 percent of the money received from each grazing district during any fiscal year shall be paid at the end thereof by the Secretary of the Treasury to the State in which said grazing district is situated, to be expended as the State legislature may prescribe for the benefit of public schools and public roads of the county or counties in which the grazing district is situated: Provided, That if any grazing district is in more than one State or county, the distributive share to each from the proceeds of said district shall be proportional to its area therein.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 10, line 4, strike out "25" and insert "50."

Page 10, line 9, after the word "benefit" strike out "of public schools and public roads."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the committee amendments. This bill will go down in history as the 175-percent bill. I suppose that the folks who got up the bill to start with had in mind that they would turn 25 percent over to the State in which the grazing district is situated and 25 percent to the Secretary of the Interior. Then they raise that 25 percent that was to go to the State to 50 percent. By this amendment they do not take into consideration the situation that they have created by section 11, and they provide for the distribution of 100 percent of all the money that is raised out of the Indian lands which had been ceded to the United States, but they do not except the part that was raised and to be distributed under section 10, so that they are going to throw out on Indian lands 175 percent of all the money that they take in under the language they have here.

Mr. KELLER. Why not make it 200 percent?

Mr. TABER. I do not know, but I suppose the way things are going we may as well make it 1,000 percent. It does not seem to make any difference to the Congress. It is time that we woke up and stopped this sort of thing. I hope the Committee will vote down this amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman probably is not conversant with the new-fashioned method of bookkeeping.

Mr. TABER. I do not know whether it is deflation or devaluation or what it is, but it is emptying the Federal Treasury, and I think we ought to stop this sort of thing.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. TABER. Oh, I have an amendment that I want to offer here.

Mr. FULLER. I insist upon my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from New York concluded his remarks?

Mr. TABER. I have not yielded the floor. Under the circumstances, I am going to offer an amendment, whether the committee amendment be agreed to or not, that will prevent any money being paid out of the Federal Treasury after it once gets in without an appropriation and an annual review from Congress. I think it is ridiculous that we should go along in this way. I hope the committee will fix up that amendment so that they will at least not pay out 175 percent when they go along through. I shall yield the floor now, but I hope that we will limit this bill so that the money to be paid out will have to be appropriated each year, so that we will know what we are doing as we go along.

Mr. DEROUEN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Louisiana is recognized.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to close all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the chairman of the committee wish to be recognized?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The chairman of the committee was recognized, the gentleman from Louisiana.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana is recognized.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which was sent to us by the Committee on Appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee amendments are now pending, and we should dispose of the committee amendments first. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, I made a motion to close all debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman was not recognized for that purpose, because the gentleman from Louisiana rose at the same time and the Chair recognized him.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, when this bill was presented to the committee and recommended by the Secretary of the Interior and recommended by the Secretary of Agriculture, it contained on line 4, "25 percent." Now it is increased to 50 percent to be turned over to the States. That has been done in committee after the bill had been recommended by the various departments, and it is only a committee recommendation and is not the recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture. It is not the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior, and the President of the United States knows nothing about it. I think the chairman of the committee will bear me out in this.

I think it is high time that we should conserve the resources of this country. We are going to reach down into the Federal Treasury and pay for the administration of these lands. I think it is an injustice to the country at large because of the fact that there will not be enough revenues from rentals to administer the operation of this bill, and you will have to ask for an appropriation from the Federal Treasury. You will have to seek new taxes. You will continually ask Congress to administer this bill. I think it is wrong. I do not believe that the committee in any sense has any right to present this bill to you under the guise that it has been recommended by the Departments on a 50-percent payment to the States as their share of the receipts, instead of 25 percent. I think the chairman of the committee will bear me out on this, that it is a committee action and not a recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture nor the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, line 9, strike out "of public schools and public roads."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DEROUEN for the committee: On page 10, line 14, after the word "therein", insert the following: "Provided further, That no such money shall be used or made available for the purposes hereinbefore set forth until appropriated by Congress."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. That all moneys received for grazing on Indian lands ceded to the United States for disposition under the public-land laws, less 15 percent for range improvements, shall be deposited to the credit of the Indians pending final disposition under applicable laws, treaties, or agreements, the applicable public-land laws as to said Indian ceded lands within a district created under this act shall continue in operation, except that each and every application for nonmineral title to said lands in a district created under this act shall be allowed only if in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior the land is of the character suited to disposal through the act under which application is made and such entry and disposal will not affect adversely the best public interest.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 10, after the figures in line 15, strike out the remainder of line 15, all of lines 16 and 17, and the word "improvements" in line 18, and insert the following: "That 25 percent of all moneys received from each grazing district on Indian lands ceded to the United States for disposition under the public-land laws during any fiscal year is hereby made available for expenditure by the Secretary of the Interior for the construction, purchase, or maintenance of range improvements; and an additional 25 percent of the money received from grazing during each fiscal year shall be paid at the end thereof by the Secretary of the Treasury to the State in which said lands are situated, to be expended as the State legislature may prescribe for the benefit of public schools and public roads of the county or counties in which such grazing lands are situated. And the remaining 50 percent of all money received from such grazing lands."

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DEROUEN to the committee amendment: On page 10, line 18, amend by inserting after the word "that", the following: "when appropriated by Congress."

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 18, after the word "interest", insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That in such grazing districts established in Indian ceded lands, the Indians shall be classified as preferential applicants for grazing privileges, and surplus range may be allotted to the use of others only after the reasonable needs of the Indians for additional grazing lands have been met, but no settlement or occupation of such lands shall be permitted until 90 days after allowance of an application."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 12. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to cooperate with any department of the Government in carrying out the purposes of this act, and in the coordination of range administration, particularly where the same stock grazes part time in a grazing district and part time in a national forest or other reservation.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RICH: Page 12, line 6, after the word "reservation", insert a colon and the following: "and that the Forest Service now in the Department of Agriculture be transferred to the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior."

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I offered this amendment to this section 12 as a matter of administration. I believe that the administration of this bill can best be had if we have the forestry department transferred to the Department of the Interior. The forestry department was formerly in the Department of the Interior. Some years ago it was transferred to the Department of Agriculture. If we place jurisdiction of all these lands in the Department of the Interior, also the forestry department under the supervision of the Department of the Interior, we will stop this dual control and we will make it a good business move and a matter of economy for the Government. I hope that we put some business into this Government and try to administer these affairs of government in an economical and sane way, and I know it will be to the best interest of the taxpayers if we adopt this amendment. Why not make it a businesslike way of administration at least? Why fear these departments when we know we are doing the right thing in the administration of these grazing lands under the supervision of the Federal Government?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DEROUEN: At the end of the bill, page 12, after line 6, insert a new section, to be known as section 13, reading as follows:

"SEC. 13. That the President of the United States, upon the joint recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture, be, and he is hereby, authorized to reserve by proclamation and place under national-forest administration any unappropriated public lands lying within watersheds forming a part of the national forests which, in his opinion, can best be administered in connection with existing national-forest administration units, and to place under the Interior Department administration any lands within national forests, principally valuable for grazing, which, in his opinion, can best be administered under the provisions of this act: Provided, That such reservations or transfers shall not interfere with legal rights acquired under any public land laws so long as such rights are legally maintained. Lands placed under the national-forest administration under the authority of this act shall be subject to all the laws and regulations relating to national forests, and lands placed under the Interior Department administration shall be subject to all public-land laws and regulations applicable to grazing districts created under authority of this act."

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment to inquire of the chairman of the committee whether this amendment was considered by the committee.

Mr. DEROUEN. No, not this one; but the committee considered one nearly like it.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. The committee refused to consider the proposed amendment submitted to it along this line.

Mr. DEROUEN. That was because the Departments could not agree between themselves about it, but the Departments have agreed on this amendment, and I submit it not as a committee amendment but as my own amendment, with the recommendation of the authorities of both the Interior Department and the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. But the committee never passed on this amendment.

Mr. DEROUEN. Not on this one, I so stated.

Mr. HASTINGS. But the Departments recommend it now?

Mr. DEROUEN. The Departments both recommend it now.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RICH) there were—yeas 90, noes 36.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER of Wyoming. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CARTER of Wyoming: On page 12, add a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 14. That this act shall not become effective in any State until 60 days after the approval by the legislature of such State; and each such approving State, in its discretion, may designate and authorize one or more representatives or officials of said State with whom the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to make and enter into suitable agreement for the cooperative administration of public grazing upon said public lands of the United States, and the lands owned by, or subject to the control of, said State or any political subdivision thereof, which shall be subject to such rules and regulations as shall be agreed upon and promulgated by both the Secretary of the Interior and said State."

Mr. CARTER of Wyoming. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is the amendment that was in the original bill introduced by Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado on the 10th of March a year ago. It is the same section that was in the Colton bill which passed this House. It is the amendment that has been approved by the conference of western governors that was held in Salt Lake City 2 or 3 weeks ago; and it is in keeping with the policies of the Committee on the Conservation and Administration of the Public Domain after extensive hearings in the public-land States and before congressional committees. They decided that a provision similar to this one should be in the law, and I hope it will pass.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, this is the same section that destroyed the other bill. Certainly we are all aware that the gentleman from Wyoming wishes to destroy the bill and he offers the same section that has brought trouble here for years. It is just one of those amendments that will destroy the entire bill.

I hope the Committee will not accept it.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Following my discussion of this bill a few minutes ago my very distinguished and usually affable colleague from the Third District of Oregon [Mr. MARTIN] made two remarks in the course of his own speech to which I take exception.

I asked the gentleman at the time to yield to me, in order to correct him, but he declined. Whether this was on account of stubbornness or pressure of time I do not know. But he did decline. So I am obliged to offer this pro forma amendment in order to correct him before the debate closes.

The first remark to which I take exception is the gentleman's assertion that most of the public land in Oregon "is not worth a damn." I call the gentleman's attention to what he ought to know without being told, and that is that the public land in the First District of Oregon, which I represent, is valued at $50,000,000 and that it embraces about 25 percent of the entire area of western Oregon. When this land was in private ownership it paid an annual tax of $480,000 to our State. There is practically no public land in the gentleman's district, and in eastern Oregon much of the public domain is of comparatively little value. But when the gentleman says that most of the public land in the State is not worth a damn, then he is either ignorant of the facts or extremely careless in his language. I call his attention to the fact that he said "most of the public land." I trust he corrects his statement in this regard at least when he looks over the transcript of his remarks.

The other remark I objected to was that because I opposed this bill that I was a "standpatter." The gentleman knows perfectly well that I am not a standpatter as that word is used in its turpitudenous political sense. And every one else knows it. By a standpatter my colleague means a member of a political party who votes for every measure offered by the party, regardless of whether the measure is good or bad. It is my distinguished colleague who does that. Not I. Only Democrats do that at this session. Not Republicans. The gentleman is perfectly aware that I am opposing this bill because it is wrong and not because it is an administration measure.

That is all I care to say, and I would not have said this were it not for the fact that I did not want my colleague's remarks to go in the RECORD unchallenged by reason of his refusal to yield to me at the time he made the remarks. My friend, the General, is an admirable fellow most of the time, and I admire him greatly, aside from his occasional stubbornness. This is evidently one of his stubborn days.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the Committee automatically rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLOOM, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill

H.R. 6462, pursuant to House Resolution 307 he reported the same back to the House with sundry amendments adopted by the Committee.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered on the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage.

Is a separate vote demanded upon any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT) there were—ayes 84, noes 31.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently, there is not a quorum present.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock p.m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, April 11, 1934, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 11, 1934

(Legislative day of Wednesday, Mar. 28, 1934)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock noon, on the expiration of the recess.

ILLINOIS PRIMARY ELECTION

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask that there be inserted in the RECORD a press report having relation to the primary election held in the State of Illinois yesterday.

There being no objection, the item was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW DEAL, RAINEY ARE ENDORSED BY SMASHING VOTE IN ILLINOIS

CHICAGO, April 10.—A smashing victory for administration new-deal policies was claimed tonight as returns from the Illinois primary election revealed an unusually large number of Democratic ballots.

Candidates for Democratic nominations appeared on the basis of incomplete returns to have drawn a majority of the total vote for the first time in a primary in more than 50 years in traditionally Republican Illinois.

Late returns indicated a total vote of approximately 1,750,000. The Chicago vote was about 750,000.

Speaker of the House HENRY T. RAINEY, of the Tenth District, who charged that Wall Street had poured money into his district to beat him, apparently had snowed under his opponent for the nomination, James H. Kirby, a farmer and former State legislator.

Michael L. Igoe, Chicago, former minority leader of the House, and Representative MARTIN BRENNAN, Bloomington, both had a 6 to 1 lead over their nearest opponent for the two Democratic nominations for Congressmen at large. Both candidates were endorsed by the regular party organization. WALTER NESBIT, the other incumbent, was running a poor third. The 16 other Democratic incumbents, however, appeared to have won renomination.

Representative JAMES SIMPSON, Jr., millionaire Winnetka sportsman, was running almost even with Ralph E. Church, of Evanston, for the Republican nomination in the Tenth District. The heavy vote for Church was seen as a Republican endorsement of the Democratic administration. SIMPSON was opposed by Secretary of the Interior Ickes, who charged him with failure to understand the N.R.A.

Resolution by Aldermen Pearson, Swanson, Bastis, Bank, and Kauth petitioning the Federal Government to continue the Civil Works Administration program in Minneapolis, and declaring the opposition of the City Council of the City of Minneapolis to the substitution of the Relief Works Administration work program for such Civil Works Administration program, and appointing a committee of the City Council of the City of Minneapolis to present such matters to the Federal Government

Resolved by the City Council of the City of Minneapolis, That, whereas it appears that several thousand workers employed under the Civil Works Administration in the city of Minneapolis are opposed to the discontinuance of such Civil Works Administration program and that the workers are opposed to the substitution of the Relief Works Administration program for such Civil Works Administration program: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the City Council of the City of Minneapolis, That it hereby petitions the Federal Government to continue the Civil Works Administration program in the city of Minneapolis, the rate of compensation to be paid the workers to be the regular union scale paid in the city of Minneapolis for such work, the compensation to be paid in cash, and the workers not to be required to work more than 30 hours each week; and be it further

Resolved, That the City Council of the City of Minneapolis hereby declares its opposition to the Relief Works Administration program as being in effect forced labor, it requiring the recipients of public relief to work out their relief, which is entirely inadequate, and the proposed program allowing 10 percent additional in cash and 15 percent in supplies being entirely insufficient to give the relief workers a fair standard of living. The City Council of the City of Minneapolis desires to vigorously oppose the theory of forced labor; and be it further

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 7835) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I thought there was pending the amendment relative to the tax on oils.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] offered just before the Senate took a recess last evening, which is to strike out on page 85, line 16, the words:

Despite the provisions of section 117 (a), 100 percent of the gain so recognized shall be taken into account in computing net income.

The Chair understands that is the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HARRISON. Will not the Senator from Pennsylvania withhold that amendment for a while and reoffer it later? The Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS], who is opposed to the amendment, is not now upon the floor, and I do not feel that we ought to take action in his absence, under the circumstances.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thought the understanding yesterday was that we simply deferred the vote on the oil amendment until this morning, and, pending that, we went on with other amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The RECORD does not so show. It shows that the amendment was passed over until today, and, in the meantime, the Senator from Pennsylvania had pending, when the Senate took a recess yesterday afternoon, the amendment which the Chair has just stated.

Mr. NORRIS and Mr. MCNARY addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi very kindly, upon my request yesterday, allowed the oil amendment to go over. I have been in conference with quite a number of farm leaders; I have devoted some time to the preparation of an amendment to the committee amendment, and, when we get to the oil provision—I have no desire to interfere with the Senator from Pennsylvania—I should like to offer the amendment to the amendment and have it then considered. In the meantime, after that was laid aside, the Senator from Pennsylvania offered an amendment which I understand the Chair to state is now pending.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, it was the intention of the chairman of the committee, following the request of the Senator from Nebraska, to lay aside the oil amendment until this morning and to ask that it be taken up this morning, that being one of the most controversial matters in the bill. I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania, who had offered his amendment in the meanwhile, will withhold his amendment for the present and let us dispose of the provision relating to oil. I ask unanimous consent that that may be done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like to say a word for myself. The amendment which I have submitted could have been disposed of by this time if the Senate had considered it. I am compelled to leave the city tonight to be gone 2 days. While I want in every way to help the Senator from Mississippi, because I sympathize with him in the ordeal which he is undergoing, yet I do want to have an opportunity before I leave the city to have action on this amendment and one other amendment. However, in order to accommodate the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], who has to leave the city soon, I now withdraw my amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. I will try to cooperate with the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi as modified.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. The amendment of the Senator from Mississippi is a substitute for the committee amendment. I take it that an amendment to the committee amendment would take precedence over the substitute because my amendment to the committee amendment seeks to perfect the language of the committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands, however, that the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi has been perfected and is now ready to be submitted to the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska offers an amendment to the committee amendment, which will be stated.

Mr. NORRIS. I am offering a perfecting amendment, to perfect the language of the committee amendment, which the Senator from Mississippi seeks to strike out.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 214, at the end of line 15, to add the following proviso:

Provided, That all taxes collected under this subsection upon the products of the Philippine Islands shall not be covered into the general fund of the Treasury of the United States, but shall be held as a separate fund and paid into the treasury of the Philippine Islands. If the Philippine government by any law provides for any subsidy to be paid to the producers of copra, coconut oil, or allied products, then this proviso shall at once become null and void.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I take this opportunity to thank the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] for his kindness in agreeing to lay aside the oil amendment until today.

There has been presented by the committee amendment a very serious question in which the farmers of the United States are particularly interested. They are all very much worried about bringing into this country copra and coconut oil, which interferes with the sale of fats and oils of all kinds produced here in America from cattle, hogs, and so forth. A tariff tax is levied upon such products when they come here in the regular way, but the tariff tax does not apply to products from the Philippine Islands, with the result that producers there are able to escape such a tax.

Within the last year or so the administration has started on a farm-relief program. We have limited the production of all, or practically all, farm products. The farmer, concerned with that limitation, finds that fats and oils imported from the Philippine Islands do not have to pay a tax under the tariff law, and therefore, without any tax of any kind levied upon them, come in competition with the fats and oils produced in this country. Of course with reference to oils produced elsewhere and imported into the United States there is a tariff tax.

It seems to me we are confronted with the fact that it is very difficult to do justice both to our wards, the Filipinos, and to the American farmer. When the farmer finds himself thus handicapped, he is justified in the belief that he must have some protection against the importation of coconut oil and copra from the Philippine Islands which, under existing law, can be brought in without the payment of any tariff tax.

As a Senator very eloquently said yesterday, if we have to do an injustice either to the Filipinos or to the American farmer, it would be better to do that injustice to the Filipinos rather than to the American farmer. It seems to me that unless we amend the proposal of the committee, we are confronted with a situation in which we must do an injustice to one or the other. I think I speak the sentiment of the Senate when I say that when we hold the Philippine Islands without their consent under our Government, we have no moral right to levy a tariff tax upon the products of those islands as we do upon the products of foreign countries.

The processing tax which was inserted in the bill by the House provided for a tax of 5 cents a pound upon coconut oil and copra. Its effect, if unmodified, would be the same as though we had levied a tariff tax. The Government would make money out of it because the tax would be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

As one who is in favor of giving independence to the Philippine Islands just as quickly as we possibly can, I voted for every amendment to the Philippine independence bill that had a tendency to bring about that end. Those of us who felt as I did favored those amendments, and then we voted for the bill as it finally became a law.

Mr. President, my amendment in the first place provides that the revenue derived from this tax shall not be covered into the Treasury of the United States but shall be held in a separate fund and paid to the Philippine government. The objection first raised was and is that the Philippine government could still grant a bonus or subsidy in the same amount to the producers of coconut oil and copra in the Philippines, and thus nullify the effect of our tax. In other words, if the Philippine government should do that, our tax would be absolutely of no effect so far as the importation of coconut oil and copra from the Philippines is concerned. It would not help us and it would not help the American farmer. The Philippine producer of the coconut oil and copra would be able, with a bonus of the same amount as the tax, to sell as he did before, and the American farmer would get no benefit from the tax.

To meet that objection, it is provided in my amendment that if the Philippine government at any time shall grant a bonus or subsidy for the production of coconut oil or copra, then the provision will at once become null and void and of no effect, and the producers will stand under the amendment of the committee just as it was reported.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas and Mr. CONNALLY addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield first to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think we all realize the difficulties that are inherent in this subject; but I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska to the fact that his amendment would not provide any exemption as to coconut oil produced in the Philippine Islands. It would not give any benefit to those producers. The benefits would accrue to the Philippine government.

It is the contention of those who have raised the issue here that, in view of the position the United States occupies with respect to the control of the Philippines, it is unjust to impose a tax on their producers. This would be just as much a tax on the producers as if it were a tariff tax, as I see it; and the provision in the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska which forbids the Philippine government to give the benefit of this tax to the Philippine producers would leave us in the same attitude in which we now find ourselves.

It is true that the tax would inure to the Philippine government under the Senator's amendment, but it would not inure to the benefit of the Philippine trade. It would be just as much a restriction on that trade as if we levied a tariff tax of equal amount.

I merely make that suggestion to the Senator from Nebraska, knowing that he is impressed with the thought, as he stated in the beginning of his remarks, that we ought not, while exercising sovereign power over the Philippines, to impose a duty on their products imported into the United States. It seems to me that in that regard the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska leaves the matter just where we find it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think there is something in what the Senator from Arkansas has said.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I will ask the Senator to let me first answer the Senator from Arkansas.

In the first place, I doubt whether it is possible to draft an amendment here that will be technically just to everybody. We are now confronted with a situation where, unless we shall do something in regard to copra and coconut oil, we will strike a very hard blow at the American farmer. If we should take this money and put it in our Treasury, I think we would be unjustifiably interfering with the Philippine Islands and the people of the Philippine Islands; but we are turning it back to them. It is true that the amendment stipulates that they shall not provide for a subsidy for the production in the Philippine Islands of coconut oil and copra; but it is likewise true that the government of the Philippine Islands gets the benefit of all the tax, every cent of it. It all goes back to the government of the Philippine Islands, the people of the Philippines.

They ought to realize, it seems to me, if they want to be fair, that we have a problem here at home and that unless we do something of this kind, we are going to bring a great injustice upon the American farmer whom we have now compelled by law to limit his crop production; while confronting him, at the same time we have thus limited him with absolutely free importations from the Philippine Islands of these fats which are coming into this country in enormous quantities, by the millions of pounds, and the importations are increasing rapidly and will increase more rapidly in the future. So it seems to me that when the Philippine government receives the benefit of all the money that is paid under this tax, the people of the islands ought to be willing to have this done, realizing that the United States Government must protect the farmers of our country, or else it means to a great many of them absolute ruin.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas and Mr. MURPHY addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield first to the Senator from Arkansas. Then I will yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, there would seem to be a measure of consistency in the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], which in effect proposes to limit, according to what is apparently a fair standard, the importation into the United States of coconut oil from the Philippine Islands. I realize that that would not fully meet the demand that is being made for legislation on the subject, but I have been unable to find any way in which it can be done without doing injustice.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi to the amendment of the committee, in my judgment, leaves us just where we started, because the quota he has fixed in his amendment practically leaves the American farmer facing this coconut-oil importation without any defense whatever, as I see it, for the amount that can come in under the amendment is so large that it would absorb to a great extent the American market, and the limitation would not do anybody any good.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator that, while the amendment does exempt from tax 520,000,000 pounds, which is the 5-year average—which, I may say, is opposed by the War Department and by the Filipino government, as I shall show, but it seems to me it is fair—there are some 300,000,000 pounds plus of coconut oil that come in from other parts of the world than the Philippines, and we impose the tax on every other kind of oil that comes in, which, it seems to me, will give a measurable benefit.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. Let me say, as to coconut oil and copra that come in from other countries outside of the Philippine Islands, that the proposal does not affect them at all. They are subject to the tax. They are subject to our tariff laws, as the Philippines will be when they become absolutely independent; and the fact that the Philippines are under our flag is the reason why we are laboring under the great difficulty that now confronts us.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. NORRIS. I shall have to yield first to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], who sought to interrupt me some time ago.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator a question about his amendment. Suppose the Filipino government should say, "We will take this tax, and then we will just pay it back to the producer."

Mr. NORRIS. They cannot do it under the amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator's amendment would prohibit that?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONNALLY. In other words, they could neither use the tax as a subsidy, nor could they grant an independent subsidy?

Mr. NORRIS. They could not do either one.

Mr. CONNALLY. If that be true, I cannot see why the amendment would not have the effect of aiding the domestic producer, because the tax would be paid, and it is immaterial from his viewpoint what is done with it, whether it is thrown in the sewer or given to the Philippine government.

Mr. NORRIS. The Philippine government will get the money. They can use it in any way they want to use it, except as prohibited by the amendment itself; and that only goes so far as to say that, while they are getting this money, they must not by law provide for giving a subsidy to the production in the Philippine Islands of copra and coconut oil.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. NORRIS. Let me yield first to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY], who has been trying for some time to get my attention.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] has asked the question I had in mind.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. Very well. I yield, then, to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, has the Senator considered the question whether we have power to levy a tax by a law which on its face states that the revenue is not to be taken for the American Treasury, but for the treasury of an alien government?

Mr. NORRIS. No; in my judgment, we probably could not do that. I have never thought of it before; but, at first blush, I should say that if we gave the tax to an alien government, there would be something in that suggestion. We are not doing that, however. We are giving it to our wards. They are now under our Government, and we are supreme as to them. We can pass any law in that regard that we desire to pass.

Mr. REED. I grant that; but I do not believe that the Federal Government has the constitutional power to levy a tax for the benefit of any other government, whether it is the government of the city of Omaha or the government of the Philippine Islands or a government set up under any other system.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not agree with the Senator. I do not believe that any constitutional provision is involved here by which this tax would be nullified; and we have done the same thing in our tariff laws. We have given back, in some instances, tariffs that have been levied.

Mr. REED. To other governments?

Mr. NORRIS. No; not to other governments.

Mr. REED. Then I have another question to ask the Senator: Why is it any more unfair to the Filipinos to put a processing tax on one of their agricultural products than it is unfair to our own farmers to put a processing tax on their products?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not think it would be any more unfair.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. In just a moment. The Philippine people are not included in the law, however. They are expressly exempted from the law that enables the Secretary of the Treasury to put a processing tax upon the people of the United States.

Mr. REED. I do not agree with the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. I have the law here.

Mr. REED. The law says that no tariff shall be put on their products, and this is not a tariff. It is a domestic tax, an excise.

Mr. NORRIS. I will say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that I have the law here on my desk.

Mr. FESS. The Agricultural Adjustment Act exempts them.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I found last night that the A.A.A. Act expressly exempts the Philippine Islands.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; it is done by express statute. I have it here on my desk.

Mr. REED. We could extend the A.A.A. by an amendment to cover the Philippines.

Mr. NORRIS. I think probably we could.

Mr. BORAH. That is really what we are doing in this bill.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit one more interruption, I cannot see why we owe any higher degree of fairness to the Filipino than we do to our own citizens.

Mr. NORRIS. That is just what I say. I agree to that.

Mr. REED. While it is true that many of these processing taxes are refunded to the American farmer, it is equally true that many of them are not.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. REED. Take, for example, the tax which has been put on paper napkins and the tax which has been put on jute bags, in order to protect cotton. Those taxes are not refunded to anybody; and why those American citizens should be taxed and be expected not to complain, and then we should be so tender of the Filipino I cannot see.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield there?

Mr. NORRIS. I will yield in just a moment.

The law exempts the Philippine Islands. That may have been wrong, but it is now the law. They are expressly exempted in the act that empowers the Secretary of Agriculture to levy a processing tax upon the American farmer.

The Senator says we ought to levy this tax on the Filipino farmer just the same. The Senator may be right, but we have not now the law under which we can do that. We might amend the law and do it. In my judgment, it is simply tantamount to saying, "Your remedy is not right. Let us take another one." I agree that probably a law might be drawn which would meet the proposition in the way the Senator has suggested, but we are not now confronted with that situation.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I wish to point out the distinction between the effect of the law upon the Filipino and upon the American farmer. Before I point that out, I want to say that I recognize that the Senator from Nebraska is trying to be fair with both peoples in the philosophy of his amendment. But may I point out that the processing tax on the American farmer is ostensibly a tax levied for the benefit of the American farmer, while the processing tax levied on the Filipino is a tax, not for the benefit of the Filipino but of the American farmer. If the Filipino were coming in upon the same plane with the American farmer, I would have no protest at all, but as I see it, we are asked to compel him to do something which we do not compel the American farmer to do, while they are all Americans.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. O'MAHONEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. May I suggest to the Senator from Maryland that while the processing tax is, as he says, "ostensibly" for the benefit of the American farmer, as a practical fact, it would have exactly the same effect upon the American farmer as upon the Filipino.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think there is much in the Senator's contention, but I simply wanted to point out that the purpose is different.

Mr. NORRIS. I think there is something in the contention, but the suggestion that has come from the Senator from Pennsylvania is simply to this effect, as I see it: "I am opposed to your remedy, I am opposed to doing it that way; I want to do it some other way." He may be right about that; there may be a better way, but faced as we are with the pending bill, it would be folly to stop its consideration long enough to frame a statute that would carry it out in the other way. There would be great difficulty. At the time we framed the statute we expressly exempted the Philippine Islands and had in mind as one of the things, the suggestion that has so well been made by the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. REED. The amendment as reported by the Committee on Finance expresses exactly, to my mind, the fair way of accomplishing the desired result. It imposes a processing tax of 3 cents a pound directly on the competing oils.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator's contention, as I see it, is just the same as though we levied a tax on the products of the Philippine Islands. Technically we could do that; legally we could enact that kind of law and enforce it. Morally, it would be wrong. I myself have always opposed the levying of tariffs upon the products of the Philippine Islands, particularly when we take into consideration the fact that we are holding them under our government without their consent. It is so abhorrent to think that under those conditions we should levy a tariff tax that I should like to find some way to help the American farmer without resorting to that kind of a remedy.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I know what the Senator has in mind, and I am in entire sympathy with it; but the trouble is that we are asked to hand back to the Government that which we are to take away from the citizen. It does not seem to me that that meets the proposition of dealing fairly with the people.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, to give the subsidy to the Philippine government does not help their trade; it does not help their production, and it does not help the people directly.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the suggestion made by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] is correct. What is the object of all this legislation? What is the object of all our farm legislation? It is to increase the prices of the products of the farmer. This amendment would have that effect, I admit. It would raise the price to the consumer of these oils. There is no doubt about that. That is the object we have in view. If the Senator's suggestion is correct, then we must let our farmers suffer under this unjust situation, because we cannot meet it without increasing the price to somebody else.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further to me?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. May I point out to the Senator, without discounting the splendid object he has in mind, with which I am very much in accord, that the net effect of this amendment would be to compel the Filipino Legislature, in effect, to levy a tax of 3 cents a pound on coconut oil and copra, whether they wanted to levy it or not, and to use the proceeds in any way they desired?

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, no.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not mean that that is the actual way in which it would be carried out, but it would be the same as if we passed a tariff act levying a tax of 3 cents on those commodities.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not see it in that way. We would prohibit them from giving a bonus upon the production of coconut oil and copra.

Mr. TYDINGS. What I meant to say was that we would put a tax on their products coming into this country, then we would give them back the tax.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. So that in effect, I do not mean actually, but in effect, it would be the same as if we compelled the Philippine Legislature to pass a law levying a tax of 3 cents a pound on copra and coconut oil, to use in any way they wanted, except that they could not use it for the benefit of the coconut grower.

Mr. NORRIS. Under this amendment, if it becomes a law, they can levy a tax if they want to in addition to this; but the levying of the tax is just the opposite of what this proviso prohibits. This proviso says they shall not pay a bonus. If they want to levy a tax and make their producers pay it, that would not be in conflict with this amendment at all.

But the American farmer is faced with the fact that copra and coconut oil from abroad take the place of the fats he produces at such a price that it is conceded he cannot compete with them. If we by law raise the price of the Philippine product and give the money back to the Philippine government, I do not see where they have much reason to find fault with the legislation.

Mr. President, the American farmers are worked up about this proposition. They are taking it in dead earnest, because they realize what effect it would have. I could stand on this floor for hours and tell of the enormous amount of American-produced fats which has been forced out of the market because of the importation of these particular oils. We have recognized that fact by imposing a tariff upon the same kind of production which comes from every foreign country on earth in order to protect the American farmer and protect him from competition that is absolutely ruinous. So the American farmer is worked up about it.

I want to call the attention of the Senate to an organization, composed of the National Grange, the American Farm Bureau, the National Council of Cooperative Associations, the Farmers' National Grain Corporation, and the Agricultural Editors' Association, in session right at this moment. They have been in session for some time, at least, before today. They are worked up about this oil matter which is pending now before the Senate.

This morning the legislative agent of the National Grange, reading the RECORD, and noticing what had been done when this matter was passed over, came to my office, bringing with him the master of the Grange of the State of New Jersey. I had then prepared my amendment in part. He told me of this meeting. After he looked the amendment over, he said he thought it was proper, that he could not see anything wrong about it, that he thought it would meet the situation. However, he said, "I have no authority to approve it unless it is acted on at the meeting now in session, and I want to take a copy of the amendment and go down this morning and present it." He did that; and he came back to me just a few minutes before we convened today, giving me the list I have already read of the organizations participating in the meeting, and said that they had unanimously approved the amendment. They adopted the following resolution:

> At a meeting of the delegates of the National Agricultural Conference in Washington today the following amendment to paragraph (a) of section 602 of the revenue bill, proposed by Senator NORRIS, was unanimously endorsed.

Then follows a correct copy of the amendment which the clerk has read at the desk.

Incidentally I asked the representative of the National Grange, when he brought this to me, whether the Farmers' Union was represented in the meeting, and he said the National Farmers Union was not represented officially; but he gave me the names of the heads of the Farmers Union in some States and said they were there unofficially. We all know that the president of the Farmers Union was suddenly taken away by the hand of death. That organization made no suggestion in the preparation of the amendment, but the fact that, after it was prepared and submitted to them, it met with their entire approval, I think, ought to have great weight with the Members of the Senate in passing on the pending amendment.

The amendment is offered to the committee amendment to the bill. It has nothing to do with some other things, such as, for instance, the amount of the tax. It has nothing to do with the amount that might be provided by another amendment, if the Senator from Mississippi should desire to insert a provision limiting the amount that could come in, or anything of that kind. My amendment is limited to and only has to do with what is contained within its four corners.

Mr. President, I do not believe there is any injustice contained in my amendment. When we shall give the money collected on Philippine products back to the Philippine government, it seems to me we will have compensated them for any wrong that might otherwise have been inflicted. We shall have not taken a penny of the money ourselves, and we shall have protected the American farmer in the only place where, under the law, there is a loophole. The American farmer cannot get protection unless we do something of this kind.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, Senators will realize that this is one of the knottiest problems that has confronted the Senate for a long time. The House provided a tax of 5 cents a pound on these oils and made no exemption with respect to importations from the Philippines, and, therefore, should the amendment which is offered by the Senator from Nebraska be accepted, and no exemption be made, but the production in the Philippines, as well as the production here, be treated alike, with the exception that the amount collected upon the Philippine products should go back to the Philippine government, there will be nothing in conference as to the question of any exemption to the Philippine Islands.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the amendment says nothing about exemption. The amendment would still be open to amendment if the Senator should desire to provide for an exemption.

Mr. HARRISON. I appreciate that the Senator's amendment does not make any exemption, and that is one of the troubles about the Senate committee recommendation. It provided no exemption.

I can appreciate that farm groups are very strongly in favor of something being done, and they would prefer the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska over the amendment which is offered by me. The same groups favored the House amendment which sought to apply the tax without any exception whatever with respect to the Philippines.

But we must look beyond that, and farther than that. I am just as much interested in the farmer as is any other Senator. There is as much cottonseed oil produced in my State as in any other State in the South, with the possible exception of the State of Texas.

We passed the independence act, and in that act we provided in section 6:

> After the date of the inauguration of the government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands trade relations between the United States and the Philippine Islands shall be as now provided by law, subject to the following exceptions.

And it states the exceptions, and in those exceptions were 200,000 long tons of coconut oil annually; and I have added to those 200,000 long tons the 5-year average of copra and coconut oil, which have come in from the Philippine Islands.

The President, in his message to the Congress during the present session, in one paragraph stated:

> May I emphasize that while we desire to grant complete independence at the earliest proper moment, to effect this result without allowing sufficient time for necessary political and economic adjustments would be a definite injustice to the people of the Philippine Islands themselves, little short of a denial of independence itself. To change at this time the economic provisions of the previous law would reflect discredit on ourselves.

Senators, are we going to send to conference and deal with a subject so delicate in character that it might cause the veto of a great revenue bill? With respect to the amendment I offer, while it is opposed by the War Department because it wants no limitations upon the Philippines, and while it is also opposed by other departments and opposed by the Governor General of the Philippine Islands in a cablegram that has just been received by the War Department, which cablegram I shall ask to have read at the desk in a moment, it seems to me the Philippine people have no cause to complain if we make the exemption therein provided and leave the status quo as to the 5-year average of coconut oil and copra coming from the Philippines.

Mr. President, I am going to leave this question entirely to the Senate. I know there is no Senator here who wants to violate what has been agreed to in the Independence Act. I know the Senator from Nebraska does not want to do that.

The Senator from Nebraska has suggested in his remarks that he does not believe that the amendment he offers violates that agreement. I do not know. I am fearful of it, however. If his amendment is adopted by the Senate and goes to conference, then what remains for us to do if the President of the United States and all the agencies of the Government, as well as the Philippine people, object to it and say that it affects the present economic standing of the Philippine people? In other words, we will then be laying a tax on something on which we said in the Independence Act we would not lay a tax.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to call to the attention of the Senator from Mississippi that this amendment does not in any way interfere with the Senate's voting for the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi, when my amendment is added to his. All my amendment does is to add a proviso to the committee amendment. After that is done, if it is done, we still will have to vote as between the committee amendment as amended, and the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes. May I say that I think the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska would greatly improve the Senate committee amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. Then let me ask the Senator: Would he not rather have the committee amendment with my amendment added than without it?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I just stated I would rather have the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska tacked onto the Senate committee amendment, but I hope after that shall have been done the substitute I shall offer will be adopted, although I am practical enough to realize that when that is done it will probably decrease the number of votes that the substitute might otherwise obtain.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator still has control of his amendment. I certainly would not object if he offered this same proviso to his own amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator agree to this: Can we not fix it in the alternative in an amendment tacked onto my amendment, and leave it in some way in the discretion of the President to apply either alternative?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not quite understand the Senator's proposal.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator suggested that his amendment might be added onto my amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. My amendment exempts 520,000,000 pounds per year from taxation. My amendment and the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska are antagonistic to each other. To say in one instance that the tax shall be collected, employed, and returned to the Philippine government, and at the same time to say that the average for 5 years shall be exempted, and to make the two statements in the law will make the provisions antagonistic to each other. What I meant to convey to the Senator was, Could we not put it in the alternative, and give the power to the President to apply either the provisions of the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska or to apply the provisions of the amendment that I have offered here?

Mr. NORRIS. I would not want to agree to that, Mr. President.

Mr. HARRISON. Do I make myself plain?

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator has made himself clear. But if he likes my amendment, and he says that it improves the committee amendment, I think he ought to vote for it. After that we will come to the Senator's amendment, and the argument he is making now may well apply then. It may be that the Senate will vote to agree to the Senator's amendment. I do not believe it will.

Mr. HARRISON. I will state to the Senator that I think his amendment would strengthen the committee amendment, although I could not vote for the amendment even though it contained the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska; and if the Senate should adopt the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, I shall then offer the substitute.

I desire to have read, Mr. President, at this time, a letter that has just come to me from the Secretary of War enclosing a radiogram he has just received from the Governor General of the Philippine Islands, Mr. Murphy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

RADIOGRAM RECEIVED APRIL 10, 1934, VIA MANILA

SECRETARY OF WAR,
Washington, D.C.

COX, April 10. No. 152.

Reference your 161. Press dispatches indicate serious attention being given to an amendment exempting from the proposed excise tax 520,000,000 pounds or 232,100 long tons of Philippine coconut oil and/or equivalent Philippine copra. This low exemption would create a distinctly difficult situation in the Philippines due to the fact that we exported to the United States in 1933, 155,019 long tons of oil and 204,713 long tons of copra, which, at the accepted rate of extraction of 65 percent, is equivalent to 133,063 long tons of oil, giving a total in terms of oil of 288,082 long tons. From the foregoing it will be seen that there will be a forced reduction of about 20 percent. I suggest the following be considered by the Secretary of War and by others to whom he wishes to refer the matter: The Philippine government's position is taken in consonance with the Tydings-McDuffie Act, which the Philippine government interprets as containing an implied guaranty that the Philippines will not suffer for the period of the act any greater economic restriction than those therein imposed. In respect to the coconut industry, the Tydings-McDuffie Act is interpreted as guaranteeing the duty-free admission into the United States of 200,000 long tons of Philippine coconut oil and no limitation whatsoever on Philippine copra. The modification of the economic terms of this act by means of excise or other taxes, either directly or indirectly, will be interpreted as an infringement of the implied guaranties and will cause a concussion of economic and political motives which is highly undesirable. I believe that this viewpoint of the situation cannot be too strongly emphasized.

MURPHY.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD in this connection a letter which has been transmitted to me this morning by the Secretary of War, from Manuel L. Quezon, commissioner for the Philippines, in opposition to the proposal. I shall not have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D.C., April 3, 1934.

HON. GEORGE H. DERN,
Secretary of War, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: It has come to my attention that there is talk of a compromise whereby the excise taxes in section 602 of the 1934 revenue bill would be placed in line, according to the proponents of the idea, with the Tydings-McDuffie bill by allowing the importation into the United States, excise tax free, of 200,000 long tons of coconut oil from the Philippines, 100,000 of which will enter in the form of copra and the other 100,000 tons in the form of oil.

Let me point out that this would be a most serious violation of the terms of the Tydings-McDuffie bill. The Tydings-McDuffie bill provides for the duty-free entry into the United States of 200,000 long tons of coconut oil in the form of oil, and there is no question of a limitation on the amount of copra which can be shipped from the Philippines to the United States. I desire, first, to point out that if there is any such compromise made, the Filipino should be allowed to ship in such oil as he supplies the United States with in the form of coconut oil. In other words, the Philippine mills must be allowed to produce this oil, thereby providing employment for Philippine labor and giving the Filipino the profit and the Philippine government the revenue from taxation, which will accrue from crushing the oil in the islands.

If the bill is so altered that we must ship both copra and oil into the United States, then the amount of business which can be done by our oil mills in the Philippines will be so small that they will not be able to carry on. The total amount of oil which we could ship to the United States under the Tydings-McDuffie bill would be 448,000,000 pounds. If this be cut in half, we could then ship only 224,000,000 pounds of oil, whereas our Philippine mills actually shipped to the United States last year in the form of oil 316,000,000 pounds.

We cannot agree to any limitation of the amount of copra which we can ship from the Philippines. The bill provides no such limitation and it would be suicide for the Philippine copra producers if the amount which they could ship were limited to a quantity necessary to supply 100,000 long tons of oil to the United States in the form of copra.

I cannot too strongly impress upon you that so long as the Filipino is producing more than 200,000 long tons of coconut oil per annum, or more than enough copra to supply this amount of oil, there is no means whereby the price of coconut oil to the Filipino can be increased to the point whereby he can collect any increase in price of Philippine coconut oil, even if 200,000 tons of Philippine coconut oil were exempted from the excise tax. This would be because the Filipino would be in no position to exact a higher price for his oil from the American buyer than he would from the buyer in other international markets. Before he would be in a position to exact this higher price he would have to cut down sufficient of his trees so that he would be producing only 200,000 long tons of coconut oil per annum, and we cannot do this as the farmers in our copra-producing Provinces have no other means of earning their livelihood.

Last year the Philippines shipped to the United States alone, in the form of coconut oil and oil in the form of copra, 600,000,000 pounds of oil. In addition to this we sold 30 percent of our copra in international markets. It is our surplus above the 200,000 long tons which would set the price of our oil, and on the basis of United States importations alone you can see that for 1933 we had a surplus of 112,000,000 pounds of oil, and to this we would be obliged to add the oil in the copra exported to Europe and other copra-crushing regions.

Very respectfully,

MANUEL L. QUEZON.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Nebraska, as we are all trying to drive at the same end, and we all agree that this is a difficult question, will he not let his amendment be inserted in paragraph (g) and then allow a vote to be taken on my amendment, and let both proposals go to conference? There will then be that much in conference; it is a very large bill, and some time will be taken to compose the differences.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, there are some decided views held by Senators which will prevent an agreement of that kind.

Mr. NORRIS. I will say to the Senator from Idaho that I cannot accept the suggestion, because I am of the opinion—I may be wrong about it—that if the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi shall be offered as a substitute it will be voted down by the Senate. I do not think that even the amendment I have offered would save it.

Mr. BORAH. I think it will be voted down, and I hope so, because it occurs to me that the Senator's amendment is no protection to the American farmer at all. Under it there will be permitted to come into this country the average amount of oil which has come in during the last 5 years, and that is precisely what the farmers are complaining of. If we are not going to remedy that situation, there is no use to try to deceive ourselves or to deceive them.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, it is quite true that it does permit the average importations for the last 5 years to come in, and, as I have stated, that is because of the agreement we embodied in the independence act; but may I call to the Senator's attention the fact that annually there come coconut oil and copra into the United States in the amount of more than 300,000,000 pounds in excess of the 520,000,000 pounds suggested by the amendment, and that the amendment not only includes that character of oil but includes also other kinds of oil, such as—

Sesame oil, palm oil, palm-kernel oil, perilla oil, sunflower oil, whale oil, fish oil (except cod-liver oil), marine-animal oil, or any combination or mixture containing any such oil.

So, really much benefit will come, even though we make the exception and carry out the spirit of the understanding and we are really not just doing nothing when we adopt the amendment; we are, at least, taxing more than 300,000,000 pounds of coconut oil and copra every year as well as taxing all the other oils mentioned.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I should like to have an opportunity to vote squarely upon the question of whether we are going to comply or not comply with the independence act which we passed a few weeks ago. I think the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi does not permit us to do that, and, therefore, I shall vote against it, with the hope of an opportunity of voting directly upon the question.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I have said all that I desire to say. I am going to raise no objection to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska to the Senate Committee amendment, because, if adopted, I think it really would strengthen it, but I shall not vote for it finally, as I shall then offer a substitute for the whole provision.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Utah in the chair). Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. If this amendment shall be adopted, as suggested by the Senator from Mississippi, the result will be that we will be levying a processing tax on coconut oil except the five-hundred-and-some-odd-million pounds which come from the Philippines?

Mr. HARRISON. That is correct.

Mr. OVERTON. And if the result of levying the processing tax should be to increase the price of oil, then we would be conferring a special and peculiar benefit upon the Philippine Islands, would we not?

Mr. HARRISON. They are now exporting to this country 520,000,000 pounds, as I have heretofore stated. We accepted the independence act, and said we would not affect that shipment into this country.

Mr. OVERTON. But assuming, for the purpose of illustration, that if, as the result of such an amendment as is proposed, the price of coconut oil will be increased by the amount of the tax, 3 cents, then on the five-hundred-and-some-odd-million pounds that are imported from the Philippine Islands into the United States the Philippine producers will get 3 cents additional in price for their product.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not know what price they will obtain on their exports to the amount of 520,000,000 pounds, but if the importations exceed that quantity, of course the tax will be imposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I should like to make only a brief statement, as I do not care to prolong the debate. The Senator will recall that a Philippine independence act was once rejected by the Filipino legislature. I take it for granted that every Senator in this body would like to give the Filipinos independence tomorrow morning, if that were the best way to sever their relations with the United States. After the rejection of the first independence act it was very difficult to get the divergent factions in the Philippine Islands to agree to the bill which Congress finally passed. I do not mean to say that if we shall adopt this amendment the Filipinos will again reject the independence act, but I say it is a possibility, they having already rejected an independence act on one occasion.

If we can get independence for the Philippine Islands insofar as their trade relationships are concerned, they will be completely severed, and the American market for sugar and for other commodities will not be shared by the Filipino people. I believe, therefore, if we were to approach this question purely from the standpoint of selfishness, and for no other reason, that it would be better not to jeopardize the acceptance of the independence act but to hasten independence at the earliest possible date.

It is no secret to say that plans are now being formulated, which I believe will meet with the approval of the President, of the Congress, and of the Filipinos themselves, which will permit complete, absolute, and unconditional independence for the Philippine Islands before the end of the present administration. It is because of that objective, which I know the Congress wants to reach over and above every other one, that I plead with the Senate, as the President has pleaded with the Senate, as the Governor General of the Philippines has pleaded with the Senate, that we shall not take any course now which may jeopardize the accomplishment of the complete independence for the Filipinos at the earliest possible date.

To proceed for just a moment on the merits of the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, let me say, as I have previously stated, that it is equivalent to the passage by Congress of an act to be incorporated in the organic law of the Philippine government compelling them to levy a tax of 3 cents a pound on coconut oil, not for the benefit of the coconut producers but for the benefit of the Filipino treasury. It seems to me that, in essence, we are in the exact position in which England was when we were Thirteen Colonies before the Revolutionary War. We are imposing unjust taxation against the will of the Filipino people when they are a part of the country under our common flag.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. TYDINGS. In just a moment I will be glad to yield to the Senator. I know the farmers of the country are a unit for this proposed legislation. No one likes to take the unpopular side of it. It falls to my lot, as Chairman of the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, to take the unpopular side; but I say in taking that side that I believe it to be the right side. I do not believe, no matter how much our farmers may be oppressed, that we are justified in committing an act which is not fair to the people who share the common flag which floats over the continental United States. We are simply taxing the coconut growers in the Philippine Islands to help the farmers in our own country. That is what the amendment amounts to. We are putting a tax upon the coconut grower in the Philippines to benefit the farmer in the United States. I cannot believe that is fair. I think the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi, if it could be accepted, would be basically fair. However, as we have debated this question for 2 days, I do not wish to take further time of the Senate, except to say that I hope we will do nothing to jeopardize our agreement with the Filipino people upon which their independence has been predicated.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. Before I ask the Senator the question which I have in mind it will be necessary for me to explain briefly.

Mr. TYDINGS. Very well.

Mr. OVERTON. As I understand the contention made by the Senator from Maryland, it is that by legislative enactment we have offered independence to the Philippine Islands. We know that proposal has not as yet been accepted, but it is an outstanding offer. Whenever it is accepted, then it becomes, as it were, a contract between the United States Government and the Philippine Islands. If it shall be rejected, then it will never go into effect.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is true.

Mr. OVERTON. Of course we would have the legal right, and I assume we would have the moral right, to amend that offer before it is accepted, but that is not the matter about which I am going to ask the Senator from Maryland. The offer that we make provides in section 6 that after the date—not now, but after the date of the inauguration of the commonwealth of the Philippine Islands, trade relations between the United States and the Philippine Islands shall be as now provided by law.

Would it be agreeable to the Senator from Maryland to accept an amendment that would impose a processing tax as suggested by the committee amendment, and then provide that there should be an exemption in the case of the Philippine Islands whenever the Philippine Islands should inaugurate the government suggested in the Philippine Independence Act? In other words, we will have a hiatus. It may be the proposal will never be accepted by the Philippine Islands. Some time is going to elapse before it is accepted or rejected. We could enact such a provision without being in bad faith so far as the Philippine Independence Act is concerned, and let the processing tax apply to the Philippine Islands only until the date of the inauguration of their new government.

Mr. TYDINGS. Insofar as that would contravene the provisions of the Philippine Independence Act, the proposal promulgated by the Senator from Louisiana is a fair one and would in no sense violate the independence act itself. Therefore, if we were to limit the tax until such time as the commonwealth government was established in accordance with the language of the independence act, in my judgment we would not contravene the provisions of the independence act.

But I may say to the Senator from Louisiana, great as that concession would be, I still think it would be wrong, for the benefit of the American farmers who are raising cattle to tax the Filipino farmers who are growing coconuts. I think it would be equally unfair, for the benefit of the Filipino coconut growers, to tax the American farmers who are raising cattle. We are all together under the American flag and if it is wrong on the one hand, the opposite condition is equally fallacious.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I think the question presented to the Senate goes further than suggested by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. It is a question of maintaining living standards on the part of the American farmer and the American laborer as against the living standards which are maintained in the Philippine Islands and in other oriental possessions and territories and in other oriental countries.

We have been hearing a great deal at this session of the Senate with reference to maintaining certain standards for the American farmer and for the American laborer. Let us take the subject now under consideration by the Senate as an illustration of the point I am undertaking to make. Sometime ago we were receiving good prices for oil products. I understand, though I may be wrong, that oil products were commanding a price of 12 cents a pound f.o.b. shipping point. Certain capitalists who were engaged in the manufacture of soap, oleomargarine, and lard substitutes, looked over the Philippine Islands and discovered that there were not only climatic advantages for the production of oil but that there was an advantage resulting from the fact that the coconut tree simply grows and grows without any particular effort on the part of man; that those trees become productive in a period of about 5 years after being planted, and reach their maximum production in about 10 years, and have a life of from 50 or 60 or even 100 years.

Then they saw they could utilize labor in the Philippine Islands at prices greatly below those which the farm laborer receives in the United States. They found that so far as human labor and human effort are concerned production would be much cheaper in the Philippine Islands than production of oil, both animal and vegetable, in continental United States. Therefore they proceeded to exploit in the Philippine Islands this cheap labor, this underpaid, underfed, and improperly clad laborer, who can go to work with a loin cloth about him and can live with apparent satisfaction to himself in grass huts.

Instead of undertaking to benefit the Philippine laborer, instead of the Filipinos undertaking to benefit themselves by raising their standards of living, instead of capital, which was exploiting the Philippine territory, increasing the wages paid to the Philippine laborers, they have kept their compensation down and down and down while they were increasing production from the Philippine Islands and dumping that tremendous increase into the continental United States to come in competition with the products of the American farmer and the American farm laborer.

Therefore it seems to me that in the last analysis we are confronted with this situation. Are we going to abandon the continental farmer and the continental farm laborer and sacrifice him for the benefit of the Philippine laborer and the Philippine producer, who apparently has made no effort to raise himself to the standards of living that we want everybody under the American flag to enjoy? Are we going to sacrifice the American farmer, or are we going to undertake to maintain those standards of living about which we have been talking so much?

I think that is the fundamental question. It goes beyond any technical objection that may be raised as to the proposal of independence we have made to the Philippine Islands. In order to overcome that objection I suggested to the Senator from Maryland that an amendment be proposed which would make the tax operative until the government in the Philippine Islands had been inaugurated. It appears that the suggestion is not acceptable to the Senator from Maryland. We therefore have reached the parting of the ways in a conflict between the American farmer and the American laborer and American standards of living, on the one hand, and oriental production and oriental labor and oriental standards of living, on the other hand.

I have due sympathy for the Filipinos. I should like to see them maintain and enjoy the standards of living which we wish the American farmer and the American laborer to enjoy. But those who are today fighting the imposition of this tax are the ones who have not been fair to oriental labor. It is they who have not undertaken to benefit and improve their conditions and raise their standard of living and compensation. When they ask us to continue that situation to the detriment of the American farmer, so far as I am concerned, I am going to cast my vote on the side of the American farmer.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I suppose this is one of the most important questions that we have had before us as affecting the majority of the people of the United States, either directly or indirectly. It is the only opportunity we have had to agree upon a policy that would meet the requirements and requests of all the farmers of the United States.

Personally I believe that the bill as it came from the House is the best measure that has been proposed, and that it is stronger and better for all concerned than any amendment that has been offered.

Just what is the condition of the Philippine Islands today? Are they in any different condition now than they were before we ever submitted to them any proposition for their independence? That proposition is neither binding upon us nor binding upon the Philippines until the entire program that we have mapped out for them and for this Nation has been completed. As a matter of law, the Philippine Islands stand now just where they stood before the proposition of independence was offered to them, to this extent: We have provided that they shall assemble in delegate form and adopt a constitution. We have provided that thereafter they shall call an election, and that the constitution they adopt shall be presented to the President of the United States, without any limit as to the time in which it shall be returned to the Philippine government for its acceptance or approval after it has called a meeting of the legislative body to act upon the constitution. Then, after the legislative body has acted, the constitution is to be returned to the President again for his approval.

As I view the situation of the Philippine Islands, nothing will have been finally determined until the entire agreement shall have been accepted and approved.

If the Philippine Islands should adopt a constitution which the President should approve, and then turn it back to the Philippine Islands, and then, if the Philippine Islands should call what we would term a "constitutional convention" and adopt the constitution in the language in which it has been presented to the President, that might possibly create a different status as between the two governments. As I understand the law of contracts, if I should propose such to my friend the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], the contract would not be binding on anybody until he accepted its provisions; and I think the same principle applies to a contract of this kind.

In the next place, so far as I was individually concerned, I was opposed to the adoption of the Platt amendment to the Cuban treaty. I was opposed to this Government attempting to control a foreign government. We all know the difficulties that have arisen by reason of the Platt amendment. Cuba has been exploited by our own capital; then our Government has been called into operation, at great expense to protect that capital.

So far as the two candidates for President in the last campaign are concerned, each expressed himself as being emphatically in favor of such a provision as is contained in the bill as it came from the House with regard to the question before us.

I read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an extract from a speech delivered by Mr. SHALLENBERGER on February 14, 1934. He quotes what our candidate for the Presidency said during the last campaign in answer to the farmers' questions, as follows:

> Let me make it clear that I have consistently stood for a policy of tariff protection that will insure the domestic market for our American farmer.

That covered every proposition in which the farmer was interested, insofar as his production was concerned.

The opposing candidate, Mr. Hoover, said:

> Your oils and fats are suffering entirely unnecessarily from foreign imports of these commodities. The American market should be and must be reserved for the American farmer at all times, whether in emergency or normal times.

That is the position taken and the promise held out to the farmers of this country by the candidates of both parties during the last campaign.

There seems to be a question of delicacy as to deciding as between the rights of the American farmer and our duty to the Philippines. There seems to be a doubt as to just what we should do. In that case, where I had a doubt, I certainly should resolve it in favor of my own country.

We have been generous to the Filipinos. I do not suppose that any government situated as we are has ever been more generous.

It has been remarked here in the course of the argument, to show how they have interpreted our generosity, that in July 1933, 80 percent of all imports into the Philippines were purchased from the United States and 10 percent of all their imports were purchased from Japan. That was the status of the buying and selling in the Philippines at that time.

After the National Recovery Act went into effect in the United States, an increase of all prices of American goods resulted. Therefore in November 1933 the Filipinos purchased only 32 percent of their imports from the United States and increased their purchases from Japan to 56 percent of their total imports.

In January 1933 the Philippines purchased 7,029 pieces of manufactured goods from the United States. In the same month they purchased 1,930 pieces from Japan. In December 1933 after the increases in prices in America because of the N.R.A., the Philippines purchased only about 1,900 pieces from the United States, and purchased 6,250 pieces from Japan, notwithstanding the generosity of this Government extended to them at all times, in which generosity we all agreed, and of which we all approved.

This statement of the trade between the Philippine Islands, the United States, and Japan shows plainly that when it was advantageous for the Philippine people to change their commerce from the United States to the Empire of Japan, they did not hesitate to take advantage of the favorable prices in Japan. In other words, we have sincerely dealt with the Philippines as if they were a part of our Nation, and have granted to them special favors, while during the same time the Philippines have acted as an independent nation, free to do as they please, as to them their best interests indicated.

It must be remembered, further, that this act of the Philippines was not in contemplation of what we were doing, but was absolutely independent of any tax intended by this Government.

It seems to me that in all fairness it should also be suggested that the Philippines as a nation are allowed now, and under this bill, a preferential protection of 2 cents a pound on coconut oil over every other country, for the reason that there is a duty of 2 cents a pound on the coconut oil coming into America from every other country which does not apply to the Philippine Islands, since they are under our protection. Hence, they are losing only 1 percent of this tax, at most.

Thus, even if the bill should be enacted as it has been reported from the committee, the Philippines would still retain an advantage of 2 cents a pound over every other country. Hence, in all fairness to every other country, as well as to the Philippines, we should not grant the concession asked for by those arguing for the change in the bill as it came from the House.

It seems to me, furthermore, that this concession of 2 cents a pound to the Philippines really contravenes the favored-nation clause in our treaties with other countries, if the Philippines are considered independent.

As to the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. NORRIS] of the two amendments that have been offered I think it is by far the better; but my opinion is that as the bill came from the House it is about the best measure that we shall get when we conclude our consideration of the subject.

Mr. President, it may not be inappropriate, following discussion which has been had in reference to the agricultural products of the United States, for me to add some additional words as to the real status of the Philippine Islands. While the question has, in a way, been passed over by reason of the bill having been referred to a conference committee, I take it that it is not finally determined as to what the action of the Senate may be.

It is my contention that in the minds and hearts of the American people, as well as in the minds and hearts of the Filipinos themselves, this Government never was in fact the owner of the Philippine Islands, and I think I am warranted in making this statement, notwithstanding the fact that full and complete title to the islands passed to the United States by and through the treaty with Spain. The relationship of this Government as construed by acts and revealed intentions was that of a trustee of the islands rather than as an owner.

Am I not supported in this conclusion by the resolution passed by a majority of the United States Senate at the time, or shortly after the approval, of the treaty, which resolution reads as follows:

Resolved, That by the ratification of the treaty of peace with Spain it is not intended to incorporate the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands into citizenship of the United States, nor is it intended to permanently annex said islands as an integral part of the territory of the United States; but it is the intention of the United States to establish on said islands a government suitable to the wants and conditions of the inhabitants of said islands to prepare them for local self-government, and in due time to make such disposition of said islands as will best promote the interests of the United States and the inhabitants of said islands. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 55th Cong., 3d sess., vol. 32, p. 1847.)

Am I not further strengthened in this conclusion by the treatment given at all times by the Government of this country to the Philippine people—or may I say government of the Philippines? And, further, from the title to the act known as the "Jones Act", approved August 29, 1916, entitled "An act to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands", which act is found in the United States Statutes at Large, volume 39, page 545, chapter 416, containing as a preliminary the following preamble:

Whereas it was never the intention of the people of the United States in the incipiency of the War with Spain to make it a war of conquest or for territorial aggrandizement; and

Whereas it is, as it has always been, the purpose of the people of the United States to withdraw their sovereignty over the Philippine Islands and to recognize their independence as soon as a stable government can be established therein; and

Whereas for the speedy accomplishment of such purpose it is desirable to place in the hands of the people of the Philippines as large a control of their domestic affairs as can be given them without, in the meantime, impairing the exercise of the rights of sovereignty by the people of the United States in order that, by the use and exercise of popular franchise and governmental powers, they may be the better prepared to fully assume the responsibilities and enjoy all the privileges of complete independence.

Further, from certain sections of the act which read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of this act and the name "the Philippines" as used in this act shall apply to and include the Philippine Islands ceded to the United States Government by the treaty of peace concluded between the United States and Spain on the 11th day of April 1899, the boundaries of which are set forth in article III of said treaty, together with those islands embraced in the treaty between Spain and the United States concluded at Washington on the 7th day of November 1900.

SEC. 2. That all inhabitants of the Philippine Islands who were Spanish subjects on the 11th day of April 1899 and then resided in said islands, and their children born subsequent thereto, shall be deemed and held to be citizens of the Philippine Islands, except such as shall have elected to preserve their allegiance to the Crown of Spain in accordance with the provisions of the treaty of peace between the United States and Spain signed at Paris December 10, 1898, and except such others as have since become citizens of some other country: Provided, That the Philippine Legislature, herein provided for, is hereby authorized to provide by law for the acquisition of Philippine citizenship by those natives of the Philippine Islands who do not come within the foregoing provisions, the natives of the insular possessions of the United States, and such other persons residing in the Philippine Islands who are citizens of the United States or who could become citizens of the United States under the laws of the United States if residing therein.

I now quote from the language embodied in section 10 of the aforesaid act, which reads:

That while this act provides that the Philippine government shall have the authority to enact a tariff law, the trade relations between the islands and the United States shall continue to be governed exclusively by laws of the Congress of the United States: Provided, That tariff acts or acts amendatory to the tariff of the Philippine Islands shall not become law until they shall receive the approval of the President of the United States, nor shall any act of the Philippine Legislature affecting immigration or the currency or coinage laws of the Philippines become a law until it has been approved by the President of the United States: Provided further, That the President shall approve or disapprove any act mentioned in the foregoing proviso within 6 months from and after its enactment and submission for his approval, and if not disapproved within such time it shall become a law the same as if it had been specifically approved.

Then again, I wish to quote section 11 of the same act, which is as follows:

That no export duties shall be levied or collected on exports from the Philippine Islands, but taxes and assessments on property and license fees for franchises and privileges, and internal taxes, direct or indirect, may be imposed for the purposes of the Philippine government and the provincial and municipal governments thereof, respectively, as may be provided and defined by acts of the Philippine Legislature, and, where necessary to anticipate taxes and revenues, bonds and other obligations may be issued by the Philippine government or any provincial or municipal government therein, as may be provided by law and to protect the public credit: Provided, however, That the entire indebtedness of the Philippine government created by the authority conferred herein shall not exceed at any one time the sum of $15,000,000, exclusive of those obligations known as "friar-land bonds", nor that of any Province or municipality a sum in excess of 7 percent of the aggregate tax valuation of its property at any one time.

Thus it is provided in this law for the naturalization of citizens proper of the United States by the Philippine government.

Now as to the effect of the preamble and also as to the effect of the enacting clause, as defined by the Supreme Court of the United States. As to the purpose and scope of the preamble as in this case used, I am citing from Beard v. Rowan (34 U.S. 301), wherein it is held:

In construing a statute, the preamble may be resorted to, to aid in the construction of the enacting clause, when ambiguity exists.

Further, in Price v. Forrest (173 U.S. 410), we find the following:

The preamble of a statute may be referred to in order to assist in ascertaining the intent and meaning of a statute fairly susceptible of different constructions.

Quoting from Ware v. Hylton (3 U.S. 199):

If the preamble of a statute is contradicted by the enacting clause, the latter must prevail, although if the words of the enacting clause or its effect and operation are ambiguous or uncertain, such a construction should be made as not to extend the provisions of the enacting clause beyond the intention of the legislature as clearly expressed in the preamble.

While the resolution of the Senate was not and should not be considered more than expressive of the convictions and understanding of the Senators favoring it, the same cannot be said of the act heretofore quoted from that taken as a whole, is the solemn expression of the entire law-making body of our Government. Each of the parties have so treated it ever since its enactment, and legislated and conducted their respective thought independently and in harmony with its provisions.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, let the question be put on the amendment to the Senate committee amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. I may say that I have no objection to the adoption of that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Utah in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. McNARY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I desire to offer a perfecting amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has not yet been agreed to, and that is a perfecting amendment.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senator from Mississippi, my amendment now being out of the way, I wonder whether the Senator would not agree to another amendment made necessary by the amendment which has just been agreed to, on page 217, subparagraph (g).

Mr. HARRISON. It is quite true that an amendment will be necessary there.

Mr. NORRIS. The House text reads:

All collections under this section shall, notwithstanding any other provisions of law, be covered into the general fund of the Treasury of the United States.

I suggest that after the word "section" there be added the words "except as provided in subsection (a)."

Mr. HARRISON. I think that exception ought to be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska to the House text.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I ask that my amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the amendment of the committee, as amended, on page 214, at the end of the paragraph (a), it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided further, That the tax imposed by this subsection shall be levied on coconut oil and coconut oil produced from copra brought into the United States from the Philippine Islands and of Philippine origin only until the date of the inauguration of the government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands, in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 24, 1934.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I offer this amendment because it seems to meet, so far as the Philippine Islands are concerned, a cardinal objection made to the coconut-oil tax. It meets the objection that the amendment as now framed would be in contravention of the offer of independence made to the Philippine Islands.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I hope my colleague will not press the amendment. It would virtually defeat the purpose of the amendment we have adopted. The amendment as it came from the committee has already been considerably mellowed. We have agreed to take the money and give it back to the Philippine government, and that agreement having been reached, I think the adoption of the pending amendment to the amendment would be very much to our disadvantage. I hope my colleague will not press it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Disagreeing with the Senator's colleague, I think his amendment is very much in point and in place. In his colloquy with the Senator from Maryland a short time ago, the Senator from Maryland frankly conceded that with an amendment of this character in the bill, we would be living up to the letter of the Independence Act. While I do not mean to indicate that he favored the amendment, he did state—and I want to be corrected if I am wrong—that the amendment now submitted would bring the situation squarely within the letter of the law. Is not that the Senator's understanding?

Mr. OVERTON. That is correct. While he did not indicate that he would accept the amendment, yet he did indicate that it would remove the objection which had been raised that we were acting in bad faith.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Precisely, and it seems to me that, by the adoption of this amendment, we would be putting specific emphasis upon the importance of affirmative action in the islands upon the Independence Act.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to say that I can see no possible harm this amendment could do. Those who favor it think it rather a reaffirmation of the declaration heretofore made. There can certainly be no objection to it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I admit there is no objection to it in the fact that it would not accomplish anything, but it would not change the situation in the slightest.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, it seems to me that, with the adoption of this amendment, it would not be necessary to adopt the amendment suggested by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator's amendment provides for the imposition of the tax until the Filipinos shall have independence. That is where the objection comes. Nobody objects to putting the tax on after they have entire independence.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I think the Senator is in error about that. It would impose the tax until they have inaugurated their government, not until after they have gotten complete independence. Our proposal with reference to trade relations is to begin to take effect after the Philippine government has been inaugurated, and before the Filipinos have received absolute independence.

Mr. CONNALLY. Under the Senator's amendment the tax would go into effect now.

Mr. OVERTON. Yes, it would go into effect now. It will be in effect until the preliminary steps provided by the act requiring the Philippine Islands to inaugurate a government had been taken.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me read the Senator's amendment to him and see if it says that. It reads:

That the tax imposed by this subsection shall be levied on coconut oil and coconut oil produced from copra brought into the United States from the Philippine Islands and of Philippine origin only until the date of the inauguration of the Government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands, in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 24, 1934.

In other words, he would put the tax on now and take it off as soon as they inaugurated their government.

Mr. OVERTON. That is correct.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is what I said.

Mr. OVERTON. It would go off automatically when they inaugurated their government.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I think there is a misapprehension.

Mr. COPELAND. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. COPELAND. Will not the Chair inform us what is before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the perfecting amendment offered by the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON].

Mr. COPELAND. May it not be stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the committee amendment, as amended, on page 214, at the end of paragraph (a), it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided further, That the tax imposed by this subsection shall be levied on coconut oil and coconut oil produced from copra brought into the United States from the Philippine Islands and of Philippine origin only until the date of the inauguration of the Government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands, in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 24, 1934.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, evidently we do not understand what we have done, or I do not understand what this amendment proposes. We have tried to impose a tax on coconut oil coming into the United States in competition with our domestic oil.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] offered an amendment which really I did not favor, and many of us did not favor, but we thought we would yield that much and give the money back to the Philippine people after we assessed the tax. Now we have before us an amendment which provides that we will put the tax on now, and that if they will go through the steps necessary under the Philippine Act to inaugurate their government it will go off and stay off for 12 or 15 years. In other words, we might just as well not make this gesture at all if we are going to provide that we will put on the tax whenever we pass this bill, and then, when the cotton crop and the vegetable crop and other crops come in along in the fall of the year, if the preliminary gesture has been made of setting up the Philippine government, the tax goes off.

We have done a whole lot of fighting here for nothing. I do not blame my friend from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] for smiling. He has maneuvered us right into his camp. I compliment the Senator. Now we have a provision under which the entire tax may be wiped out when October comes. That is just what might be put into the bill. I hope the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] does not want his whole work undone by his distinguished colleague.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to his colleague?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. At what time does the Senator think the new government will be inaugurated in the Philippine Islands?

Mr. LONG. They will go right over there and inaugurate it now.

Mr. OVERTON. When we had the Philippine independence bill under discussion in the Senate, I understood that my colleague took the position that it would be some 2 or 3 years before the new government there would be inaugurated.

Mr. LONG. I did then, but if this amendment is adopted now they will go over and inaugurate the government this fall. They will have a reason to inaugurate it this fall. They will set up a little inaugurative machinery there which does not mean independence. They will still have 12 or 15 years to go, or whatever the time may be.

I say, Mr. President, that we are maneuvering ourselves right into the camp of the Senator from Maryland. We might as well have had him write the bill yesterday, instead of writing it today. I hope my friend from Texas will let it be known that he is not wiping out the benefits of our amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from Texas indicated awhile ago that he thought the amendment of the Senator's colleague ought to be adopted. I thought the two Senators from Louisiana would neutralize each other, and we might get it through.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to the committee amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 214, line 6, after the words "fish oil" and the comma, it is proposed to insert the words "perilla oil."

Mr. HARRISON. That, may I say to the Senator from Minnesota, ought to be included in the Senate committee amendment; and in the substitute I have offered I included perilla oil.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am sure I can read the English language, but I desire to have the assurance of the Senator from Mississippi that this amendment, as now formulated, exempts cod-liver oil for all purposes.

Mr. HARRISON. No, Mr. President; the Senate committee amendment does not exempt it. The amendment I have offered as a substitute for the Senate committee amendment does exempt cod-liver oil.

Mr. COPELAND. That is exactly what I meant. I was referring to the substitute offered by the Senator; and he assures me that it does exempt cod-liver oil for all purposes.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; it does exempt cod-liver oil for all purposes.

Mr. COPELAND. For medicinal and all other purposes?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, for the purpose of perfecting the committee amendment, I move to strike out on page 214, in lines 5 and 6, the words "or imported fish oil."

In the first place, the use of the word "imported" is a violation of a good many of our treaties, such as our treaty with Germany, which provides that their products shall not be subject to any different internal taxes than the products of American citizens.

That is not the important objection, however. Cod-liver oil and cod oil are not produced in the United States. The importations of all other fish oils are negligible in amount. In 1933 we imported slightly more than five and one half million gallons of cod-liver and cod oil, which I think everybody agrees should not be subject to this tax, because there is no domestic oil which is capable of being used as a substitute. Cod-liver oil used medicinally and cod-liver oil used in poultry feed have no substitute that I can find in this country.

As against that five and one half million gallons that came in last year, only 217,000 gallons of all the other kinds of fish oil were included; and many of those oils are not replaceable here. For instance, in the manufacture of enamels and protective coverings, fish oil must be used, and there is no vegetable or animal oil that can be used as a substitute.

I am just as zealous as any Senator can be to protect the dairymen and the butchers of this country; but fish oils do not compete in any sense with dairy products or with agricultural products in the United States.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, what revenue would be raised if we should tax these oils?

Mr. REED. I believe that if we should exempt cod-liver oil, which everybody seems agreed on doing, the tax on all the other fish oils would yield us a total of something like $30,000 a year.

Mr. LEWIS. What are the other fish oils used for?

Mr. REED. My informant does not tell me; but I have been told, aside from that, that they are used in making protective coverings, such as enamels. I do not know how the process is worked out, but the provision covers products of that type.

Mr. LEWIS. I apologize to the Senator for interrupting him. Will the Senator further yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. Do I gather that it may be correctly said that these fish oils do not compete with the products of the packers, and they do not compete with the products of the dairy industry?

Mr. REED. Not at all. There is no possible competition. I have not studied the application of this 200,000 gallons with the care that I should have. I was principally concerned with cod-liver oil, which comes in in such great quantities, and is used by farmers and by physicians. I hope the Senator will agree with what I have said.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, does the Senator propose to exempt all the fish oils?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator was in the Finance Committee, and saw the representatives of the fish-oil interests who were there; and there was a very considerable demand that fish oils be excluded because they are competitive oils. I am not speaking of cod-liver oil.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the present importation of fish oils other than cod-liver oil is only 200,000 gallons a year.

Mr. CONNALLY. It does not make any difference what the imports are. I am not interested personally on behalf of my State with respect to fish oils; but Delaware and Virginia and Maryland and Connecticut had representatives at the hearings before the committee, and they insisted that fish oils be included in this tax.

The Senator talks about what fish oil is used for. Let me say to him that all these oils are used for some useful purpose, or they would not be bought, and, of course, they would not be brought into this country. That is the case with all of them. If we are going to exempt an oil simply because it is used in the manufacture of chicken-feed, or something else, we might as well exempt them all. People do not pay out money and do not bring in things unless they need them and use them for some useful purpose.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator disagree with the proposal to exclude cod-liver oil?

Mr. CONNALLY. We have already done that, as I understand.

Mr. REED. No.

Mr. HARRISON. That should be excluded from the Senate amendment. It should be excluded from my proposed substitute. The Senator is correct, however, in saying that the representatives from the section of the country indicated by him were just as strong as those from Texas in their advocacy of a tax on fish oil.

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes; every State that had a minnow was represented there, and was anxious to have imported fish oils taxed.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I will yield in a moment. I think we can agree that cod-liver oil and cod oil ought to come out.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not think I can agree to it. I assume it will be done, but I do not say it ought to be done.

We speak of the cost. We pay a dollar for a little bottle of cod-liver oil, and if we put a tax of one tenth of a cent on it, it is said that that tax is going to ruin the industry. More money is paid for cod-liver-oil products than any other kind of oil I know. A good deal is said about its being for sick folk. Well, others need these oils just as well as do sick folk.

Criticism is made of the entire oil tariff. It is said that we must not tax any of these oils because hospitals use soap. Of course they do; but when we develop the case we find out that the soap which the hospitals use is made altogether from linseed oil, and is not affected at all by this particular tax on oil.

I do not see any reason for excluding cod-liver oil, for that matter, because it is just an oil, and it is used for a useful purpose, just as are all these other oils; and if we keep chiseling away and taking off this oil and the other oil, we will not have anything left. If the Senator from Pennsylvania will consult his constituents, he will find that many of them are interested in not excluding these oils.

Mr. REED. I have talked to my constituents about it. I am just as anxious as is the Senator from Texas to help the farmer, and the farmers of my State have not been getting any help.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator ought to have been more active on the floor.

Mr. REED. I have been active all right, but I have had no support from Senators from other sections.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. DILL. I want to say to the Senator that not only in the States mentioned by the Senator from Texas but in the Puget Sound region and in Alaska the fish-oil industry is a growing one. Recent developments, according to the Bureau of Fisheries, have shown that tremendous amounts of waste from salmon and halibut can be made into oils that are practically as good as is cod-liver oil, to say nothing of other oils. Like the Senator from Texas, I do not see why we should pick out certain oils and exclude other oils. I think they all ought to be included.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Pennsylvania let me call his attention to an industry that exists in Florida which is known as the "menhaden industry"? Representatives of that industry appeared before the Finance Committee. I think the industry is now of considerable importance, but those engaged in catching the fish and pressing the oil are receiving wages so small that they can scarcely live upon them. The oil itself is selling from about 7 to 8 cents, or something like that, and they feel that they are entitled to some consideration. Perhaps the Senator is familiar with the operation of the menhaden industry.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the biggest single use of cod-liver oil in the United States is as an ingredient in the manufacture of feed for chickens. The costs to the farmer are being added to, when there is imposed a tax on cod-liver oil. Such oil has got to be used; there is no substitute for it that can be used in the manufacture of chicken feed. If Senators are as anxious to help the dairy farmers and the poultry raisers as many of them have said, I think they will all agree that this tax ought not to be put on cod-liver oil or cod oil.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Is the Senator familiar with the substitute proposed by the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. Cod-liver oil is exempted under that proposed substitute.

Mr. REED. Yes; and it ought also to be exempted from the committee amendment.

Mr. COPELAND. I agree with the Senator's statement about fish oil. If I had my way about it, I would wipe out the whole paragraph regarding these oils; but frankness to my own constituents makes me say that there is a lot of fish oil produced in this country which is used for various purposes, and so, if we are going to give one oil protection, the other oils ought also to be protected; I think frankness also compels me to say, however, that I should like to have them all excluded from the bill because of the increase in the price of soap which will follow.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it is perfectly evident that the sentiment of the Senate is opposed to exempting any of these oils except cod-liver oil. So I will ask to modify my amendment to read as follows:

On page 214, line 6, after the words "fish oil", insert "(excepting cod and cod-liver oil)."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania, as modified, to the amendment reported by the committee, as amended.

The amendment as modified to the amendment of the committee as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi in the nature of a substitute for the amendment reported by the committee, as amended. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 214 it is proposed to strike out lines 3 to 15, inclusive, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

(a) There is hereby imposed upon the first domestic processing of coconut oil, sesame oil, palm oil, palm-kernel oil, perilla oil, sunflower oil, whale oil, fish oil (except cod-liver oil), or marine-animal oil, or any combination or mixture containing any such oil if there has been with respect to such oil no previous first domestic processing within the meaning of this subsection, a tax of 3 cents per pound of such oil, which tax shall be paid by the processor. Under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, the tax provided in this subsection shall not apply to the processing (1) of coconut oil brought into the continental United States from the Philippines on or before the date of the enactment of this act or produced from copra brought into the continental United States from the Philippines on or before such date, or (2) of 520,000,000 pounds of coconut oil of Philippine origin which is brought into the continental United States from the Philippines as coconut oil, or which is the product of copra of Philippine origin brought into the continental United States from the Philippines, during each period of 12 months after the date of the enactment of this act, but not more than 324,000,000 pounds thereof shall be brought into the continental United States in the form of coconut oil, or (3) of the following articles if the product of American fisheries or if produced in the United States: Fish oil, whale oil, and marine-animal oil, or (4) of palm oil used in the manufacture of tin plate. For the purposes of this section, the term "first domestic processing" means the first use in the United States, in the manufacture or production of an article intended for sale or intended for further manufacture, of the article with respect to which the tax is imposed. For the purposes of the exemption granted by this subsection, the amount of coconut oil producible from copra shall be regarded as 63 percent by weight.

Mr. BORAH. On that amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CUTTING (when his name was called). I have a pair for the day with the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WALCOTT (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO]. As he is not present, not knowing how he would vote, I am obliged to withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I beg to announce that my colleague [Mr. DIETERICH], who is necessarily detained from the Senate, if present and voting, would vote "nay" on this amendment.

I regret to announce that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] is detained from the Senate on account of illness.

I desire further to announce that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BACHMAN], the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO], the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

Mr. HEBERT. I wish to announce the general pair of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. Both Senators are absent on official business.

I also wish to announce the general pair of my colleague the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY]. If present, the senior Senator from Rhode Island would vote "nay." I am not advised as to how the junior Senator from Arkansas would vote.

I also announce the general pair of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER].

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 59, as follows:

So Mr. HARRISON'S amendment in the nature of a substitute for the committee amendment, as amended, was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on the amendment reported by the committee, as amended.

Mr. BORAH. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I will detain the Senate for a very short time. I appreciate as well as anyone how futile it would be to make argument against the pending provision with the expectation of influencing the attitude of Senators, but because I expect to vote against the amendment I want to ask the indulgence of my colleagues that I may state some of the reasons which prompt my vote.

In disposing of the argument that the bill will do injury to our relations with the Philippine Islands and operate unfairly against the Philippine people, it has been urged by the proponents of the amendment that the Philippines will not be injured because they enjoy a preferential status, and that because they enjoy a preferential status they will be able to ship the Filipino products to this country just as they have done in the past and are doing at this time. That argument is based upon the idea that the Philippines have a 2-cent per pound differential in tariff upon coconut oil. That, of course, is true; but the argument itself is not true, and the conclusion drawn is not a valid conclusion for a number of reasons. I want to indicate two or three of those reasons.

In the first place, under the Tariff Act of 1930 the duty upon importations of tallow into this country is one half of 1 cent per pound. The proposed amendment does not include tallow, which is a major competitive fat. The inevitable result is that if the pending amendment raises the domestic prices of fats and oils there will be a great influx of foreign tallows immediately the new price level becomes effective. I am told that in foreign countries there are enormous surpluses of various kinds of fats, surpluses awaiting opportunity to come into the American market. The duty which presently exists is sufficient to exclude those fats at this time, but if the pending amendment results in raising the level of domestic prices, that duty will no longer be adequate.

Another reason is the amendment provides no tax on the product of the renderers of domestic fats and greases. It is a fact, as exhibited by Federal reports, that the second-hand fats produced by the domestic renderer—that is to say, fats taken out of the scrap boxes of the butcher shops and the garbage cans of hotels—are greater than the production of fats of the great packing houses of the country. To me, it is as plain as anything in the world that the 3-cent tax will exclude from this country a large volume of oils for the benefit of those who gather their material from the garbage cans and those who import untaxed or low-taxed foreign oils and greases.

There is yet a more substantial reason why the argument offered is not valid. Although there is a tax of 2 cents per pound upon coconut oil under the Tariff Act of 1930, copra is on the free list. This important fact has been overlooked by those sponsoring the tax in all the debates on this amendment. It has been assumed the Philippines would remain in their preferential position, and they would still retain that 2 cents' advantage. They will as to coconut oil, but they will not as to copra. Something like 43 percent of all the oil importations from the Philippine Islands comes in the form of copra and not in the form of oil.

It is also true that in our importation of coconut products from areas other than the Philippines, a great part of the importation comes in the form of copra and not in the form of oil. What is the inevitable result? It is simply that the importer will cease to import in the form of oil. He will import copra, and as to copra the Philippines enjoy absolutely no preference against competing foreign countries. We will obtain our copra supplies from Ceylon, Netherland East Indies, British Malaya, and other tropical countries where coconuts are grown. We will patronize foreigners and get our supplies from the possessions and territories of the British Empire and various other sources, but not from the Philippine Islands.

So I contend that the argument here advanced, that this tax will not do injury to the Philippine Islands and to our trade with these islands, is a wholly untenable and unsound argument.

Our trade with the Philippines is an established and developed trade carried largely, if not almost entirely, in American bottoms. Shipping services in which the Government itself is interested are dependent upon that trade. It is a fairly flourishing trade now in spite of hard times. It is said that 28 percent of all cargoes that come into the Columbia River ports consist of copra. If, as I believe, the imposition of this tax will destroy or greatly reduce that business, not only will the shipping services suffer, not only will the crushers of copra and the producers of oil in this country suffer, but every one else connected directly or indirectly with that trade is going to suffer from the loss that inevitably will result from this tax.

I am told that one crushing concern in California pays to the Southern Pacific Railroad in freight each year something like $1,000,000. This important Philippine trade is beneficial alike to shipping companies and to railroads and to American crushers and to all others interested, is in jeopardy under this amendment, because this importation will largely cease, and just as sure as anything in the world other fats will be substituted in substantial amounts for the fats taxed by this amendment.

We ought to bear in mind when we cast our votes that we are visiting this injury not only upon the Filipinos, but also upon very many Americans. If it is true that this tax will raise the price level of these oils and fats in the American domestic market then it is also true the American consumer is going to pay the tax. The assumption has been made at times during the debate that the Filipino producer is the loser, and that there is some relationship between the Philippine Government and the Philippine producer that might justify paying the proceeds of this tax to the Philippine government. The Philippine producer is a loser, but the American consumer will pay the tax and the money that is wrung from him to the extent of possibly twenty or thirty million dollars per year will be turned over to a government which has not earned it, and which has not done anything to justify the receipt by that government of this great sum of money.

The Filipino producers no doubt will be injured, just as the shippers and all others will be injured. The American people will pay the bill; and all for what?

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. STEIWER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I should be interested to find out where the Senator gets his estimate that there will be forty or fifty million dollars, or any other sum, turned over to the Filipino government.

This tax is intended on its face to be a prohibitive tax. It is not intended to raise revenue. It is not included in this bill for the purpose of raising revenue. It is for the purpose of establishing an embargo; and, as the testimony before the Finance Committee showed, as a result of the imposition of this tax, outside of a very small amount of coconut oil which is necessary to be imported into the United States, despite any tax, for the manufacture of lauric acid, I do not think there will be any coconut oil at all coming into the United States.

Mr. STEIWER. I shall answer the Senator's question in just a few brief sentences, because I desire to conclude; and except for courtesy which I owe to the able Senator from Missouri, I should not answer it at all.

I realize there are two schools of thought on this subject. I know that among some of the chemists of the country and among those who are supposed to be experts upon this subject there is, and has been for a very long time, a question of the extent to which these oils are interchangeable. If the various oils—the fish oils, the marine-animal oils, the animal fats, and these vegetable oils—are largely interchangeable in industrial uses, then, of course, the Senator would be correct; and when we put the 3-cent tax upon coconut oil, some other oil would be used in its place. If, as contended by the other school of thought, the oils are only slightly interchangeable, then, of course, the Senator's suggestion would not be correct.

I do not want to be drawn too deeply into that subject at this time, because I desire to conclude; but I have been told that the Treasury Department has estimated a tax of something like $22,000,000 under the amendment as reported by the Senate Finance Committee.

I do not know what the assumptions are upon which that estimate is predicated; but certainly the Treasury Department must have assumed, from information before it, that a very considerable quantity of this taxed material actually would be used in American industrial production.

Now, Mr. President, I desire to ask just one question in conclusion. I ask what is the justification for voting this tax upon the American people?

It has been said here, over and over again, that this is a question of great complexity; and with that statement I agree. It is admitted that it presents difficulties, and with that I agree. For what purpose are we to encounter all these difficulties, to submit ourselves to all the hazards that admittedly are involved in this kind of legislation?

It is claimed that the tax will benefit the great dairy and livestock interests in America. If I were convinced that it would benefit these interests to the substantial extent which the proponents of this measure assume, I believe, I should vote for the amendment, regardless of the evil that it will bring to all others concerned; but what proof have we that there will be any substantial benefit to these great industries?

We know that there is a great lobby here that says so. We know who these gentlemen are. They are lobbyists well known at the National Capital, some of whom have been representing the dairy and livestock associations for a long time. Some of them have been representing the so-called "rendering industry" for a long time. Some represent both. I do not criticize their support of this amendment, nor do I admit their judgment to be infallible. We know that these gentlemen assert that this proposed tax will be very beneficial; but it is obvious that if this amendment permits the importation, in substantial quantities, of foreign tallow under a tariff duty of one-half of 1 cent per pound, if this amendment greatly increases the production of garbage grease by local rendering plants, the garbage and scrap renderers, if it brings to any substantial degree the fulfillment of any one of these propositions, American agriculture cannot enjoy any substantial benefit from the tax. On the contrary, agriculture will help pay the tax. All our citizens will help pay for the higher-priced industrial products which this tax will bring about; and not only that, but American agriculture is going to lose a market which it presently enjoys. I refer to the Philippine market now largely ours. Our exports to these islands in 1932 amounted to approximately $45,000,000. The peak in 1929 was over $85,000,000.

We know something of the detailed items which make up these totals. I shall not go over them now. We know that the Philippine trade has been and is a valuable trade. I do want to call attention to one fact in this connection, and that is that in dairy products alone we have been enjoying a Filipino trade which in some years has exceeded $3,000,000. This tax will take away from the Filipinos their buying power. It will destroy their business and their relationship with us. We will lose the island people as substantial customers for our products. We will take from the dairy industry itself one of its markets for dairy products. We sell to the Filipinos every year something like three or four million dollars of wheat and wheat products. We sell to them very substantial amounts of cotton and cotton products. This tax will take those markets from our farmers by depriving the Filipinos of the power with which to buy.

It seems to me that in so dubious an experiment, where there is so little certainty as to the good which may result, where there is a certain knowledge that the American consumer will pay the bill, yet where we know that the tax will injure all the western and many other railroads and all the shipping companies serving the Orient, where we know that we will injure or destroy our crushing industry, that we will raise the price to the American consumer, that we will lose important markets for the sale of American farm products and will at the same time violate our solemn obligation to the Philippine Islands and to the people of those islands, we ought to pause and take heed.

Others may vote for this amendment if they wish. For my part, I would rather subject myself to uninformed criticism for apparently standing in the road of relief for American agriculture and cast my vote in a way which I believe I can defend in the days and years to come.

If I could have my way I would strike this taxing provision from the bill, and then by an orderly and appropriate procedure I would endeavor to provide a well-considered and comprehensive tax which would cover all oils and fats competitive with the products of American farmers, and I would give due heed to our moral obligation to the Philippine Islands. Firm adherence to a program of this kind would result in definite benefits to the agricultural groups who are hard hit by the depression, and these benefits would be unmixed with evil. The enactment of the pending amendment will not discharge our obligation to the dairymen and stock raisers of America. That obligation will not be discharged until there is evolved a proposal which will be effective and sound and which above everything else will be just to all.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, in my opinion the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] has made a very significant speech. Unless I miss my guess the criticism Senators received for voting to pass the veterans' legislation over the veto of the President will be nothing compared to the criticism that will follow our act of today. We are sure to hear from it when the housewives of America, not alone in the city homes but in the farm homes, come to find the price of soap practically doubled, as it will be when this bill goes into effect.

I appreciate the fine scorn with which the Senator from Oregon refers to the spirit of the Senate which voted to free the Filipinos and, having done that, proceeds to stab them through the heart by the enactment of this bill. I congratulate the Senator from Oregon upon having spoken as he has.

I had intended to offer an amendment to exempt from the operation of the tax the fats which are brought in for the purpose of making inedible products. It is useless to do that, however, because the reception given the substitute of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] indicates to me that there are not enough votes here to make it worth while to make the effort. I desire, however, to call attention to the fact that it is not alone the use of coconut oil that will bring us under criticism. The palm oil and whale oil and fish oils, which are used with the rosins from the Southern States, will be taxed likewise, and so increase the price of all soaps. By reason of the tax it will be impossible for the American product to compete with foreign soaps.

If we had a tariff upon soaps sufficient to exclude the foreign product, American manufacturers might perhaps consider this tax with some degree of complacency. But I assure Senators that as a result of what we are proposing to do if we shall vote this 3-cent tax on foreign oils, we shall promote unemployment and practically double the price of soap used in every city home and every farmhouse and every hospital and every other place where cleanliness abounds.

I simply wanted to say this much in order that I might be on record regarding my attitude toward this matter. I desire, also, to make clear to my friends in the various industries involved that I feel it is utterly useless to make any further effort. I shall content myself with a vote against this amendment to the tax bill and let it go at that; but I know the housewives of America will voice their protest when they know what burdens have been put upon them by the passage of this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the committee, as amended. On that question the yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

So the committee amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I move that section 602 be stricken from the bill. I make the motion in spite of the fact that the vote on the last amendment discloses the hopeless nature of this proposal. I make the motion because, to my mind, the inclusion in a so-called "revenue bill" of provisions which are not intended to raise revenue, but contemplate an embargo, is a most dishonest and most vicious system of legislating.

In the revenue bill of 1932, by a coalition between various interests represented on this floor, a system of excise taxes amounting to embargoes was included. That action on the part of the United States Senate, finally enacted into law, outraged the people of this Nation from one coast to the other, and contributed in very large measure to the victory which the Democratic Party won in the election of 1932.

The provision embodied in this section as amended is not a revenue provision at all. It is a tariff, very thinly disguised, and a prohibitive tariff at that.

I do not feel that there is any justification whatever for this proposition. If it is necessary and desirable to establish a compensatory duty on account of the processing taxes imposed in the Agricultural Adjustment Act, the proposal ought to be brought in on its merits as an amendment to that act, instead of being inserted surreptitiously in a bill ostensibly for the purpose of raising revenue.

I therefore make the motion to strike out the section, and on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri wishes to strike out all of this section on the ground that it is a pretext for levying a tax, not for revenue, but for protection purposes.

I am surprised at the Senator from Missouri. At the last session of the Congress, as Senators will remember, the Senator from Missouri had a bill here on the floor of the Senate which would have required, by law, that in all gasoline there must be used a certain percentage of alcohol in order to help the corn raisers of Missouri and of Iowa to get more for the alcohol which was made out of their corn.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator will recall that I did not attempt to attach that proposition to a revenue bill. In introducing the bill, which I did by request, I made no pretense whatever that I was undertaking to raise revenue. It was an entirely different use of the taxing power. If the Senator from Texas will bring this proposition forward on its merits, it might be considered differently.

Mr. CONNALLY. I stated yesterday to the Senator from Idaho that when a Senator says, "This is a fine proposition, but bring it up in some other way", I know he is not for it.

The Senator from Missouri admits that last year he was willing to use the taxing power of the Government to force people to use alcohol in their gasoline instead of in their stomachs in order to help the farmers in Missouri who raise corn. He says it was not on a general revenue bill. What difference does it make whether it is on a general revenue bill or on a special revenue bill? So long as we tax an individual what difference does it make whether we get the money out of his right pocket or out of his left pocket?

The Senator from Missouri is perfectly willing to tax the liver and lights out of the rest of the people in order to help the corn growers in Missouri to sell their corn in a liquid form rather than in a solid form, but he is opposed to using the taxing power to help every farmer and every cattleman and every hog raiser and every cotton producer and everybody else who produces fats and oils anywhere in the United States.

He is in favor of using the taxing power to tax one American citizen out of his boots in order to help another one, but he is not in favor of using the taxing power to help the American farmer as against the little brown fellow of the Philippines. I am surprised that the Senator from Missouri should raise that kind of a question here now.

Mr. President, I offered this proposal in the committee. After exhaustive hearings, and testimony from experts and interested parties, the Committee on Finance adopted the amendment as a committee amendment. We have had thorough debate, we have had several votes, and why should we now, after spending all this time, consume any more time on a motion to strike out?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I regret to take even a moment of the Senate's time when time is precious, but some attention must be paid to the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], and I feel disposed to pay some attention, respectfully, of course, to the language he employed.

The Senator, with his scholarship, in a few sentences inveighed against the tax bill passed in 1932 because, forsooth, that tax bill had carried some items of taxes or tariff respecting certain articles imported into the United States.

I regard the Senator from Missouri as one of the ablest exponents of the low-tariff system we have in the Senate. I shall say for him he has tried to be consistent, but even if he were guilty of the apparent inconsistency adverted to by the learned Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], that would not condemn him in my judgment, and he would be secure from my prejudice, because when I took the oath of office I took it without reservation, but there was a pledge to myself that I would never, as a Senator, try to be consistent. The man who tries to be consistent simply says "I decline to be wiser today than I was yesterday."

So, Mr. President, I defend the tax or Tariff Act of 1932. That act laid a tax or tariff upon oils, copper, coal, and lumber imported. I voted for those items and I have searched my heart since then and find no regret for the vote I then cast.

It ought always to be the duty of an American Congress to try to promote the American market. There is no escape from the irresistible logic of the statement that the American is entitled to his own home market.

I am not so much concerned about foreign countries, romantic as their history is, as I am about America; and I rise now to serve notice, respectfully, of course, on the able Senator from Missouri that I have proposed a tax—a tariff, if you prefer—of 10 cents a pound upon all copper imported into the United States.

Mr. President, there are some Democrats, able men, before whom Columbia would be proud to lay her shining hair, who are high-tariff men, but some of them rather conceal the fact that they are for high tariffs. I make no concealment of my position—no concealment whatever.

Daniel Webster went to the Congress of the United States from New Hampshire as a free trader, but that imperial intellect, yielding to the irresistible forces of logic, preparedness, national destiny, and national advancement, changed from a free trader into a great champion of protection.

Mr. President, I do not deny that when I came to Congress many years ago I had studied theories and I believed in the theory of low tariffs, and my theories were so fine-spun and so brittle that I could liken them to porcelain or glass. With an agility and a nonchalance at that time that I now even in myself admire I hurled my theories, my bric-a-brac, my porcelain, my glass, against the concrete wall of fact here for 10 years, and my porcelain was always shattered. It was not the wall that was shattered.

It is not theory that guides and controls the destinies of men. It is fact that controls.

So, Mr. President, this is, it must be, it should be a high-tariff country. You will not survive with your low tariffs. You will not survive with your free trade. You will not elevate, protect, defend, or strengthen the American working man by a system of low tariffs.

Arizona produced during the World War one third of all the copper used by the Allies. Arizona produced one sixth of the copper of the world, and around her copper mines and copper camps a civilization, comparable to that of any other city or town in America in culture, in patriotism, and refinement, was built. The same thing is true of the other copper-producing States. But, forsooth, when the enormously rich deposits of copper were exposed in Africa and in South America, where labor receives 40 cents a day and works 12 hours daily, the copper-mining industry of the United States not merely fell into obsolescence and disrepair but it was almost exterminated.

If the Senator from Missouri will assist me in securing the passage of the amendment which proposes a tariff of 10 cents per pound on copper imported into the United States, I give him guaranties that Arizona will never ask a dollar from the C.C.C., the C.W.A., the E.R.A., or any other governmental relief agency, because such tariff would at once put to work 30,000 working men in the mines and smelters of Arizona; such tariff would at once cause the smoke to pour forth from the smelter stacks now so pathetically empty; it would at once cause the thud of the drill to be heard in the shafts, drifts, and stopes in the mines that are now dark.

I cannot speak now as to what revenue the tariff on oil brought into the Treasury; but I am able to say that under adverse conditions the copper tariff in about 18 months has brought into the Treasury of the United States $712,022. So if the tariff should be increased on copper, not only would it set to work the workmen of Arizona, but it would in large measure restore Nevada, it would restore Montana, it would, Mr. President, aid northern Michigan and some counties in Tennessee. It would at once set to work, with hope and with heart, and with industry and with smiling optimism many workmen in Idaho, Colorado, Utah, and New Mexico.

Senators may talk their fine-spun theories, but when I point them to a system which sets men to work at good wages, no shafts of ridicule pierce such system.

The able Senator from Missouri doubtless will say, because the Senator from Missouri has not only won laurels in the fields of statesmanship, but he has already won and will continue to win greater laurels in biographical literature, that the great Democratic statesmen of our early days were free traders. I read with pride, not only because he was a fellow Senator but because of my admiration for accurate writers of history, the Senator's life of John Quincy Adams. I do not perceive why he chose John Quincy Adams; I should have thought he would have chosen some free trader, but doubtless this able historian will attempt in the future to tell us that Thomas Jefferson was a free trader, or that Thomas Jefferson was at least a low-tariff man.

Mr. President, I have 16 letters or copies of letters written by Thomas Jefferson pointing out that if the United States hoped to grow, expand, and become strong and efficient in governmental affairs and a power for good in the world she must protect herself by a proper tariff—letters written by Thomas Jefferson, the saint and sage of the Democratic Party.

And Andrew Jackson—what message comes to us from the Hermitage, from the grand old warrior who announced that we ought to have a protective tariff in order to stimulate and build up the industries in America that were necessary in times of war? By the way, Andrew Jackson was not nominated or even proposed for President by Tennessee. It was the high protective tariff State of Pennsylvania that championed the cause of Andrew Jackson; it was the State which from the writing of the Federal Constitution down to this day has stood for protection. Thomas Fitzsimmons, in the Constitutional Convention in 1787, announced the protective-tariff system from Pennsylvania.

It was James Madison, of Virginia, 8 years as Secretary of State and 8 years as President, who guided through the House of Representatives of the United States in 1789 the first tariff bill. It was that superb intellect—and Virginia has contributed a legion of them; they are here today in the persons of her Senators, although they may not agree with Madison on that point—it was James Madison who in his own hand wrote the preamble of the first tariff bill, which preamble stated:

> In order to protect the industries of the United States and raise revenue.

That preamble was written by the hand of James Madison, from whose hand and brain many great State papers have come.

When Pennsylvania, the high-tariff State, launched Andrew Jackson as a candidate for the Presidency, Martin Van Buren and Aaron Burr—Burr then had fallen into disrepute and was at that time a ruined man—championed his candidacy. I shall not consume the valuable time of the Senate to relate how much injustice has been done Aaron Burr more than to say that he saw in Jackson, as did Van Buren, possibilities of Democratic success. They championed Jackson, whereupon Mr. Ritchie, one of the most—if not the most—distinguished editor in the Democratic Party at that time, wrote to General Jackson and said:

> We have noted that you are advanced as a candidate for the Presidency—

That was in Jackson's first race—> and we desire in frankness to know if you are going to support the high-tariff system—

Now I use Mr. Ritchie's words—> and if you are going to support a high-tariff system, the support of Virginia will be relaxed.

Jackson, in a letter that I once could quote by heart—I shall only give it a passing reference—went on to point out to Mr. Ritchie that our workmen without a protective tariff could not compete with the workmen of foreign countries; that our industries could not succeed without a protective tariff; and Andrew Jackson, just as he never did, on that occasion did not retreat. Under the arrows of the enemy in the Creek and Seminole war Jackson would not retreat. When he faced the cold pistol barrel of his fellow duelist, Charles Dickinson, he allowed Dickinson the first shot, and then he fired; Jackson did not retreat. Under the guns on the plains of Chalmette, Jackson did not retreat; and under the political guns which cause many worthy men to retreat who do not even on the field of battle retreat, under the political guns Jackson declined to retreat, stood for a protective tariff, and served 8 years as President of the United States.

I respectfully say to my friend the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], one of the statesmen of the Senate, who, with his superb intellect, adorns this Chamber, that, while I did not agree with him the other day in his speech in support of the Presidential veto, mine eyes, mine eyes have long been dry but tears almost came to them under the majestic spell of his eloquence pleading for what he believed to be right. Although I did not agree with him then, I say to him that I am right on this question, and he is not following the true doctrine of democracy when he advocates low tariffs and free trade. The low-tariff or free-trade doctrine is one that has been engrafted upon the Democratic Party by men who sit in academic chairs and do not have to meet pay rolls.

So I serve notice in advance that the keen thrust, the almost sarcastic suggestion of the able Senator from Missouri that some disreputable thing was done in 1932, when we levied a tariff in a tax bill, falls harmless against the armor of historical truth and the logical position which we Democrats who are in favor of a tariff occupy on this occasion.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. ASHURST. I will yield for a moment only.

Mr. LONG. Just for a question.

Mr. ASHURST. I will yield for a question.

Mr. LONG. The Senator is not trying to convert the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] on the tariff question, is he?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I believe that even the Senator from Missouri may be converted. I refuse to believe that he, with his brilliant intellect, well trained in college——

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I will yield in just a moment—trained in war, a superb lawyer under the tutelage of his distinguished father, whose memory we revere—I refuse to believe that such a Senator will not yield to logic and to common sense.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK. I thank the Senator very much, indeed, for his very kind compliment. I should like to say to the Senator, however, that when he offers his amendment providing for a tax of 10 cents on copper the Senate will have an opportunity to decide definitely between two theories, because I intend to offer as a substitute for that suggestion a proposal to repeal all the excise taxes contained in the Revenue Act of 1932.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator's statement is commendable, at least from the viewpoint of frankness, because he attempted to do that, so I am advised, in the committee; but, of course, when he shall make his motion to strike out these excise taxes I will then insist that the motion shall not prevail. Why, forsooth, when copper brings $750,000 in revenue to the Treasury, should that revenue be refused, sir?

Mr. CLARK. What does that tax cost the American people?

Mr. ASHURST. What does it cost the American people?

Mr. CLARK. That is the fairest test of a tax; not the amount that it brings into the Treasury but the amount of revenue it brings into the Treasury in comparison to the amount in which the American people are mulcted.

Mr. ASHURST. What does it cost the American people? Mr. President, I decline further to cavil with one who asks what will justice cost. "Oh, it is too expensive to have justice; let us have more injustice." I do not care to prolong a controversy with a man who is going to refuse justice to an American industry because it costs money.

Mr. President, some years ago in one of the thriving cities of Arizona—I shall not mention its name as I do not wish to expose some of my friends to what would be good-natured raillery because of the position in which they were placed; so I will simply say it is a town well known for its hospitality, well known for its Americanism, well known from the fact that it has poured forth the red metal, copper, into the veins and channels of trade for 50 years; with the knowledge that this town produced vast quantities of red metal, copper, it was thought to be wise, inasmuch as many of the great cathedrals and other monumental buildings in Europe had been roofed with copper for more than 500 years, and that copper was durable, its ductility great, its tensile strength of a high degree, to roof a new schoolhouse in that town with copper. So, with enthusiasm, the trustees of the school district announced in proposals for bids that copper must be used for the roof of the building. Very good. They received the acclaim of their fellow townsmen, who said, "Now, Arizona and America are coming into their own; we are going to roof some of our buildings with copper." However, they overlooked to say "copper mined and processed in the United States"; so the contractor sent to a foreign country, and, at an exceedingly low cost, brought in great sheets of copper and roofed the building in a copper town in the Southwest with copper brought from a foreign country.

That was a refinement of irony; and the Senate will see now why I did not mention the name of the town and did not mention the names of the men who at that time happened to be on the school board.

I ask unanimous consent to include in the RECORD a table which I have from the Treasury Department, being figures showing the importations of copper and the amount of duty collected thereon since the last revenue act was passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and permission is granted.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I should like to ask the Senator a question. During my service here it is my recollection that I have seen a statement in print that copper ingots have been laid down in New York at 6 cents a pound. I wonder if the Senator knows whether there is any truth in that statement?

Mr. ASHURST. I know of some copper laid down in some ports—I shall not say New York, but laid down in some of the Atlantic ports, and, indeed, at some of the Pacific ports—for a little less than 6 cents a pound, and some at 6 cents a pound. I will ask the Senator from Nevada if I am not correct as to that?

Mr. McCARRAN. The Senator is correct.

Mr. ASHURST. So, it will be perceived that it is only by a remote excursion into the realms of imagination that anyone can be led to believe tht we can mine and produce copper, pay our workmen good wages so that they may live as we claim we want our workmen to live, as dignified American citizens, and compete with Africa and South America, where, I repeat, many of the mines are richer than ours and the workmen wear only what a Senator during the debate a while ago referred to as that well-known article of habiliment, the breechclout, and labors 12 hours a day, and, as a magnate said, "They do not organize; do not bother us with organization." It is not possible for America to compete unless and until we have a proper tariff on copper or an embargo—and I do not hesitate at all to use the word "embargo" if we cannot make adequate provision by a tariff. Unless we shall have one of these, the entire copper-producing business and the copper-smelting industry in the United States will be gone.

Mr. President, may I say that he would be inhuman who wished another war and he would be a fool—I will withdraw the word "fool" and say he would be an unpretending simpleton—who did not see in certain quarters of this earth manifestations working, interchanges and exchanges, sinuous methods, devices being employed that may lead us on ultimately into some trouble; I hesitate to say would lead us into war. I abhor the words so much that it is with difficulty I approach the subject, but should we, most unhappily, be drawn into any conflict, I do not want the United States to be found in the position, if such unfortunate eventuality should occur, as we were in during the World War. When the World War broke out we did not have supplies of manganese at all comparable with our needs, whereupon it was necessary to import manganese, because next to copper manganese is the most essential of all the war minerals.

It will be remembered by Senators that when the steamship Cyclops was lost she went down, and the loss of the Cyclops will be remembered with grief by Senators, because a nephew of one of our Senators was on board. All aboard were lost. She is now at the Port of Missing Men. No one knows what became of her. Not a spar, not a rope, not a board, not a piece of evidence survives today to tell us what happened to the Cyclops. She was laden with manganese, trying to reach an American port from Brazil in order that our factories might make weapons, munitions of war, to help win the World War in which we were engaged. In other words, we had to depend upon foreign countries for our supplies of manganese.

I do not intend to have it said when I retire from public service, "There goes a man who served in the Senate a long time, but he never had the vision to see to it that we of the United States ought to be producing all we need and require, that America should produce her own manganese and her own copper; but supinely he sat and permitted free trade and low tariff theorists to allow the importation of copper and manganese into the United States from foreign countries." Whatever may be my political fate, it shall not be charged that I sat here supinely and did not protest against this doctrine of free trade.

Mr. President, let me say a personal word. I am not going to retire from the Senate unless my constituents retire me. From the gathering of my friends it would seem that in my State they believe they can retire me. Indeed, they have paid me the compliment in my State of bringing out five very excellent and able gentlemen against me. I not only have one opponent to defeat, but I have five worthy gentlemen to defeat. Scrubs never run against me. Always high-grade, excellent men run against me. Indeed, one of my most formidable opponents, a sound lawyer, a brilliant orator, well known by 25 or 30 Senators here, is named Barnum, and whatever advertising he may obtain out of my reference to him he is welcome to, because if he or any other of my present opponents be chosen I do not think the Senate or the country will suffer by my displacement or by his election; but, "believe you me", as I heard on the campus at Harvard, they will not displace me without some effort on their part! [Laughter.]

My own displacement might amount to but very little. Possibly there may be half a dozen men here—I shall not name them—whom we would miss upon their retirement, but if I or most of us were to retire we would leave about the same impression that we would if we put our finger in a basin of water and withdrew the finger. [Laughter.]

I say again, in all seriousness, that I have no apologies to make, here or elsewhere, for my advocacy of a protective tariff. I chose this tariff course for myself more than 14 years ago, and I have adhered to it. Whenever I meet my good friend, the present able and cultured Secretary of State—I am sure he has an affection for me and I know I have an affection for him—I suspect that he knows if I secure opportunity I shall try to induce him to come over to my idea of a protective tariff and thus make America strong and efficient.

I thank the Senate for its attention.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] a question with reference to his amendment. I quite agree with the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] that it would probably be impossible in this bill to distinguish in taxation between the oil that ultimately goes into edible products and the oil which goes into other commercial products, such as sprays and the like. The vote clearly indicates that the Senate probably would not make such a distinction, and it would be impossible to make the distinction in taxes.

I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri if his amendment proposes to strike out the entire section or merely that part of it added by the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]?

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, my motion is to strike out the entire section. It would not be in order to move to strike out the language inserted by the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska except by way of a motion to reconsider.

Mr. BONE. That was my impression.

Mr. CLARK. My motion is a fundamental motion designed to strike out the section so far as it imposes a processing tax on the various oils.

Mr. BONE. May I continue this question for an instant? The Senator refers to the section, but the section is found on pages 214, 215, 216, and a part of 217. I wondered if it is the purpose of the Senator to strike out the entire section?

Mr. CLARK. Yes. The whole section has to do with imposing a processing tax on various kinds of oil.

Mr. BONE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I do not desire, in the consideration of a revenue bill, to enter into any debate with my very able and distinguished friend the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] on historical background and theories or to go into detail at this stage of the debate on a revenue bill as to the position in the past of the great historical figures of the Democratic Party. I may say that several times before I have heard the Senator from Arizona make this same speech as to the position of Jefferson, Jackson, and Madison, and it has long been my intention at the proper time and when the proper subject was before the Senate to discuss in some detail with the Senator from Arizona the historical background of the tariff and the position of those eminent leaders of the Democracy. I prefer, however, not to do that until after the reelection of the Senator, which we all hope for and expect despite his obvious blind spot on the tariff.

I desire only to say, so far as the tariff is concerned, that the results of the high protective tariff system or the prohibitive tariff system as it is now, is, and has been for the last few years may be summed up in one sentence:

Twelve million Americans out of employment, 4,000,000 Americans on the dole, banks closed on every hand, industry prostrate, agriculture beggared, and the United States in the midst of the greatest depression the Nation has ever seen.

The subject of the tariff has nothing to do with my motion to strike out, except that I return to my original proposition that it is a vicious and dishonest legislative system, under the guise of a processing tax, to undertake to impose an embargo. It is perfectly obvious that the only purpose in this provision was not to raise revenue, not to produce revenue in any degree whatever, but to create a prohibitive tax amounting to an embargo. If there ever had been any question as an original proposition with reference to the intention of Congress not to consider this as a revenue-producing measure, it was effectually settled by the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] this morning. That amendment would turn back to someone else all the money, if any is raised.

Coming back to the subject of copper, the fact of the matter is that the copper industry is suffering in this country because the copper interests proceeded to "jack up" the price of copper so high to the consumers of the world that they made it worth while for certain foreign nations to buy American machinery and develop their own copper deposits. It has affected the copper market in that way.

The same thing is true in every other case in which prohibitive taxes have been imposed, and the producer or the monopolist in this country has been the supposed beneficiary of a prohibitive tariff tax. It has resulted in the long run in penury to the industry and unemployment to the laborer.

Mr. President, mention was made by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] of the fact that in the last session of Congress I, in conjunction with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON], introduced a bill providing for the imposition of a tax on gasoline which was not mixed with a certain mixture of alcohol. I introduced that bill at the request of the present Administrator of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration. I stated frankly to the Committee on Finance, to which the bill was referred, that I was by no means convinced of the merit of the measure, that I had introduced it by request, and, instead of pressing it before the committee, I requested that a subcommittee be appointed to investigate the matter and consider it.

A subcommittee was appointed, of which I was named chairman, and of which the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] were members, representing two oil-producing States. During the fall it was my intention to call a meeting of the subcommittee for hearings before the meeting of Congress for the purpose of studying the merits of the measure, but owing to the fact that the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] was engaged in investigations in Louisiana, and that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] was detained in the hearings before the Banking and Currency Committee, no meetings of the subcommittee were called before the meeting of Congress. I did not desire to hold the hearings in the absence of the Senators from the oil States. Since that time nearly constant meetings of the full committee have prevented the holding of hearings by the subcommittee.

Whatever may be the fact about that, however, if I were in real good faith fully convinced of the merits of that proposal, and were its active sponsor, I may say to the Senator from Texas that I should never be willing to do what he is doing in this case—bringing in a proposition not really designed to raise revenue, and undertaking to ride it through the Congress of the United States upon the coat-tails of a revenue-producing measure.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will my friend yield to me for a question?

Mr. CLARK. I yield the floor.

Mr. LONG. I intended to ask a question.

I just wish to say that if we do not take steps to protect the cotton industry, whether we call it by embargo or by revenue bill, or by tariff, it is a question of time as to how long we shall have a domestic cotton business.

If we do not protect the lumber business, it is a question as to how long we shall have a lumber business.

If we do not protect the copper business, we know that we shall have no copper business.

If we do not protect the farming industry, we are going to put the farmer in a worse fix than he is in now.

The leadership of the tariff fight in the future will be on this side of the Chamber.

There is not any question, Mr. President, but that the South and the Middle West have begun to find out that they must have tariffs.

For a number of years the only southerners who dared to open their mouths in favor of a tariff bill were the men who came from my State; but today it has become so patent that a man must be blind who does not realize that the part of the country ordinarily controlled by the Democracy will have to insist on a tariff if we are to have any domestic enterprise, particularly of farming, in the future.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, what is the use of having them all on this side of the Chamber? Why do not all of us go on the other side of the Chamber? [Laughter.]

Mr. LONG. Because, if I may say so to my friend from Virginia, we are tired of the Republicans being the only people to champion the tariff doctrine of Jefferson and Jackson. We propose to do some of it ourselves. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, there are two or three slight amendments to this section which I should like to have agreed to before the question is put on the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] to strike out the section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 214, line 20, before the word "place", it is proposed to insert the word "principal", so as to read:

(b) Each processor required to pay the tax imposed by this section shall make monthly returns under oath in duplicate and pay the tax to the collector of internal revenue for the district in which is located his principal place of business, or if he has no principal place of business in the United States, then to the collector of internal revenue at Baltimore, Md. Such returns shall contain such information and be made at such times and in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may by regulations prescribe. The tax shall, without assessment by the Commissioner or notice from the collector, be due and payable to the collector at the time so fixed for filing the return. If the tax is not paid when due, there shall be added as part of the tax interest at the rate of 1 percent per month from the time the tax became due until paid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 215, line 10, after the word "division", it is proposed to strike out "thereof" and insert "thereof", so as to read:

(c) Subject to such rules and regulations as the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may prescribe, any person who has sold to a State, or political subdivision thereof, for use in the exercise of an essential governmental function any article containing any such oil, combination, or mixture, upon the processing of which a tax has been paid under this section shall be entitled to a credit or refund of the tax paid with respect to the quantity of such oil, combination, or mixture contained in such article.

The amendment was agreed to.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 216, line 13, before the word "the", it is proposed to strike out "the amount to be paid thereunder of the whole of such tax, then (unless the contract expressly prohibits such addition)", so as to read:

(e) If (1) any person has, prior to January 26, 1934, made a bona fide contract for the sale on or after the effective date of this section of any article wholly or in chief value of an article with respect to which a tax is imposed by this section or of any article with respect to which a tax is imposed by this subsection, and if (2) such contract does not permit the addition to the amount to be paid thereunder of the whole of such tax, then (unless the contract expressly prohibits such addition) the vendee shall pay so much of the tax as is not permitted to be added to the contract price. Taxes payable by the vendee shall be paid to the vendor at the time the sale is consummated and shall be returned and paid to the United States by the vendor in the same manner as other taxes under this section. In case of failure or refusal by the vendee to pay such taxes to the vendor, the vendor shall report the facts to the Commissioner, who shall cause collection of such taxes to be made from the vendee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I should like to have the opinion of the Chairman of the Finance Committee on the pending motion.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator from Massachusetts that I expect to vote for the pending motion, but I know that I shall be in the hopeless minority, and I think the Senator from Missouri realizes it.

Mr. WALSH. In other words, the chairman of the committee thinks the situation is such, in view of the amendments adopted, that the best way out of our difficulties is to strike out the entire section?

Mr. HARRISON. As the Senator recalls, in the committee I voted against the proposal because it made no exemption of coconut oil from the Philippines.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I regret very much that the chairman of the committee does not recognize the wish of the Senate any more than he does that of the Finance Committee, because we have demonstrated, both in the committee and on this floor, that we want this tax.

I desire to make a brief statement.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] is asking that the entire section relating to all of the taxes imposed upon all of the oils, with the exceptions, exemptions, modifications, or whatnot, contained in the section be stricken from the bill. If that motion should prevail we will go to conference with the House on a flat definite tax of 5 cents a pound on the products of the Philippine Islands alone.

As this provision now stands, we have imposed a much more reasonable tax upon all foreign oils. If we strike it out, we will go into conference with the record today made in the Senate, with the House conferees insisting upon a flat tax of 5 cents a pound on the Philippine products alone.

The section ought not to be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CUTTING (when his name was called). I have a pair for the day with the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. FESS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], who is detained from the Senate, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WALCOTT (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO]. He is not present. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I refrain from voting. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WHITE (after having voted in the negative). I understand that I have a general pair with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. AUSTIN (after having voted in the negative). Since voting I have been informed that I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK]. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I desire to announce that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] is necessarily detained on official business. If present, he would vote "yea."

I also desire to announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are necessarily detained on important business of the Senate.

I also wish to announce that the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] is detained in one of the Government departments. If present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. HEBERT. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING];

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE]; and

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS].

I am not advised how any of these Senators would vote on this question.

Mr. WHITE. My colleague the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] is necessarily absent.

The result was announced—yeas 7, nays 64, as follows:

REGULATION OF FISHERIES OF ALASKA

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3022) to amend sections 3 and 4 of an act of Congress entitled "An act for the protection and regulation of the fisheries of Alaska", approved June 26, 1906, as amended by act of Congress approved June 6, 1924, and for other purposes, which were, on page 3, line 11, after "or", to insert "any", and to amend the title so as to read: "An act to amend sections 3 and 4 of an act of Congress entitled 'An act for the protection and regulation of the fisheries of Alaska', approved June 26, 1906, as amended by the act of Congress approved June 6, 1924, and for other purposes."

Mr. STEPHENS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 7835) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, yesterday when the Senate voted on the amendment I had proposed to add 10 percent to the income taxes for the calendar year 1934, I changed my vote from "yea" to "nay" so that I might enter a motion to reconsider. I think we would expedite matters if we could get unanimous consent to reconsider the vote and then take a vote straight on the amendment. I, therefore, ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the amendment was rejected be reconsidered, and then that we take a vote on the question itself.

Mr. BARKLEY. Without further debate?

Mr. COUZENS. No; I would not prevent debate, but I think we might have unanimous consent to reconsider the vote, and then we would not have to take a vote on that question.
